McKEON v. SAMBRANO et al. (L. A. 9297.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1927.)

- 1. Appeal and error ☞798—Evidence held not to establish that affidavit of mailing notice of motion to dismiss appeal was false (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1012, 1013).

Evidence held not to establish that affidavit of mailing notice of motion to dismiss appeal was false and fraudulent, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1012, 1013, providing that service is complete at time of deposit in the mail.

- 2. Appeal and error ☞640—Appeal under alternative method may not be dismissed, where transcript contains judgment roll.

Where transcript contained judgment roll, appeal from judgment, taken under alternative method, may not be dismissed on ground that reporter's transcript is incomplete.

- 3. Appeal and error ☞1125—Ordinarily, Supreme Court will deny motion for affirmance of judgment appealed from.

Ordinarily, Supreme Court will deny motion for affirmance of judgment appealed from, since consideration of such a motion necessarily involves examination of record and briefs as to merits of appeal, resulting in advancement of hearing over other appeals preceding it on calendar.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by D. McKeon against E. Sambrano, John Lapique, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant last named appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal and to affirm judgment, and on motion to recall remittitur theretofore issued on dismissal of four appeals from orders after judgment. Motion to recall remittitur and to dismiss appeal denied, and motion to affirm judgment granted.

John Lapique, of Los Angeles, in pro per.
Guss Hagenstein, of Fullerton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Three motions are presented herein for determination. The respondent has made a motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment and a motion to affirm said judgment. The appellant, while opposing these motions, presents on his own behalf a motion to recall the remittitur heretofore issued by the clerk of this court upon the dismissal of four appeals from orders after judgment.

A summary statement of a few pertinent facts will be conducive to a proper understanding of the questions of law presented by these several motions. It appears that the appellant at one time had pending herein five appeals from as many orders entered by the trial court in this foreclosure proceeding. One of these several appeals was from the judgment and decree of foreclosure, while the remaining four were from orders made and entered after said judgment. Upon the calling of the December calendar of this court, the respondent made a motion, upon enumerated grounds, for the dismissal of all five of said appeals. The record indicates that the appellant failed to appear in opposition to said motion, and the same was thereupon granted as to the four appeals from the orders after judgment, but denied as to the appeal from the judgment. At the next succeeding session of this court, held in March of this year, the respondent repeated his motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment, and, as stated above, also presented a motion for the affirmance of said judgment. The appellant, who appears herein in propria persona, was present in court upon the making of these latter motions and opposed the granting thereof. At this same time he made the motion, above referred to, for recall of the remittitur issued upon the earlier dismissal of the four appeals from the orders after judgment, urging in support thereof that he had not received notice of the making of the motion at the preceding session of the court, and that the order of this court made at such time dismissing his said four appeals was secured by reason of fraud and imposition having been practiced by the respondent's counsel in having filed herein a false and fraudulent affidavit of mailing.

[1] In our opinion, the appellant has failed to establish that the affidavit of mailing is false and fraudulent. There is nothing in the record herein which would tend to indicate that the notice of motion was not, in fact, properly addressed and mailed to the appellant. The mere circumstance that the appellant might not have received said notice of motion through the mail cannot lend support to his claim that the affidavit of mailing is false and fraudulent. Section 1012 of the Code of Civil Procedure indicates the circumstances under which service may be made by mail, and section 1013 of the same Code provides, among other things, that "the service is complete at the time of the deposit" in the mail. In Heinlen v. Heilbron, 94 Cal. 636, 640, 30 P. 8, 9, this court declared that:

"The service by mail authorized by section 1012 does not contemplate a delivery as a part of the service, as is seen by the provision of section 1013, that 'the service is complete at the time of the deposit' in the post office."

Other cases in which it has been held that service by mail is complete at the time of deposit in the post office, and that the addressee incurs the risk of the failure of the mail, are Griffin v. Board of Commissioners, 20 S. D. 142, 104 N. W. 1117, 1119, Batchoff v. Butte, etc., Co., 60 Mont. 179, 198 P. 132, 135, and Jacobs v. Hooker, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 71. A perusal of the affidavit of mailing, filed by respondent's counsel, reveals that:

"The case is one in which such service is permitted, and that the mode pointed out by the statute for making such service has been strictly followed." Heinlen v. Heilbron, supra.

The appellant's motion to recall the remittitur heretofore issued is therefore denied.

[2] This brings us to a consideration of the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment. In this connection it may be said that this motion appears to be but a renewal of the motion denied at the December session of the court. We perceive of no reason why the present motion should not also be denied, for it is grounded, as was the earlier motion, upon the claim that the appellant has failed to file herein a full and complete phonographic report of the trial. The transcript, however imperfect, contains the judgment roll, and, the appeal from the judgment, having been taken under the alternative method, may not be dismissed upon the ground that the "reporter's transcript" is incomplete. Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 77, 227 P. 715; Ramsay v. Rodgers, 189 Cal. 100, 207 P. 516; Beckett v. Stuart, 35 Cal. App. 796, 171 P. 107. It follows, therefore, that the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment must be and the same is denied.

[3] There remains to be considered the respondent's further motion for affirmance of the judgment upon the ground that the appeal therefrom is a frivolous appeal. It is the practice of this court ordinarily to deny a motion for affirmance of the judgment appealed from, for the very good reason that consideration of such a motion necessarily involves an examination of the record and briefs of counsel as to the merits of the appeal, resulting in the advancement of the hearing of the particular appeal over many other appeals preceding it on our calendar. Such a course would obviously be unfair to other litigants in this court whose appeals are entitled to priority in the matter of hearing. Chino Land, etc., Co. v. Hamaker, 171 Cal. 689, 690, 154 P. 850. We are of the opinion, however, in view of the several and oft-repeated motions presented herein which have to some extent familiarized us with the issues involved in this litigation, that this particular motion for affirmance of the judgment may properly be considered without doing substantial injustice to other litigants.

An examination of the appellant's brief discloses that he is urging as grounds for reversal matters, which, with one exception, were covered by the four appeals heretofore dismissed by this court. It thus appears that the appellant is attempting to prosecute the instant appeal, in the main, upon grounds not properly reviewable under it, and which grounds have already been disposed of by the order of this court dismissing his four appeals abortively prosecuted from the orders after judgment. The only ground now urged for a reversal, which has not at one time or another during the history of this litigation received the attention of the court, is the contention that the complaint fails to state a cause of action and that the appellant's demurrer thereto was improperly overruled. A mere cursory glance at the complaint sufficiently indicates the correctness of the trial court's order. The appeal is clearly without merit and is a frivolous appeal.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. McDONALD et al. (L. A. 7985.)★

Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1927.

Rehearing Denied April 21, 1927.

Pleading 433(7)—Complaint, averring release of person for whom bail undertaking was executed only inferentially, held sufficient after judgment, in absence of demurrer.

Where complaint, in action on undertaking of bail, failed to directly allege that person for whom undertaking was executed was released, yet showed release inferentially, held that, in absence of demurrer, it could not be attacked after trial on merits, since defect might have been supplied by amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the People against R. McDonald and R. McDonald, Jr. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Wiley, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

H. E. Schmidt, of Bakersfield, for the People.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellants' brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. In response to said order to show cause the respondent has indicated its willingness to have the matter submitted upon the appellants' brief. The appeal herein is from a judgment entered by the superior court of Kern county in an action against the appellants on an undertaking of bail executed by them in the sum of $2,000. As their sole ground for reversal of said judgment, the appellants urge that the complaint is fatally defective, in that it fails to allege that the person for whom the undertaking of bail was executed and delivered had been released from custody. In support of this contention reliance is had on the case of County of Los Angeles v. Babcock et al., 45 Cal. 252.

We have no quarrel with the doctrine enunciated in that case. It is correctly held therein that an averment of release upon or by reason of the execution and delivery of the undertaking is indispensable in an action thereon, and that, in the absence of such an allegation, a demurrer to the complaint on that ground should be sustained. That case, however, is not decisive here. In the case of Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. 634, 637, 66 P. 369, 70 P. 861, 862, this court declared:

"Reversals for lack of formal allegations that might have been supplied by amendment are not favored after trial on the merits. Cushing v. Pires, 124 Cal. 663 [57 P. 572]. And where a necessary averment has been only inferentially pleaded, it will be held sufficient after judgment and in the absence of demurrer."

It is held in Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 29, 41 P. 24, 25, that—

"While a judgment will not relieve from the entire absence of a necessary averment, it will cure defects in all such averments as may by fair and reasonable intendment be found to have been pleaded, although defectively."

The early case of Hill v. Haskin, 51 Cal. 175, 178, contains the following:

"Instead of alleging the fact directly it was stated only inferentially, and might have been demurred to on this ground. The defect could then have been cured by an amendment. But having proceeded to trial, without interposing the objections it was too late afterwards for the defendant to raise the point that the offer to account ought to have been averred with greater precision and directness."

Other authorities to the same effect are Houston v. Williams, 53 Cal. App. 267, 272, 200 P. 55; Diamond M. Co. v. Aetna C. & S. Co., 60 Cal. App. 425, 428, 213 P. 56; Resetar v. Leonardi, 61 Cal. App. 765, 216 P. 71.

The rule announced in these latter cases disposes of the appellants' contention, for the complaint in the instant case, though deficient in so far as a direct averment is concerned, nevertheless, by implication, reveals that the person for whom the undertaking had been furnished had, in fact, been released from custody. This material allegation having been pleaded inferentially, it follows that the appellants, in the absence of a demurrer on that ground, are now precluded from asserting that the complaint is defective in this respect. It is true that a special demurrer was interposed in the trial court, but upon grounds not now urged.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

ROOT et al. v. DAUGHERTY. (L. A. 8524.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1927.)

1. New trial $\S$ 138—Notice of intention to move for new trial held ineffectual, where filed prior to signing and filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 656, 657 and 659, as amended by St. 1923, p. 751).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 656, 657, and 659, as amended by St. 1923, p. 751, notice of intention to move for new trial, filed prior to signing and filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law, held premature and ineffectual for any purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Oliver H. Root and another against E. F. Daugherty. From a judgment for the plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

John B. Yakey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. C. Jensen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment entered by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles in an action for damages for breach of contract. It appears that the plaintiffs had agreed to sell and the defendant had agreed to purchase a leasehold interest in a bungalow, together with certain household furnishings, for the sum of $8,000. The contemplated sale was not consummated and the plaintiffs instituted this action to recover the sum of $4,675 as damages, alleging in their complaint that the defendant had wrongfully breached said agreement. By way of answer the defendant alleged the inability of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the agreement. After trial the plaintiffs were awarded $1,500 and costs. This appeal was thereupon prosecuted by the defendant. As grounds for the reversal of said judgment he urges that the complaint fails to state a cause of action; that the findings of fact and conclusions of law are contrary to law and to the evidence; and that the plaintiffs failed to prove damage. Said appeal was thereafter placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondents to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be met in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondents had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. Upon the calling of said calendar counsel for the respondents appeared and requested that this court of its own motion dismiss the appeal on the ground that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed more than 60 days after the entry of judgment.

[1] In view of the conclusion we have reached we do not find it necessary to pass upon the contentions urged by the appellant for a reversal of the judgment. And, in passing, it may be said that the suggestion of respondents' counsel looking to a dismissal of the appeal is without merit, for the record herein discloses that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed 10 days prior to the entry of judgment, and not, as stated by respondents' counsel, more than 60 days thereafter. We are of the opinion, however, that said notice of intention to move for a new trial was prematurely filed, and therefore ineffectual for any purpose. Chronologically the history of this litigation reveals that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed on June 13, 1924. Thereafter, and on June 20, 1924, the findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed and filed. On June 23, 1924, the judgment was duly entered. Subsequently, and on October 23, 1924, the motion for a new trial was denied. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed on November 21, 1924. It is apparent from the foregoing that the filing of the notice of intention to move for a new trial preceded by 7 days the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law.

This court upon numerous occasions has held that proceedings for a new trial taken prematurely are a nullity and ineffectual for any purpose. Yamato v. Bank of So. California, 170 Cal. 351, 356, 149 P. 826; Fountain Water Co. v. Dougherty, 134 Cal. 376, 377, 66 P. 316; Reclamation Dist. v. Thisby, 131 Cal. 572, 574, 63 P. 918; Dominguez v. Mascotti, 74 Cal. 269, 271, 15 P. 773; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 529, 6 P. 381. Section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 751) provides, in part:

"The party intending to move for a new trial must, *either before the entry of judgment or within ten days after receiving notice of the entry of the judgment, * * * file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention to move for a new trial. * * " (Italics ours.)

In view of this amendment to said Code section we are called upon to determine herein whether proceedings on motion for new trial are prematurely taken when the notice of intention to move for such relief is filed not only "before the entry of judgment," but prior to the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Our research has failed to disclose any decision of this court upon this question in the light of the 1923 amendment to section 659, Code of Civil Procedure. In Hughes v. De Mund, 70 Cal. App. 265, 266, 267, 233 P. 93, it is declared, however, that section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure and those sections preceding and following it having to do with new trials "presuppose that the action has been prosecuted to a point where ultimate findings have been made as the basis for a final judgment." With this reasoning we are in accord. Section 656 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines a new trial as:

A "re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee."

It has repeatedly been held that where findings of fact are required and are not waived the decision is not rendered until said findings are signed and filed. Aspegren & Co. v. Sherwood, Swan & Co. (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 400, and authorities therein cited. Section 657 of the same Code provides that "the party aggrieved" may apply for a new trial. The opinion in the early case of Dominguez v. Mascotti, supra, declares that—

"Until the findings are signed and filed there is no decision, and nobody is 'aggrieved,' within the meaning of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

We are of the opinion, therefore, that proceedings on motion for a new trial instituted by the filing of a notice of intention prior to the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law are premature and ineffectual for any purpose.

It is stated in Barbee v. Young (Cal. App.) 249 P. 15, 16, that—

"Section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure deals simply with the right of a defeated party where the court has announced its conclusions or filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law to immediately give notice of motion for a new trial. * * *"

The foregoing statement was unnecessary to a decision of that case, and, in so far as said statement lends support to a conclusion differing from that herein announced, the same is disapproved.

[2] The proceedings on motion for new trial herein, having been prematurely instituted, were ineffectual and a nullity, and no other proceedings for new trial having been subsequently and seasonably commenced so as to extend the period of time within which the appeal from the judgment might be prosecuted, we are constrained, for want of jurisdiction of the cause, to dismiss said appeal for the reason that it was taken more than 60 days after the entry of said judgment.

The appeal is therefore dismissed.

DANIELS v. COLKINS. (L. A. 8649.)

Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1927.

Judgment ¶145(1)—Seasonable application for relief, accompanied by sufficient affidavit of merits and verified answer stating good defense, requires vacation of default judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where application for relief from default judgment was made within three months from entry thereof, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and accompanied by sufficient affidavit of merits and proposed verified answer setting forth good defense, it was incumbent on trial court to vacate and set aside judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by A. J. Daniels against Anna M. Colkins. Judgment for plaintiff by default, and, from an order refusing to set aside and vacate the judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Woodruff & Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

T. C. Gould, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from an order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles refusing to set aside and vacate a default judgment obtained after publication of summons. The appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why said order appealed from should not be reversed or that such order be made as might be met in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar and the entry of said order to show cause it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. Respondent failed to appear upon the calling of said calendar, and the order to show cause was thereupon submitted.

The appellant's application for relief from said default judgment, obtained after publication of summons, was made and denied within three months from the entry thereof, and such application was therefore seasonably presented. Code Civ. Proc. § 473. An examination of the record discloses that with the notice of motion for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure there was filed by the appellant a good and sufficient affidavit of merits, together with a copy of her proposed verified answer to the complaint, which proposed answer contains allegations constituting a good defense to the action. The application for relief having been seasonably made and having been accompanied by a sufficient affidavit of merits and a proposed verified answer setting forth a good defense to the complaint herein, it was incumbent upon the trial court to vacate and set aside the default judgment complained of. Gray v. Lawlor, 151 Cal. 352, 90 P. 691, 12 Ann. Cas. 990; Hoffman v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 386, 90 P. 939; Lilly-Brackett Co. v. Sonnemann, 157 Cal. 192, 106 P. 715, 21 Ann. Cas. 1279; Boland v. All Persons, 160 Cal. 486, 117 P. 547; Osmont v. All Persons, 165 Cal. 587, 133 P. 480; Beggs v. Riordan, 44 Cal. App. 230, 186 P. 187.

For the foregoing reasons the order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to vacate and set aside the default judgment entered against the appellant herein and to permit said appellant to file her proposed verified answer.

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1927.)

1. Attachment $\S$ 5—Where attachment depends on contract being payable within state, contract must provide either expressly or by necessary implication that obligation is so payable.

Where right to attach depends on contract being payable within state, it is not enough that money be payable wherever defendant may be found, and therefore payable within state, but that contract must provide either in terms or by necessary implication that obligation is so payable.

2. Attachment $\S$ 5—Contract for use of gambling car with traveling show held not to create obligation payable within state, as required for attachment (Code Civ. Proc. § 537).

Contract, executed in Illinois for payment of sum of money for use or privilege of gambling car connected with traveling show, and specifying a certain sum as due and payable each week, held to contemplate weekly payment at such place or places as show might be operating, and not to create an obligation either expressly or by necessary implication payable within state authorizing attachment within Code Civ. Proc. § 537.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Guerin, Judge.

Action by William R. Snapp and another against Charles B. Kidder and another. From an order refusing to dissolve an attachment theretofore granted, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. Lee Bernstein, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Verge, Cooney & Calhoun, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondents to show cause why the judgment herein should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be met in the premises. At the time of the placing of said cause upon said calendar, and the entry of said order, it appeared that the appellants' brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondents had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. The respondents failed to appear upon the calling of said calendar, and the order to show cause was thereupon submitted. There is presented herein an appeal from an order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles refusing to dissolve an attachment. Section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates the circumstances under which an attachment may issue upon the institution of an action. The writ of attachment complained of herein was undoubtedly issued under subdivision 1 of said section, and the conflicting affidavits filed in connection with the appellants' motion to dissolve the same indicate that the controversy revolves about the question whether or not the contract out of which the debt arose was "payable in this state."

[1, 2] It has repeatedly been held that, where the right to an attachment depends upon the contract being "payable in this state," it is not enough that the money be payable wherever the defendant may be found, and therefore payable in this state, but that the contract must provide either in terms or by necessary implication that the obligation is payable in this state. Eck v. Hoffman, 55 Cal. 501, 502; Tuller v. Arnold, 93 Cal. 166, 168, 28 P. 863; Drake v. De Witt, 1 Cal App. 617, 618, 82 P. 982; Atwood v. Little Bonanza Co., 13 Cal App. 594, 596, 110 P. 344; Erickson v. Erickson, 47 Cal. App. 319, 320, 190 P. 464. The instant action was instituted to recover, in the main, a sum of money alleged to be due for the use of a privilege or gambling car connected with a traveling show. By the terms of the contract between the parties, executed at East St. Louis, Ill., the sum of $275 was to be due and payable on Wednesday of each week during the show season. It may be said, therefore, that the contract contemplated the weekly payment of said sum at such place or places as the show might be operating when the same fell due. The contract itself does not, however, indicate the places where the show visited, nor does the record herein disclose that any part of the amount sued for was earned or became payable in this state. This being so, it cannot be said that the obligation or any proportionate part thereof was either expressly or by necessary implication payable in this state. The writ of attachment was therefore improperly issued, and the trial court erred in refusing to dissolve it.

The order appealed from is reversed.

ANAHEIM NAT. BANK v. DOLPH.

Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1927.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 160—Agreement to pay "charges for collection" does not destroy note's negotiability under Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law (Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 2, and § 3083, subd. 5).

Stipulation to pay "charges for collection" does not destroy negotiability of a promissory note on which no interest is payable until maturity, under Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law (Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 2), providing that an instrument to be negotiable must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money, and Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law (Civ. Code, § 3083, subd. 5), providing that sum is certain although to be paid with costs of collection or attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity.

2. Bills and notes $\S$ 155—Stipulation of sureties, indorsers, and guarantors that time of payment may be extended without notice does not destroy note's negotiability.

A stipulation in a note that sureties, indorsers, and guarantors consent that time of payment may be extended without notice does not destroy negotiability.

3. Bills and notes $\S$ 155—Stipulation whereby both maker and sureties, indorsers and guarantors, consent to extension by holder, either before or after maturity, does not destroy note's negotiability (Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law [Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 3]).

Stipulation in note whereby maker as well as sureties, indorsers, and guarantors severally agree that time of payment may be extended without notice, not limiting the making of such extension to a time after maturity and not giving right to demand extension by holder, does not destroy negotiability under Negotiable Instruments Law (Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 3), providing that instrument to be negotiable must be payable on demand or at fixed time, since the time required to be certain is that when holder can demand payment.

SHENK, J. On the judgment roll alone the defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000 and interest on a promissory note. The complaint sets forth a copy of the note, which is as follows: "$5,000.00.

"Capistrano, California, Dec. 22, 1922.

"Six months after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of myself five thousand and no/100 dollars payable at any bank in Santa Ana, California, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum from date until maturity.

The makers, sureties, indorsers or guarantors severally waive presentment, protest and notice of protest, and the said sureties, indorsers and guarantors further all and singular, waive the plea of discussion and division. "The makers of this note must sign upon
["$1.00 in canceled I. R. S.]

"Blanche L. Dolph."

Indorsements:

"Blanche L. Dolph, Capistrano."

In addition to other appropriate allegations the complaint alleged that on the 22d day of December, 1922, the defendant executed said note and on the same day "sold, assigned, indorsed, and transferred said promissory note to the Leach-Biltwell Motor Car Company, a corporation"; that thereafter on the same day "and prior to the maturity of said promissory note said Leach-Biltwell Motor Car Company, did, for a valuable consideration, sell, transfer, and deliver said promissory note to the plaintiff herein, and that the plaintiff is now the owner and holder thereof." The defendant answered, setting up as an affirmative defense that she was induced to execute and deliver said promissory note in payment for stock in said corporation and solely by reason of certain representations made to her by the agents of said corporation which were false and fraudulent. She further alleged that shortly after the execution and delivery of the note she ascertained that the said representations were false, and she immediately rescinded the transaction and notified all parties in interest and every bank and banking institution in Southern California, including the plaintiff, that she had canceled and rescinded said transaction. The court found that the representations and statements were made to the defendant by the agents of the Leach-Biltwell Motor Car Company as alleged; that they were false and that they were the inducing cause of the execution and delivery of said note, but that said notice was not given by the defendant nor received by the plaintiff until after it had purchased said note, and "that it purchased said note in good faith in due course of business and for a valuable consideration prior to the maturity thereof and without notice or knowledge of any equities or defenses in favor of the defendant." The court thereupon rendered judgment for the plaintiff upon its conclusion of law that the note was negotiable in form, and that under the facts found the plaintiff was entitled to judgment notwithstanding the equitable defense alleged and proved. The sole question for determination is whether the note sued on is negotiable in form. If the trial court was correct in holding that it is negotiable in form, the judgment must be affirmed. If it be held to be nonnegotiable in form, the matters alleged and proved were a complete defense and the judgment must be reversed.

[1] It is first contended by the defendant that the said note is nonnegotiable by reason of the inclusion therein of the words, "charges for collection." Section 3082, subd. 2, of the Civil Code adopted as part of our Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law in 1917, provides that an instrument in order to be negotiable "must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money." Section 3083, subd. 5, of the Civil Code, adopted also as a part of the same law, provides that the sum payable is a sum certain within the meaning of the act, although it is to be paid "with costs of collection or an attorney's fee, in case payment shall not be made at maturity."

The instrument here in question does not contain an accelerating clause at the option of the holder for the nonpayment of interest. No interest is due in any event under the provisions of the note until maturity. The agreement as to interest clearly is that if interest at 8 per cent. per annum be not paid at maturity, then the accrued interest and principal would draw interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid. If the note be not paid at maturity the holder could take steps to enforce payment with the necessary costs of collection. The instrument is poorly punctuated and not precisely worded, but without doubt the agreement contemplated by the parties was no more than to pay attorney's fees and costs of collection in case of nonpayment as permitted by the statute. The insertion of the word "charges" could add nothing to the agreement so permitted, and when inserted did not destroy the negotiability of the note. Davis v. McColl, 179 Mo. App. 198, 166 S. W 1113; Ex parte Bledsoe, 180 Ala. 586, 61 So. 813; Letcher v. Wrightsman, 60 Okl. 14, 158 P. 1152.

[2] It is next contended that the note is nonnegotiable for uncertainty in time of payment. The contention is predicated upon the fact that the note contains an agreement on the part of "the makers, sureties, indorsers or guarantors" that time of payment may be extended without further notice. Incidentally it is urged that the note is uncertain as to what parties agree to an extension of time of payment, for the reason that the agreement for extension is set apart from the sentence which precedes it by a period. If a comma or a semicolon had been there used we apprehend no claim of uncertainty would have been urged. It is argued that because of the period it cannot be determined whether the maker alone, or the sureties, indorsers, and guarantors, as well as the maker, agree that time of payment may be extended without notice. Whatever punctuation be used between the two sentences, it is clear that both the maker and the sureties, indorsers and guarantors severally agree that time of payment may be extended without further notice. It is well settled that a stipulation in a note that sureties, indorsers and guarantors consent that time of payment may be extended without notice thereof does not destroy negotiability. McDonald v. Mulkey, 32 Wyo. 144, 231 P. 662; Farmer v. Bank of Graettinger, 130 Iowa, 469, 107 N. W. 170; De Groat v. Focht, 37 Okl. 267, 131 P. 172.

[3] The question, then, is whether a stipulation expressed in the note that the maker consents to an extension of the time of payment renders the note nonnegotiable. Upon this point the authorities from other jurisdictions are not in harmony, and the precise point seems not to have been adjudicated in this state, although the reasons which would logically lead to a declaration that such an agreement does not destroy negotiability are stated in Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, 163 Cal. 485, 126 P. 153, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787, where it is declared at page 491 (126 P. 156):

"When it is said that the time of payment must be stated with certainty, the time referred to is that when the holder can insist on payment. Therefore, if the time when the holder has the absolute right to demand payment is prescribed with certainty, the note is negotiable so far as this objection is concerned"—citing cases. 19 Cal. Jur. 814.

It is true that the Navajo Bank Case involved the construction of a note containing an agreement that after maturity the note might be extended with no impairment of liability, but the statement of this court above quoted is in accord with the trend of modern authority and affords a satisfactory reason for holding that the instrument involved herein fixes with certainty the time of payment as required by subdivision 3 of section 3082 of the Civil Code, which provides that an instrument to be negotiable "must be payable on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time." A demand note, which is payable at the option of the holder, is expressly made negotiable by the statute. The note involved herein definitely fixed the time of payment at six months after December 22, 1922. The date of maturity so fixed was a fixed future time and was a time when the holder of the note might insist on payment. No power was granted to the maker to extend the time of payment without the consent of the holder. In First National Bank v. Buttery, 17 N. D. 326, 116 N. W. 341, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878, 17 Ann. Cas. 52, the note in question contained the provision that: "The makers and indorsers herein severally * * * consent that the time of payment may be extended without notice." It was argued in that case that under this provision the holder of the note might without notice extend the time of payment indefinitely, thereby rendering the note nonnegotiable for uncertainty of time of payment. The court said:

"It is strenuously argued that the use of the word 'makers' in the waiver admits of an extension being made at any time on the part of the holder, by mere secret mental process, unknown to any other party. This may be true as a psychological fact, but we do not deem it so as a matter of practice in commerce and banking. * * * Holders of notes do not by a secret mental process make an extension of the time of payment, but such extension, if made at all, is made by an agreement between the principal debtor and the holder of the paper, either with or without the consent of the indorsers."

It would unduly prolong this opinion to review the many cases involving the same or similar provisions in promissory notes under the law merchant of the several states. They are extensively annotated and commented upon in the cases hereinafter mentioned. The Supreme Court of Tennessee has briefly stated the reasons and cited the authorities which indicate the correctness of the holding that the inclusion of such a provision in a note does not destroy its negotiability. The law of Tennessee with reference to certainty of time of payment is in the identical language of our own statute. In Bank of Whitehouse v. White, 136 Tenn. 634, 191 S. W. 332, the effect of the following provision on the part of the obligors on a note was involved, to wit:

"We authorize the holder thereof to extend the payment of the same, or any part thereof, without impairing our joint and several liabilities, and the sureties agree to waive notice of any extension of time."

It was held that such a stipulation in the note did not destroy its negotiability. The court said:

"We construe the clause in the note, quoted above, to relate and to give assent to extensions that may be granted at or after maturity, the date of which is set forth with certainty in the note; or to an extension which, if made prior to maturity, has operative effect as from the time when the note falls due according to tenor; and we are of opinion that when so construed the clause should not render the note [non] negotiable, whether we view the question from the standpoint of principle, precedent, or policy.

"Principle: As already observed, the note as executed is stipulated to mature on a date fixed and certain. The provision for extension does not put it in the power of the holder to extend the note without the concurrence of the maker, and the latter may not force an extension on the holder. When they concur, a new date of maturity is fixed, and one no less certain than the original date. The sureties merely assent in advance thereto and bind themselves to waive the right of defense that might otherwise accrue; or to be bound by the supplemental contract which fixes the later maturity date. There is no agreement embodied in the note operating to bind the holder to extend. There is incorporated no promise to do anything that would, of its force, affect the unconditional promise to pay on the date named in instrument. There is nothing in the note that looks towards an indefinite extension of time of payment.

"Precedent: Cases that pass on this question may be found collated in 8 Corp. Juris, 140; * * * 17 Ann. Cas. 55 and 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878; Longmont Nat. Bank v. Loukonen, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 210; Anniston Loan, etc., Co. v. Stickney, 31 L. R. A. 234; Rossville State Bank v. Heslet, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738; State Bank of Halstad v. Bilstad, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132. The cases which have appeared since the preparation of the last of these notes demonstrate that the above is fast becoming the settled construction of the Negotiable Instruments Act. First Nat. Bank v. Stover [21 N. M. 453] (N. M.) 155 P. 905, L. R. A. 1916D, 1280 [Ann. Cas. 1918B, 145]; First Nat. Bank v. Baldwin [100 Neb. 25], 158 N. W. 371; City Nat. Bank v. Kelly [51 Okl. 445] (Okl.) 151 P. 1172; Davis v. McCall, 179 Mo. App. 198, 166 S. W. 1113.

"Policy: Such a provision for extension not infrequently operates to the advantage of a surety in permitting the holder, at his option, safely to give grace to the maker, on the latter's application; when otherwise, pressure for payment might come inconveniently upon both maker and surety. It is common practice to embody such a provision in notes; the clause tends to give currency to the note, and the policy of the law should be in furtherance of the negotiability of such widely used instruments when they fairly fall within the spirit of the provisions of the uniform act. White v. Hatcher, 135 Tenn. 609, 188 S. W. 61; Pemiscot County Bank v. Bank, 132 Tenn. 152, 177 S. W. 74."

Among the cases holding that a provision such as the one now before us does not destroy negotiability are the following, many of which contain elaborate notes and collation of authorities on the subject: First National Bank v. Stover (1916) 21 N. M. 453, 155 P. 905, L. R. A. 1916D, 1280, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 145; First National Bank v. Baldwin (1916) 100 Neb. 25, 158 N. W. 371; City National Bank v. Kelly (1915) 51 Okl. 445, 151 P. 1172; Davis v. McColl (1914) supra; Bank of Whitehouse v. White (1917) supra; Holliday State Bank v. Hoffman, 85 Kan. 71, 116 P. 239, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1, note page 7; Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004; City National Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Com. Co., 93 Mo. App. 123; National Bank of Commerce v. Kenney (1904) 98 Tex. 293, 83 S. W. 368; Russell v. Wyant, 214 Mo. App. 377, 253 S. W. 790; Missouri-Lincoln Trust Co. v. Long, 31 Okl. 1, 120 P. 291; Protection Ins. Co. v. Bill, 31 Conn. 534; Capron v. Capron, 44 Vt. 410. See note to Kimpton v. Studebaker Bros. Co., 125 Am. St. Rep. 202.

Of the cases adhering to a contrary doctrine the following may be noted: Coffin v. Spencer (C. C.) 39 F. 262; Union Stockyards National Bank v. Bolan, 14 Idaho, 87, 93 P. 508, 125 Am. St. Rep. 146; National Bank v. Gunter Bros., 67 Kan. 227, 72 P. 842; Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 348, 13 N. W. 312, 44 Am. Rep. 685; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 17 A. 603, 4 L. R. A. 190, 12 Am. St. Rep. 860; Smith v. Van Blarcom, 45 Mich. 371, 8 N. W. 90; Glidden v. Henry, 104 Ind. 278, 1 N. E. 369, 54 Am. Rep. 316.

The appellant concedes that the interpretation we place upon the language of the note in question is in harmony with the modern doctrine on the subject, but insists that the older cases are in a majority and better reasoned. The trend of modern authority is unquestionably opposed to the appellant's construction of the note. We are satisfied with the reasoning of these later cases. It appears to us to be the better rule and is in harmony with the statement of this court in Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, supra. Such an interpretation, in conjunction with the recent cases in other jurisdictions, tends for stability and uniformity in the interpretation of the uniform negotiable instruments law adopted in this state and in nearly all of the other states of the Union. Utah State Bank v. Smith, 180 Cal. 1, 179 P. 160.

As there is nothing in the stipulation in the note under consideration which would give any one the right to demand of the holder of the note an extension of time of payment, we conclude that the time at which the holder could demand payment was definitely fixed and that therefore the note is negotiable in form.

The judgment is affirmed.

COLLEY v. CHOWCHILLA NAT. BANK.CHOWCHILLA NAT. BANK v. COLLEY et al. (Sac. 3772.)

Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1927.

1. Release ⇨13(1)—Consideration for release passing to third person with consent of releasor, consisting only of detriment to releasee, is sufficient (Civ. Code, §§ 1541, 1605).

Generally, consideration for release of no specific benefit to releasor and implying only detriment to releasee, moving from releasee to third person at request and acquiescence of releasor, is sufficient, under Civ. Code, §§ 1541, 1605.

2. Banks and banking ⇨260(1)—Agreement of national bank to satisfy debt without receiving benefit held ultra vires covenant to make gift of capital assets and void.

National bank's agreement to give satisfaction of debt to it without receiving any special benefit was, in legal consequence, an ultra vires and void covenant to make gift of capital assets.

3. Novation ⇨11—Novation must be expressly or impliedly pleaded.

Novation must be pleaded either expressly or by unequivocal implication.

4. Novation ⇨12—One asserting existence of novation has burden of establishing it.

Burden of establishing novation is on party asserting its existence.

5. Novation ⇨11—Allegation of agreement to surrender notes, on plaintiffs' executing quitclaim deed to third party under contract of sale assigned to defendants, is not allegation of novation, whereby third party assumed plaintiffs' indebtedness.

In action to compel cancellation of promissory notes, complaint alleging agreement by defendant to surrender notes if plaintiffs executed quitclaim deed to third party under contract for sale assigned to defendants, which would operate as payment of notes, did not impliedly allege novation releasing plaintiffs on execution of deed and new contract between defendant and third party assuming plaintiffs' indebtedness.

6. Novation ⇨12—Implied novation cannot arise until evidence is sufficient to raise inference that novation was intended.

Though novation may be established by implication, such implication cannot arise until there is evidence showing facts and circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred that such was intention.

7. Novation ⇨12—Evidence held not to show novation by defendants' agreement to surrender notes on plaintiffs' executing quitclaim deed to vendor under contract for sale assigned to defendant as security.

In action to compel cancellation of promissory notes under alleged agreement by defendant to surrender notes if plaintiff would execute quitclaim deed to vendor under contract of sale assigned to defendant as security, evidence held not to show new contract whereby vendor intentionally assumed plaintiffs' indebtedness, and hence execution of quitclaim deed by plaintiff did not give rise to novation releasing plaintiff from liability.

8. Novation ⇨12—Vendor accepting quitclaim deed from purchaser in default held not presumed to have assumed purchaser's obligation to bank to whom contract of sale was assigned as security (Civ. Code, § 1589).

As respects novation, where vendor under contract of sale was entitled to declare forfeiture for purchaser's default, acceptance of quitclaim deed by vendor did not raise presumption, under Civ. Code, § 1589, that vendor agreed to pay purchaser's indebtedness to defendant bank to whom purchaser assigned contract as security for debt.

9. Banks and banking ⇨262—Officers have authority to bind bank in manner that it could be bound by law, and their action was, in effect, action by bank itself.

President and officers of national bank have actual or ostensible authority to bind bank in every way that it could be bound under the law, and their action was, in effect, action by bank itself.

10. Banks and banking ⇨227(3)—Evidence of bank's agreement to look to purchase price of land for payment of loan, if contract of sale was assigned as security, did not show agreement to cancel indebtedness.

In action to compel cancellation of notes, evidence that defendant bank, to secure loan, promised plaintiffs that if contract of sale was assigned as security bank would look to purchase price on sale of land for payment of loan, and, if necessary, plaintiffs would quitclaim to vendor, and bank would release plaintiffs from personal liability on notes did not show agreement to cancel indebtedness outright, or promise to release security afforded by assignment of contract.

11. Vendor and purchaser ⇨214(4)—Bank taking contract of sale as security acquired equitable lien on property against original contractor, heirs, or assigns.

Assignment of contract of sale to bank to secure notes gave bank an equitable lien or mortgage on realty enforceable against property in hands of original contractor, his heirs, administrators, assigns, or incumbrancers with notice, actual or constructive.

12. Banks and banking ⇨227(3)—Evidence of bank's agreement to look to price of land for loan payment, if sale contract was assigned as security, showed only waiver of deficiency claim.

In action to compel cancellation of notes, evidence that defendant bank, to secure loan, promised plaintiffs that if contract of sale was assigned as security bank would look to purchase price on sale of land for payment of loan, and, if necessary, plaintiffs would quitclaim to vendor, and bank would release plaintiffs from personal liability on notes amounted only to waiver by bank of claim for deficiency judgment after foreclosure or satisfaction of its equitable lien on property by assignment of contract, and not to surrender security given by execution of assignment.

13. Banks and banking ⚡261(3)—National bank's agreement to release personal liability, when security under contract of sale was exhausted, would estop bank from setting up defense ultra vires.

Under agreement by national bank to release plaintiffs from personal liability on notes when security of contract of sale assigned to bank was exhausted, if found, bank would be estopped to set up defense that agreement was ultra vires.

14. Banks and banking ⚡260(1)—National bank taking assignment of contract of sale as security for pre-existing unsecured debt would be estopped to deny release of personal liability on notes secured if made (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 9661, 9674).

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 5136 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9661), granting national banks all incidental powers necessary for its business, and section 5137 (section 9674), authorizing taking of mortgage of real property to secure indebtedness, bank would be estopped to deny its power, in taking security for pre-existing unsecured debt, to make valid agreement releasing makers of note from personal liability, where they had in good faith assigned contract of sale to bank as security under such agreement.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Actions by W. C. Colley against the Chowchilla National Bank and by the Chowchilla National Bank against Hope L. Colley and another. Judgment for plaintiff in first action, and defendant appeals. Judgment for defendants in second action, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

W. M. Conley, Matthew Conley, Philip Conley, and Lindsay & Conley, all of Fresno, and Faucett & Ring, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lee D. Windrem, of Richmond, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. By a stipulation of the parties the above-entitled causes were heard together in the court below, and while separate judgments were entered in each case and separate notices of appeal filed, still a consolidated record on appeal was prepared and the causes have been carried on our calendar under one number. They will therefore be considered and disposed of as one case.

This is appropriate, for the same basic questions underlie them, and a determination thereof will guide our action in both causes. They will be known herein as cause 1 and cause 2, respectively, following the order appearing in the caption. From the record it appears that the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank was succeeded by the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, and they are in reality one; hence reference herein will be made to them as the "Los Angeles bank."

The amended complaint in cause 1 was, by stipulation of the parties, made the answer to the complaint in cause 2, and the court in its findings of fact and conclusions of law adopted said amended complaint as its findings of fact without any other material findings whatsoever. It is, therefore, necessary to briefly set forth the allegations of said amended complaint as follows:

That on the 21st day of September, 1921, plaintiff, W. C. Colley, was indebted to the Chowchilla National Bank in the sum of $5,300, evidenced by his promissory note, which, with accrued interest thereon, amounted on the 15th day of April, 1922, to the sum of $5,441.45; that at the same time he was also indebted to said bank as indorser upon a promissory note in the principal sum of $2,728, with interest, which said latter indebtedness, after deducting partial payments, amounted on the 15th day of April, 1922, to the sum of $1,615.37, said indebtedness totaling on that date the sum of $7,056.82.

That on the 1st day of May, 1920, Hope L. Colley, on behalf of herself and husband, entered into a written contract of sale and purchase with the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, touching 80 acres of real property situate in the county of Madera, state of California, whereby the agreed purchase price of $18,000 was payable in installments covering a period of years and containing the usual covenants.

That on said 15th day of April, 1922, a refunding arrangement was entered into between said W. C. Colley and Hope L. Colley, his wife, and the said bank, whereby said indebtedness of W. C. Colley to appellant was subdivided by the execution of five promissory notes, as follows: One for the principal sum of $500, payable November 1, 1923; another for the principal sum of $1,500, payable November 1, 1924; another for the principal sum of $1,500, payable November 1, 1925, said three above-mentioned notes being signed by Hope L. Colley and indorsed by W. C. Colley; a fourth note in the sum of $1,500, due November 1, 1926; and a fifth in the principal sum of $2,059.75, payable November 1, 1927, said two last-mentioned notes being executed by W. C. Colley and indorsed by Hope L. Colley; that interest provided for in said notes was 8 per cent.; that to secure the payment of said notes, and each of them, said Hope L. Colley made, executed, and delivered to said bank an assignment of said contract of sale and purchase above referred to, said assignment being subordinate to a previous assignment which had been made by her to one A. F. Witesman.

Said amended complaint then further provides:

"That after said delivery of said second assignment of contract (meaning the assignment to defendant bank above described) to said defendant, and on or about the 22d day of April, 1922, the said defendant notified said plaintiff that if, at any time before payment of said five new promissory notes, said plaintiff and said Hope L. Colley, his wife, would execute a quitclaim deed of the said real property to Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation (formerly the said Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation), the same would operate in full payment of all of the aforesaid indebtedness of said plaintiff to said defendant, and that concurrently with the execution of such quitclaim deed by said plaintiff and said Hope L. Colley, the said defendant would thereupon deliver up and surrender to said plaintiff all of the said promissory notes by the terms thereof payable to said defendant as aforesaid; that thereafter and on February 24, 1923, said plaintiff and said Hope L. Colley executed to said Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, their quitclaim deed of all of said real property, and same was on last said date acknowledged and certified so as to entitle same to be recorded, and same was on February 27, 1923, recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Madera, state of California, in volume 3 of 'Official Records,' at page 16."

The amended complaint further alleges that at the time said quitclaim deed was made the property covered by said contract was of the reasonable value of $64,000, and the amount due on account of the purchase price thereof, including interest, was not to exceed the sum of $30,000; and that said respondent, Hope L. Colley, owned an equity in said real property which was far in excess of the claims of said bank; that after the execution of said quitclaim deed the Colleys made demand upon defendant bank to surrender and deliver up to them the two notes first described in said amended complaint, and also the five notes executed later in lieu of said two first-mentioned notes; but that said bank refused to surrender or deliver up any of said notes or to acknowledge payment of all, or any, or either of them; that, however, no payment had been made on account of said indebtedness except by the execution of said quitclaim deed; that the respondents were not informed as to whether any of said notes had been negotiated; that defendant claimed none of said notes had been paid or in any manner discharged; that great and irreparable damage would be suffered should said notes remain outstanding.

The prayer of said amended complaint was that defendant bank be ordered to deliver up said notes, and each of them; that in case it failed to deliver them up, plaintiff have judgment for the principal sum mentioned therein, with interest thereon from and after the 15th day of April, 1922, and for general relief.

As above stated, this amended complaint was by stipulation of the parties made the answer to the complaint in cause 2, which said cause is an action to recover from the Colleys the principal and interest of one of the five promissory notes involved in cause 1 and interest on two other of said notes.

The court found that all of the allegations of said amended complaint were true, and that all of the allegations of the answer of defendant bank were untrue, except that defendant bank was a national institution organized under and by virtue of the laws of the United States of America, with its principal place of business at Chowchilla, in the county of Madera, state of California.

Accordingly, in cause 1, pursuant to said findings, the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, W. C. Colley, to the effect that said note for $5,300, dated September 21, 1921, be adjudged and declared canceled and no longer an obligation of said plaintiff; that the note in the principal sum of $2,728, bearing the same date, be likewise adjudged and declared canceled and no longer an obligation of said plaintiff, either in whole or in part; and as to the later notes it was adjudged that said defendant bank be ordered and required to deliver up each of said five promissory notes set forth in said amended complaint, or, in case delivery of any of said promissory notes could not be had, that plaintiff recover from said defendant the principal sum named therein, together with interest on said sum from April 15, 1922, to date of judgment.

In cause 2 the court likewise adopted the allegations of said amended complaint as its findings, and adjudged each of said notes sued upon in said cause 2 to have been paid and discharged in full, and gave judgment for the defendants accordingly. The appeal in cause 1 is by defendant bank from the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and in cause 2 by plaintiff bank from the judgment in favor of defendants therein.

[1] It is clear from the foregoing that the legal effect of these findings is that the indebtedness to the appellant has been satisfied by the execution of the quitclaim deed to the Los Angeles bank, and that respondents should have a release therefrom in the form of surrender of both said series of notes. Epstein v. Gradowitz (Cal. App.) 243 P. 877. Indeed, the findings declare the obligation released upon a new consideration which complies with the provisions of section 1541 of the Civil Code. It is also to be noted that the consideration set forth is not one of specific benefit to appellant, but is one implying only detriment to the respondents. Undoubtedly, under ordinary circumstances, a consideration of this type is sufficient. Civ. Code, § 1605.

In 34 Cyc. 1050, the rule is stated as follows:

"A consideration for a release moving from a third person on behalf of the releasee to the releasor, or from the releasee to a third person at the request or by the acquiescence of the releasor, is as adequate as a consideration moving directly from the releasee to the releasor."

To the same effect, see Midland Trust & Savings Bank v. Nagle, 150 Minn. 279, 184 N. W. 1028, and Gates v. Fauvre, 74 Ind. App. 382, 119 N. E. 155.

In Rucker v. Bolles, 80 F. 504, 513 (25 C. C. A. 600), it is said:

"If one party to a contract agrees to release the opposite party therefrom in consideration of his doing some act which he is under no obligation to do, the doing of that act is a sufficient consideration for the release, although it was not beneficial to the first party."

[2] But, notwithstanding the above set forth principle, we must here deal with a corporation whose powers are circumscribed by the statutes of the United States. In short, we have as the alleged releasor a national banking association, which has, in practical effect, agreed to give a satisfaction of the debt without special benefit of any kind to itself. The legal consequence of the promise as found by the court is that the corporation has covenanted to make a gift of its capital assets for the doing of an act, detrimental to the doer, it is true, but without benefit to itself, and beneficial only to a third party, whose connection, if any, with appellant does not appear from the record. In other words, may a national bank under its powers as defined by the law be held to such a covenant? Appellant insists that such a contract, if proved, would be ultra vires the power of the corporation, and we think this contention must be sustained. We must look to the statutes of the United States as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States for a determination of this question. Chemical National Bank v. Havermale, 120 Cal. 601, 603, 52 P. 1071, 65 Am. St. Rep. 206.

In the early California case of Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 578, 579, (99 Am. Dec. 300), our court, speaking of the doctrine of ultra vires as applied to corporations, held:

"The term ultra vires, whether with strict propriety or not, is also used in different senses. An act is said to be ultra vires when it is not within the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform it under any circumstances, or for any purpose. An act is also, sometimes, said to be ultra vires with reference to the rights of certain parties, when the corporation is not authorized to perform it without their consent; or with reference to some specific purpose, when it is not authorized to perform it for that purpose, although fully within the scope of the general powers of the corporation, with the consent of the parties interested, or for some other purpose. And the rights of strangers dealing with corporations may vary, according as the act is ultra vires in one, or the other, of these senses. All these distinctions must be constantly borne in mind in considering a question arising out of dealings with a corporation. When an act is ultra vires in the first sense mentioned, it is generally, if not always, void in toto, and the corporation may avail itself of the plea. But when it is ultra vires in the second sense, the right of the corporation to avail itself of the plea will depend upon the circumstances of the case."

This definition of ultra vires and this classification of the types thereof was adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of National Bank & Loan Co. v. Petrie, 189 U. S. 423, 23 S. Ct. 512, 47 L. Ed. 879.

We think that the agreement here involved comes clearly under the first subdivision of the subject and is ultra vires in the first or proper sense. In Central Transportation Co. v. Pullman Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 59, 11 S. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"A contract of a corporation, which is ultra vires, in the proper sense, that is to say, outside the object of its creation as defined in the law of its organization, and therefore beyond the powers conferred upon it by the Legislature, is not voidable only, but wholly void, and of no legal effect. The objection to the contract is, not merely that the corporation ought not to have made it, but that it could not make it."

See, also, to the same effect, Union Pacific Ry. v. Chicago Ry., 163 U. S. 564, 16 S. Ct. 1173, 41 L. Ed. 265, and Cal. National Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 367, 17 S. Ct. 831, 42 L. Ed. 198.

The power of a national bank to deal in shares of stock or shares in a partnership was before the Supreme Court of the United States in the following cases: National Bank of Ottawa v. Converse, 200 U. S. 425, 26 S. Ct. 306, 50 L. Ed. 537, and Merchants' National Bank v. Wehrmann, 202 U. S. 295, 26 S. Ct. 613, 50 L. Ed. 1036. In the latter case the court said:

"It is not necessary in this case to say that shares like the present could not be accepted as security in any form by a national bank. But such a bank cannot accept an absolute transfer of them to itself. It recently has been decided that a national bank cannot take stock in a new speculative corporation, with the common double liability, in satisfaction of a debt. First National Bank of Ottawa v. Converse, 200 U. S. 425 [26 S. Ct. 306, 50 L. Ed. 537]. A fortiori, it cannot take shares in a partnership to the same end."

The rule as laid down in 7 Corpus Juris, page 784, is as follows:

"The officers of a national bank cannot bind it by contracts or acts which are not within the scope of the business which the bank is authorized to transact, such as * * * agreeing to receive anything but money in payment of a nonnegotiable note indorsed to the bank, or making donations to a charity or to public or private enterprises."

The reason for the rule is found in McCormick v. Market National Bank, 165 U. S. 549, 17 S. Ct. 433, 436, 41 L. Ed. 817, as follows:

"The doctrine of ultra vires, by which a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its corporate powers, is unlawful and void, and will not support an action, rests, as this court has often recognized and affirmed, upon three distinct grounds: The obligation of any one contracting with a corporation, to take notice of the legal limits of its powers; the interest of the stockholders, not to be subject to risks which they have never undertaken; and, above all, the interest of the public, that the corporation shall not transcend the powers conferred upon it by law."

Respondents, however, practically conceding the force of the above authorities, vigorously contend that the pleadings, proof, and findings warrant the conclusion that respondents are entitled to the relief given them by the court because of a novation of the contract, wherein and whereby respondents were released from their obligation to appellant and a new contract was made between appellant and the Los Angeles bank, whereby said latter bank assumed and agreed to pay the indebtedness of respondents to appellant.

We have been cited to no evidence, nor can any be found to sustain this contention of respondents. The legal principles comprising the doctrine of novation, as far as the same are here involved, may be stated as follows:

Civil Code, § 1530:

"Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one."

Civil Code, § 1531:

"Modes of Novation. Novation is made: (1) By the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation; (2) by the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter; or (3) by the substitution of a new creditor in place of the old one, with intent to transfer the rights of the latter to the former."

In 20 Cal. Jur. p. 250, it is said:

"But when it is clear that a new contract has been entered into without fraud and upon the understanding and with the intent that it shall be substituted for a former one, a novation is effected and the former agreement is extinguished. For example, it is said that where a bank to which checks on another bank are sent for collection, accepts credit from the drawee bank instead of requiring payment, such acceptance of the obligation of the drawee bank in discharge of the check amounts to novation between the two banks."

[3-5] Novation must be pleaded, either expressly or by unequivocal implication. Tra-bucco v. Collins, 39 Cal. App. 412, 179 P. 221; McGinn v. Willey, 24 Cal. App. 303, 141 P. 49; 20 Cal. Jur. 258; People's State Bank v. Penello, 67 Cal. App. 103, 227 P. 190; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Wallace, 58 Cal. App. 625, 209 P. 78. The amended complaint is wholly deficient in this regard. The burden of establishing a novation is upon the party asserting its existence. Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Wallace, supra; Robinson v. Rispin, 33 Cal. App. 536, 165 P. 979; Brown v. Coffee, 17 Cal. App. 381, 121 P. 309, 311; and Linder Hardware Co. v. Pacific Sugar Corp., 17 Cal. App. 81, 118 P. 785, 789.

"An essential element of every novation is a new contract to which all the parties concerned agree. * * * It is essential, then, in order to constitute a novation by which the original debtor is released, the creditor being bound thereby to discharge the debt as to him and look to another for the payment of his demand, that a contract be made between the new debtor and the creditor by which the claim can be enforced against such new debtor; and if the new debtor enters into no contract with the creditor by which he becomes the debtor of the creditor, so that the creditor may maintain an action against him, there is not a novation."

In 29 Cyc., at page 1136 and page 1139, the rule is again stated:

"The most frequent novation is the substitution of a new debtor. To constitute this kind of a novation, there must be a mutual agreement among three parties, the creditor, his immediate debtor, and the intended new debtor, by which the liability of the last named is accepted in the place of the original debtor in discharge of the original debt. * * * The burden of proof rests upon him who asserts that there has been a novation to establish it."

[6] While it is true that a novation may be established by implication, nevertheless—

"such implication cannot arise until there is evidence showing facts and circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred that such was the intention." 20 Cal. Jur. 258; People's State Bank v. Penello, supra; and Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Wallace, supra.

[7] A discussion to be made later herein of the evidence will disclose that the record contains no facts whatsoever from which it can be said that a new contract was made between the Los Angeles bank and appellant for payment of said indebtedness, with the intention of releasing and discharging the old obligation existing on the part of respondents or any agreement whatsoever to assume or pay the same.

cepted the quitclaim deed, must be held to have assumed and agreed to pay and satisfy the indebtedness to appellant. The only thing shown by the record is that said bank, after accepting said quitclaim deed, asserted in an action brought by it the right to possession of said premises, but this is consistent with its rights under the terms of the contract of sale. It might have otherwise caused to be forfeited the rights of the respondents by declaring them in default and taking proceedings under the terms of the contract for that purpose and thus get possession of the land. There was nothing done by it that was not in strict accord with the enforcement of the contract, and this without reference of any kind to the claim of appellant bank for the indebtedness of respondents to it. The evidence shows nothing compelling the conclusion that the said bank assumed or agreed to pay any portion of this indebtedness of the respondents to appellant. The respondents were on the verge of insolvency, having made at least three assignments of said contract of sale and purchase as security for large amounts of indebtedness, and they were, as above noted, in default upon their payments under the contract itself. No reason whatsoever is shown by the record for an independent promise of payment of their indebtedness to appellant by the Los Angeles bank.

[9] In the foregoing and subsequent discussions we have assumed that action by the several presidents of the appellant bank was, in each case, action by the bank itself, for we conclude that the president and such officers who acted herein had actual or ostensible authority to bind the bank in every way that it could be bound under the law. 4 Cal. Jur. 158; Jennings v. Bank of California, 79 Cal. 323, 21 P. 852, 5 L. R. A. 233, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145; Burnell v. S. F. Savings Union, 136 Cal. 499, 69 P. 144; Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 P. 695; Newton v. Johnston Organ, etc., Mfg. Co., 180 Cal. 185, 180 P. 7; Bartlett Est. Co. v. Fraser, 11 Cal. App. 373, 105 P. 130.

[10] Appellant further insists that the findings hereinabove discussed are without support in the evidence, and we agree also with that contention. The most that can be claimed under the evidence is that the appellant bank, in order to get security for the pre-existing loan made to respondent, W. C. Colley, promised the respondents that if the new notes were executed by them and the contract of sale and purchase assigned as security therefor, that if and when the land covered by said contract was sold, the bank would look to the purchase price received for payment of the loan, and, if it became necessary on account of untoward circumstances for respondents without a sale to quitclaim or release their equity back to the legal owner, that appellant should and would release respondents from personal liability on said notes. And that after said new notes were executed and the security given this promise was renewed and was relied upon when the quitclaim deed was executed and delivered.

[11] There is no evidence that the bank agreed to cancel the indebtedness outright, nor is there any evidence that it promised to release or forego the security afforded by the assignment of the contract. The assignment of this contract gave the appellant an equitable lien or mortgage upon said real property, enforceable against the property in the hands not only of the original contractor, but also in the hands of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees, and purchasers or incumbrancers with notice, actual or constructive. 17 Cal. Jur. 734, §§ 38-40; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. California Dev. Co., 171 Cal. 173, 152 P. 542.

[12] And no excuse can be found in the evidence for making the improvident promise to forego this security. Neither does the evidence fix any date or other time for the surrender to respondents of said notes, and the most favorable deduction that could be made from it in behalf of respondents is that said notes would be returned to them when and not until the security given for them had been realized upon. In short, giving the evidence the fullest weight, it amounts to no more, in legal effect, than a waiver by appellant bank of its claim for a deficiency judgment after a foreclosure or satisfaction of the equitable lien or mortgage given it by the assignment of the real estate contract.

Neither is there any evidence whatsoever that the Los Angeles bank assumed or agreed to pay or to become personally liable or liable in any other way for said indebtedness. There is likewise no evidence whatsoever of a substitution of the said bank in the place and stead of the respondents with intent to release them from the obligation of their notes.

The evidence further shows that the respondents were in default both to the Los Angeles bank and upon their other obligations; that they were threatened with and were themselves threatening bankruptcy at the time said quitclaim deed was executed. It is true that, at the time said deed was made, it was done on the advice and at the instigation of Mr. Witesman, the then president of appellant bank, but, as above pointed out, nothing was said or done by any representative of appellant which indicated an intention to release and satisfy said indebtedness. On the contrary, the clear inference is that appellant bank in so advising said quitclaim deed did not intend to satisfy said indebtedness, but, doubtless, thought that its rights would remain in statu quo, or probably be benefited by execution thereof. There is not one word of evidence that at the time of making the deed, or any other time, appellant promised to forego and surrender the security given it by the execution of said assignment.

[13] Summing up the whole situation, the inference is clear that, at most, the bank was moving in its own interests in trying to get security for its obligation and later to realize upon it, and was not in any sense intending to satisfy said indebtedness altogether, but was willing to release respondents from personal liability only upon said notes and surrender them only when said security had been exhausted. Had the court made findings and given judgment in accord with this construction of the effect of the evidence, we would have been constrained to hold that such an agreement would have been within the power of the appellant to make, for, in our opinion, such an act on the part of appellant would have been at most ultra vires under the second subdivision of the doctrine announced in Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, supra, and the appellant in such event would have been estopped from setting up this defense. This observation is also pertinent in the consideration of the appeal in cause 2, for, as we have observed, the court found said notes sued upon had been paid and gave judgment accordingly for respondents, who were defendants in the court below in cause 2.

[14] The defense that the bank had waived personal liability of defendants on the notes was not made. Neither was the defense that an independent action would not lie under section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure made. On the contrary, the court took the broad ground that said notes, by the execution of said quitclaim deed to a third party, had been thereby paid. As the cause may be retried, we feel called upon to say that, under the general powers of the appellant as a national banking corporation, and under Revised Statutes of the United States, section 5136 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9661), which grants "all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking," and section 5137 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9674), which confers the power to take, hold, and convey real property mortgaged to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, together with the right to convey or expose same to sale and purchase it thereat, appellant would be estopped to deny its power, in getting security for a pre-existing, unsecured debt, to make a valid agreement to release the respondents from personal liability on same, where they had in good faith executed to their detriment their covenants under such a contract. See Ohio & Miss. Ry. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 693. In Morris v. Third Nat. Bank of Springfield, Mass., 142 F. 25, 73 C. C. A. 211, the court said:

"A national bank may lawfully do many things in securing and collecting its loans, in the enforcement of its rights and the conservation of its property previously acquired, which it is not authorized to engage in as a primary business."

In First Nat. Bank v. Nat. Exch. Bank, 92 U. S. 122, 23 L. Ed. 679, the court said:

"* * * Authority is thus given to transact such a banking business as is specified, and all incidental powers necessary to carry it on are granted. These powers are such as are required to meet all the legitimate demands of the authorized business, and to enable a bank to conduct its affairs, within the general scope of its charter. * * * This necessarily implies the right of a bank to incur liabilities in the * * * course of its business, as well as to become the creditor of others. Its own obligations must be met, and debts due to it collected or secured. The power to adopt reasonable and appropriate measures for these purposes is an incident to the power to incur the liability or become the creditor. Obligations may be assumed that result unfortunately. * * * Compromises to avoid or reduce losses are oftentimes the necessary results. * * * These compromises come within the general scope of the powers committed to the * * * directors and the officers, * * * and are submitted to their judgment and discretion, except to the extent that they are restrained by the charter. * * * Banks may do, in this behalf, whatever natural persons could do under like circumstances."

See, also, Second Nat. Bank v. U. S. Fidelity & Guar. Co. (C. C. A.) 266 F. 489.

In Teale v. Rockport Granite Co., 224 Mass. 20, 25, 112 N. E. 497, it was said:

"Whatever transactions are fairly incidental or auxiliary to the main business of the corporation and necessary or expedient in the protection, care and management of its property, may be undertaken by the corporation and be within the scope of its corporate powers."

See, also, 14a C. J. 252. It was this principle that the court had in mind in the case of James Eva Estate v. Oakland B. & M. Co., 40 Cal. App. 515, 181 P. 415.

We deem it unnecessary to consider the further point raised by appellant that, because the covenants claimed were not contained in the contemporaneous written instruments, evidence in respect thereto would be inadmissible, for we have held, treating the evidence as admissible, that it is insufficient to support the findings.

The judgment of the court in cause 1 in declaring the notes paid and in ordering them to be delivered up for cancellation is clearly in excess of any relief warranted by the findings or the evidence. This observation is also true of the provisions authorizing, in case of nondelivery, a judgment against appellant bank for the principal sums mentioned in said notes, with interest from the 15th day of April, 1922.

In cause 2 the judgment was to the effect that the notes had been satisfied and discharged. The said judgment is likewise, for the reasons hereinabove pointed out, clearly in excess of any relief warranted by the evidence in the case; however, upon the facts as shown by the record here presented, the effect of this decision is to hold that respondents are entitled to be released from personal liability upon said obligations sued upon herein.

It therefore becomes necessary to reverse the judgment in both cases, and it is so ordered, with instructions to the court below to take such further proceedings in them as may be deemed advisable, not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

In re LETCHWORTH'S ESTATE.

RILEY, State Controller, v. LETCHWORTH.

1. Taxation ⚡856—"Inheritance tax" is on transfer or right to succeed to property (Inheritance Tax Act).

Tax imposed by Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1921, p. 1500) is imposed on the transfer of the property or on the right to succeed to the property, rather than on the property itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Inheritance Tax.]

2. Taxation ⚡872—Statute exempting property transferred to decedent not more than five years before death, by another decedent, where tax was paid thereon, exempts property for transfer of which tax was paid (Inheritance Tax Act, § 6, subd. 2[b]).

Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1921, p. 1500) § 6, subd. 2(b), providing that all property transferred by decedent to any person in specified class, if it was transferred to such decedent not more than five years prior to his death by another decedent of the same class and a tax paid thereon, shall be exempt, held to mean that property, for transfer of which tax was paid, should be exempt.

3. Courts ⚡95(1)—That decision in another state was rendered by divided court on misconception of earlier case held not to destroy persuasive effect.

Decision of court of another state held not to be without persuasive effect because it was rendered by divided court and was based on misconception of an earlier case before the same court.

4. Taxation ⚡872—Exemption allowed in computing inheritance tax on husband's estate devised to wife held not exempt in computing tax on wife's estate devised to sons, where wife died year after husband (Inheritance Tax, §§ 2, 6, subds. 2[b], 6).

Where husband devised estate to wife and exemption of $24,000 was allowed in computing inheritance tax and wife devised estate to sons and died less than a year after husband, held, that such $24,000 was not exempt in computing inheritance tax on wife's estate under Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1921, p. 1500), § 6, subd. 2(b), providing that property transferred by decedent to certain persons which was transferred to decedent not more than five years prior to his death by another decedent of same class shall be exempt where tax was paid thereon, in view of subdivision 6 of section 2.

5. Taxation ⚡860—Intention of statute, clearly apparent, must be given effect, though result be unjust or absurd (Inheritance Tax Act, § 6, subd. 2[b]).

In case language of Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1921, p. 1500) § 6, subd. 2(b), makes the legislative intent clearly apparent, it should be given its true meaning even though the result be unjust or absurd.

6. Taxation ⚡860—Section of statute must be construed to effect just and equal results if statute as a whole can be reasonably so construed (Inheritance Tax Act, particularly § 6, subd. 2[b]).

Court must construe Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1921, p. 1500) § 6, subd. 2(b), so as to effect just and equal results, rather than unjust and absurd results, if statute as a whole can be reasonably so construed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Sarah Evan Letchworth, deceased. Inheritance tax proceeding wherein Ray L. Riley, State Controller, was plaintiff, and William Pryor Letchworth was objector. From an order fixing the amount of the inheritance tax, the objector appeals. Reversed with directions.

V. Lewis Kaye, of Berkeley, for appellant.

George S. Dennison, Erwin P. Werner, and Adrian C. Stanton, all of Los Angeles, and Wesley E. Marten, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This appeal is from an order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles fixing the inheritance tax to be paid by the devisees under the last will and testament of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased. Sarah E. Letchworth was the surviving wife of Pierre E. Letchworth and the sole devisee under his will. Pierre E. Letchworth died June 1, 1924. His will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles and his estate was administered upon in said court. Pending the settlement of her deceased husband's estate, and on April 16, 1925, the said Sarah E. Letchworth died, leaving two sons as her sole devisees. Her will was also admitted to probate in said superior court and letters testamentary issued thereon. Upon the final settlement of the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, the property belonging to said estate was distributed to the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, and upon the final settlement of the latter estate the property belonging thereto was distributed to her two sons as her sole devisees. The property of the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, was appraised at $99,033.93. The expenses of administration, the debts of said deceased, and such other charges as were necessary to close said estate amounted to the sum of $11,546.31. The latter sum deducted from the total appraised value of said estate left $87,487.62 as the net value of the property of said estate. From this amount was deducted the sum of $24,000, the exemption allowed by the statute to the surviving wife. The amount remaining, the sum of $63,487.62, was the amount upon which an inheritance tax was actually paid in the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased. Due to the fact that the property left by the said Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, was income producing, the amount of property actually distributed in the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, as appraised in said estate, was $93,638.44. This property was distributed to the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, and was appraised in the latter estate at the sum of $102,190.44. In computing the tax to be paid by the heirs of said Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, the inheritance tax appraiser in said estate fixed the value of the property distributed to said estate upon which a tax had been actually paid in the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, at the sum of $65,510.77, which amount was found to be exempt from inheritance tax in the Sarah E. Letchworth estate under subdivision 2(b) of section 6 of the Inheritance Tax Act (Stats. 1921, chap. 821). It is not necessary for any purpose in this proceeding to discuss the method by which the inheritance tax appraiser arrived at the above result, except to state that in arriving at this result, among the deductions made by him from the appraised value of the property to which the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, succeeded from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, was the sum of $24,000, being the exemption allowed the wife under said statute. Upon the report of the inheritance tax appraiser the court fixed the tax to be paid by the heirs of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, and in accordance with said report, and it is from this order that this appeal has been taken.

It is conceded by respondent herein that said computation was erroneous in certain respects and that the amount of property distributed to the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, upon which a tax had been paid in the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, and which was therefore exempt from tax in the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, under said statute, was the sum of $78,190.94 instead of $65,510.77 as fixed by said inheritance tax appraiser. This amount was obtained by deducting from said sum of $102,190.94, the appraised value in the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, of the property distributed to said estate from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, the sum of $24,000, the exemption allowed the surviving wife under said statute. The principal controversy in this proceeding from its inception, and the only one now remaining after the concession of respondent just referred to, involves the right to deduct said sum of $24,000 from the appraised value of the property distributed from the estate of the husband to the estate of the wife for the purpose of determining the amount of property belonging to the wife's estate, which is exempt from an inheritance tax. The respondent contends that said deduction was proper and allowable under the terms of the statute and the amount of the exempt property coming from the husband's estate to the wife's estate was the sum of $78,190.94 only. Appellant, on the other hand, insists that said deduction should not be made and that no tax whatever should be paid by the devisees under the will of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, upon any part of said sum of $102,190.94 coming to her estate from that of her deceased husband.

The solution of this controversy depends upon the construction to be given to subdivision 2(b) of section 6 of the Inheritance Tax Act, already referred to, and which reads as follows:

"All property transferred by a decedent to any person described in the first subdivision of section four, providing the same was transferred to such decedent not more than five years prior to his death by another decedent of the class described in the first subdivision of section four, and a tax paid thereon, shall be exempt."

The persons "described in the first subdivision of section four," mentioned above, are "husband, wife, lineal ancestor, lineal issue of the decedent," etc. The facts in this case bring it squarely within the terms of subdivision 2(b) of said section 6. The property on which it is sought to collect a tax from the devisees under the will of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, was acquired by her by will from her husband within five years prior to her death and by her will this same property was devised to her two adult sons. Was all this property exempt from inheritance tax in the second or the wife's estate, or was only that portion of it exempt from tax which was not exempt from an inheritance tax in the estate of the deceased husband? In other words, was the exemption of $24,000 which the statute gave to Mrs. Letchworth as the surviving wife of her husband exempt also from an inheritance tax upon its transfer by her will to her two sons?

for the collection of an inheritance tax, that the tax imposed by the inheritance tax statute is on the transfer of the property or on the right to succeed to the property rather than on the property itself. In re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 P. 181; McDougald v. Low, 164 Cal. 107, 127 P. 1027; Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 204 P. 826; Estate of Bowditch, 189 Cal. 377, 208 P. 282, 23 A. L. R. 735; Estate of Watkinson, 191 Cal. 591, 217 P. 1073.

[2] Appellant argues, therefore, as the tax was on the transfer of the property and not on the property itself, that when the tax was paid by the Sarah E. Letchworth estate on the property transferred to it from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, it was paid upon the transfer of all of the property received by said estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, including that which was exempt from tax as well as that which was subject to tax. Accordingly, appellant insists that the tax having been paid on the transfer of all of said property from the Pierre E. Letchworth estate under subdivision 2(b) of said section 6, all of said property was exempt from tax in the Sarah E. Letchworth estate. Referring to said subdivision of the section and eliminating certain words therein for the present, we find the following language:

"All property transferred by a decedent to any person * * * not more than five years prior to his death by another decedent * * * and a tax paid thereon, shall be exempt."

This, without doubt, means that all property transferred under the conditions therein mentioned, on which transfer a tax had been paid, shall be exempt.

[3, 4] Was the tax in the Pierre E. Letchworth estate paid on the transfer of all of the property transferred therefrom to his wife's estate, or was it paid on the transfer of only that part thereof which was not exempt from tax? Appellant contends that the section above quoted clearly and unmistakably provides that the tax was paid on all of said property. We are not entirely convinced that this meaning clearly appears from the language used or that it so appears at all. To say the least, the meaning of the section just quoted may be said to be somewhat obscure. By reference, however, to other sections of the statute, the meaning of the one under consideration may be clarified to some extent. For instance, section 2 of the act provides:

"A tax shall be and is hereby imposed upon the transfer of any property, real, personal or mixed, or of any interest therein or income therefrom in trust or otherwise, to persons, institutions or corporations, not hereinafter exempted, to be paid to the treasurer of the proper county, as hereinafter directed, for the use of the state, said taxes to be upon the market value of such property at the rates hereinafter prescribed and only upon the excess over the exemptions hereinafter granted. * * *"

This section indicates that the tax is imposed "upon the transfer * * * only upon the excess over the exemption." In subdivision 6 of section 6 of the act it is provided:

"In computing the tax upon transfers subject to tax under the provisions of this act, the exemptions in this section allowed shall be deducted from the aggregate amount of property transferred, and the transfer of the remainder of the property after making such deduction shall be taxed at the rates at which it would have been taxed had no exemption whatever been allowed." (Italics ours.)

By this provision of the act it appears that "the transfer of the remainder of the property after making such deduction (the exemption) shall be taxed at the rates," etc. Further reference might be made to other provisions of the act for the purpose of determining the meaning of the said subsection, but the above are sufficient, we feel, to demonstrate the fallacy of the position of appellant. It must be apparent, we think, from the provisions of the statute above quoted, that the tax is only imposed upon the transfer of the excess over the exemptions and paid upon the remainder of the property after deducting the exemptions. This conclusion is in harmony with that reached by the Supreme Court of Iowa under a statute in many respects similar to our own. In re Nilson's Estate, 201 Iowa, 1033, 204 N. W. 244. That case is criticized by appellant for the reason that it was decided by a divided court, and for the further reason that it was based upon a misconception of an earlier case of said court and upon which the court relied in deciding the Nilson Case. Neither of these reasons in our opinion destroys the persuasive effect of the latter case.

[5, 6] There is another consideration which we think should be referred to in holding that the construction of said statute contended for by appellant is erroneous, and that is, the nature of the consequences that would follow in some cases if appellant's construction of said statute should be accepted by the courts. This can be illustrated by referring to a supposed case mentioned in respondent's brief. A married man died, leaving as his sole devisee his wife, and property of the clear market value of $24,000. Upon the settlement of this estate this property passed to his wife, and, as its value did not exceed the exemption allowed the wife under the statute, she would pay no inheritance tax thereon. Thereafter and within five years after the property was transferred to her the wife died, leaving this same property to an adult child as her sole devisee. As no tax was paid on the transfer of this property to the mother, her devisee, it is admitted by appellant, would be required to pay an inheritance tax on the transfer of said property to said devisee, except such as might be exempt by reason of the child's relationship to its mother. On the other hand, if the value of the property belonging to the husband at the time of his death was of the value of $25,000, that is $1,000 in excess of the exemption allowed the wife, then the wife on the transfer of said property to her would be required to pay a tax on such transfer to the extent of the rate fixed by law upon said sum, $1,000. Upon her death within five years after such transfer, leaving an adult child as her sole devisee and the property received by her from her husband's estate, then, according to appellant's contention, said devisee would not be required to pay any tax whatever on the transfer of any of said property received by the devisee from the mother for the reason that the mother had paid a tax on the transfer of the property received by her from her husband's estate computed on $1,000 valuation over and above her exemption as wife. In the one case the heir would pay a tax on the transfer of the property computed on $24,000, and in the other the heir would pay no tax whatever, although in the latter case the heir would receive a greater amount of property than in the former. Looking at these two supposed cases from the standpoint of the state, and giving the statute the construction contended for it by appellant, in the first case no inheritance tax would be paid on the transfer from the husband to the surviving wife, but on the transfer from the mother to her adult child a tax would be computed on $14,000 ($24,000, less $10,000 exemption). In the second of the supposed cases, where the value of the property was $25,000, a tax would be paid on the transfer from the husband to the surviving wife, computed on $1,000, but on the transfer from the mother to her devisee, because a tax had been paid computed on $1,000 on the transfer of the property to the mother, no tax whatever would be paid by said devisee. The amount of taxes received by the state from the two transfers where the property was of the value of $24,000 would be $140. In the second of these cases, where the property of the value of $25,000, the amount of taxes received by the state from the two transfers would be $10. We cannot attribute to the Legislature an intention to accomplish such an unequal and unjust result. Of course, if the intention of the Legislature were clearly apparent from the language of the section, it should be given its true meaning as indicated by such language, even though the result might be unjust or even absurd. But where no such clear intent is to be found in the section, but on the other hand the statute as a whole can be reasonably construed in favor of just and equal results, it is the duty of the court to adopt such construction. San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 221, 128 P. 924; In re Haines, 195 Cal. 605, 234 P. 883.

For the above reasons we are of the opinion that the action of the inheritance tax appraiser in including in the property subject to a tax in the estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, the $24,000 of property received from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased, was correct, and the order of the trial court in approving the report of the inheritance tax appraiser in that respect and fixing the tax in said estate, in so far as said order was based upon that part of said report, was proper. The other deductions made by said inheritance tax appraiser, and which the respondent concedes to have been improper, the court approved, and to this extent the order fixing the tax in said estate was erroneous. For this reason the said order is reversed with directions to the lower court to fix the tax in said estate of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, in accordance with the views expressed herein. In so doing it will compute said tax on said amount of $24,000, but on no part of said sum of $78,190.94, property received by the Sarah E. Letchworth estate from the estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased.

The tax to be paid by each of the sons of Sarah E. Letchworth, deceased, would therefore be computed as follows:

One-half residue of property of estate after deductions for expense of administration..	$50,376 21
One-half joint tenancy.....	12,500 00
Total	$62,876 21
$39,095 47 Exempt by reason of tax paid in estate of Pierre E. Letchworth, deceased.
10,000 00 Statutory exemption.
904 50 at 2 per cent.....	$ 19 09
12,876 21 at 4 percent.....	515 05
Total tax.....	$533 14

STENZEL v. KRONICK. (L. A. 9214.)

Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 662(2)—Judge's statement that he exercised discretion in certifying transcript held to show relief granted from default in notifying clerk to prepare it (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, 953a).

Where trial judge expressly stated that he exercised his discretion in certifying transcript, presented under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, it sufficiently appeared that appellant was granted relief, under section 473, from default in not notifying clerk to prepare it within ten days after notice of judgment, though it did not affirmatively appear that appellant formally applied for such relief or even presented adequate excuses.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 757(1)—Appending supplement, largely devoted to evidence, to appellant's opening brief, held sufficient compliance with Code requirements as to printing record in brief.

Appending supplement of over 100 pages, largely devoted to excerpts from evidence, to appellant's opening brief, held sufficient compliance with Code requirements as to printing record in brief to justify denial of motion to affirm judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by A. E. Stenzel against Harry B. Kronick. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On plaintiff's motion to affirm the judgment. Motion denied.

Rose & McTavish, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Packard, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff and respondent herein has moved this court to affirm the judgment in his favor, from which this appeal has been taken, upon two grounds: (a) That no sufficient record is before the Supreme Court upon which said court can predicate error; (b) that no sufficient record on appeal in this case has been printed in appellant's brief.

The facts upon which the respondent predicates his motion are these: The judgment herein in plaintiff's favor was made and entered on December 19, 1923. Notice of entry of said judgment was served upon attorneys for the defendant on December 29, 1923. The defendant's notice and demand for the preparation of the transcript was filed with the clerk of the trial court on January 16, 1924, 16 days from and after the time of the receipt of the notice of entry of judgment. The transcript on appeal was presented to the trial court for certification under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure on February 23, 1924. The bill of exceptions dis-closes that the plaintiff appeared in the trial court and objected to the certification of the transcript upon the ground that the defendant's notice to the clerk to prepare the same had not been given within ten days after notice of entry of judgment. While it does not appear that the defendant in response to said objections made a formal motion for relief from his default under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it does affirmatively appear therein that the trial judge "exercised his discretion in favor of certifying said transcript," and thereupon made an order that the same be settled, allowed, and certified as and for the bill of exceptions in said cause.

[1] The respondent in support of the first ground urged upon his motion chiefly relies upon the decision of this court in the case of Des Granges v. Des Granges, 175 Cal. 71, 165 P. 13. The appellant in resisting the motion cites and chiefly relies upon the case of In re Barney, also decided by this court and reported in 191 Cal. 18, 214 P. 853. In the case of Des Granges v. Des Granges, supra, this court held that the action of the trial court in certifying to the record in that case was erroneous; but in so holding the court expressly stated that:

"It does not appear that the plaintiff at the hearing, or at any other time asked for any relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or attempted to offer any explanation to excuse her failure to comply with the provisions of section 953a. There was presented, in fact, no opportunity for the exercise of any discretion by the court."

In the case of In re Barney, supra, on the other hand, it appeared that while the defendant made no formal application for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, she appeared at the time of the certification thereof and stated certain reasons going to excuse her default, and that thereupon the trial court exercised its discretion and by certifying to the transcript, in effect, relieved the appellant from her said default. In the case of Rubin v. Platt Music Co. (Cal. App.) 251 P. 243, that court in commenting upon an identical situation held that when objections to the certification of the transcript were presented in the trial court and the transcript was thereafter settled and certified to by it, such settlement and certification was the equivalent of relief from the default. We are of the opinion that these two later cases have more immediate application to the instant proceeding than has our former decision in the case of Des Granges v. Des Granges, supra. Herein the trial court has expressly stated that it exercised its discretion in the settlement and certification of the transcript after the respondent's objection thereto had been urged. The only subject upon which the trial court under such circumstances would be called upon to exercise its discretion would be that of relieving the defendant from his said default, and while it does not affirmatively appear herein that the defendant formally applied for such relief, or even that he presented adequate excuses, nevertheless we are of the opinion that it sufficiently appears that he was granted relief from his default under the power of the court so to do, given in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondent's motion upon his first ground urged should therefore be denied.

[2] As to the second ground urged for the granting of said motion, an inspection of the record discloses that the appellant herein has appended to his opening brief a supplement of more than 100 pages, largely devoted to excerpts from the evidence in the case. In so doing we think he has shown a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Code in that particular to justify a denial of the respondent's motion, also upon this ground.

The motion to affirm the judgment upon both grounds is therefore denied.

Ex parte BABBICK. (Cr. 1389.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. April 2, 1927.

Habeas corpus ⇨79—Habeas corpus will be denied where return shows trial court minutes were corrected as to matters complained of (Pen. Code, § 464).

Application for habeas corpus to secure release from custody on conviction of burglary with explosives, under Pen. Code, § 464, on ground that such count was dismissed and defendant thereafter found guilty, and also that minutes of court failed to show jury was sworn, will not be granted where return thereto showed minutes of trial court were corrected to speak truth, showing that such count was not dismissed, and that jury was duly sworn.

Original application for habeas corpus by Louis Babbick, to be directed to the Warden of San Quentin Prison, to secure petitioner's release from custody upon conviction of burglary with explosives. Writ discharged.

William J. Gloria and Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. The petition recites that Louis Babbick is unlawfully detained in the state prison at San Quentin by the warden thereof. Proceeding, it alleges that on or about May 21, 1926, the district attorney of Los Angeles county filed an information in the superior court of said county charging petitioner in one count thereof with a violation of the provisions of section 464 of the Penal Code (burglary with explosives) and in a second count with another felony, to wit, receiving stolen goods. It is then alleged that petitioner pleaded not guilty to the information, and was placed on trial in said superior court, such trial commencing July 6, 1926, and ending July 9th of the same year; that the minutes of the proceedings of said court, had during such period, show that, on motion of the district attorney, count 1 of the information was dismissed, and that petitioner was thereafter found guilty under this count as charged; that thereafter, on July 13, 1926, petitioner was sentenced to be imprisoned in the state prison at San Quentin by reason of said conviction, and that he is now confined therein. It is claimed that the judgment of conviction is void for the reason that the minutes of the trial court show that count 1 of the information (the count which charges violation of section 464 of the Penal Code—burglary with explosives) was dismissed, and the jury thereafter found petitioner guilty of such charge.

Claim is also made that the minutes of the court fail to show that the jury was sworn to try defendant. The return to the petition shows that the minutes of the trial court have been corrected to speak the truth. As corrected, it appears therefrom that it was the second count of the information that was dismissed and not the first. It further appears that the jury was duly sworn to try the case.

It follows that the writ should be, and it is hereby, discharged.

BAVIN & BURCH CO. v. BARD et al.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 15, 1927.)

1. Contracts ⇨232(4) — Owner is not liable for costs of changes unless express provision in building contract for modifications to be written is complied with.

A provision in building contract requiring written order of architect and agreement as to price prior to any modifications is designed for protection of owner, and contractor not complying therewith cannot hold owner for extra work.

2. Contracts ⇨232(4)—Contractor complied with requirement that modifications of contract be in writing, where architect confirmed verbal orders with written orders during work.

Contractor for altering building for theater substantially complied with provision requiring modifications to be upon written order from architect, where architect during progress of work issued written orders soon after verbal orders for changes; there being no charge of bad faith or denial that benefits accrued to premises.

3. Contracts ⇨294—Substantial compliance fulfills any contract, but its determination is individual question in each case.

Substantial compliance meets requirements of any contract, but what constitutes it must be determined in each individual case.

4. Contracts ⇨232(4)—Architect's written orders for changes in building contract related back to oral orders therefor under circumstances.

Under circumstances of case, each of architect's written orders for changes in building alteration contract issued during progress of work soon after his verbal orders therefor related back to date of verbal order, constituting with the verbal order but one transaction.

5. Contracts ⇨232(4)—Owner by admitting building contractor's claim, except amount held to have rescinded contract requirement that alterations be in writing.

Where plaintiff building contractor alleged furnishing extra work and materials with consent of defendant owners and lessees, and they so admitted, but denied alleged value, the only question was one of value, and defendants would be deemed to have rescinded contract provision requiring modifications to be in writing.

6. Contracts ⇨232(4)—Parties may rescind building contract provision requiring modifications to be in writing.

Parties may rescind provision in building contract requiring modifications to be only upon written order of architect, and may agree to alterations by parol.

7. Contracts ⇨232(2)—Duty of contractor to procure permits and comply with ordinances did not include liability for alterations required by city during remodeling of building.

Contractor was not liable for cost of alterations required by city during work in changing building to theater, under clause that contractor should procure permits and be liable for loss due to violation of city ordinances or laws.

8. Contracts ⇨300(3)—Owner is not entitled to set-off against building contractor for delay without damages caused by altering plans.

Owner is not entitled to set-off for delay against building contractor whose performance is delayed beyond contract time for completion by alteration in plans during work and where no damages are shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Bavin & Burch Company, a corporation, against L. L. Bard and others, to foreclose lien for labor and materials. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James, Pace, Smith & Younkin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff sues to recover on an express contract for work and labor performed for, and materials furnished to, defendants. It seeks, further, to enforce a claim of lien against the premises benefited by such labor and materials. Judgment went for plaintiff against defendants, and the case comes here on appeal by defendants.

The defendants Bard and Berkowitz are lessees of the premises owned by the remaining defendants, and the judgment was against the said lessees only, with decree foreclosing the lien.

There is no question presented involving the procedure as to the lien as separate from the judgment, nor is there any controversy as to the rights of the defendants in their separate capacities as owners or lessees. The questions raised concern the judgment; and for the purposes hereof it will be deemed that if the judgment should be affirmed, in whole or in part, the lien follows.

Plaintiff and defendants (Bard and Berkowitz) entered into a written contract, wherein the said defendants were described as owners and the plaintiff as contractor. The dispute between the parties involves certain charges made for extras under the contract. The original work specified was duly performed and the price paid, and no controversy is presented as to such work or payment. It may be stated that the contract was quite general in its terms, and consists of an agreement, plans, specifications, drawings, and an addenda to the specifications. From none of these does it appear precisely what was to be done under the original undertaking. This may be due merely to the absence of the drawings, and possibly by reason of the fact that the questions here for determination do not require such detail. The general purpose of the contract was the renovation and alteration of the premises in order to convert the existing building into a moving picture theater. In studying the original agreement it seems obvious, and the case as a whole supports the conclusion, that the parties were not informed as to exactly what might be necessary to secure the result desired, as would appear in part from a provision of the contract as follows:

"Should the owners at any time during the progress of work require any alterations, deviations from, additions to or omissions from the contract, or the drawings or specifications, they shall be at liberty to do so, and the same shall in no way affect or make void this contract, but the amount thereof shall be added to or deducted from the amount of the contract price as the same may be by fair and reasonable valuation."

The claim of plaintiff, and upon which the trial court predicated its judgment, embraces some 30 items for extras in the way of labor and materials. Without giving the items in detail, they were referred to throughout the records as orders, and they may be divided into three groups, as follows: Orders 1 to 5, inclusive; 6 to 26 inclusive (incidentally, here it may be noted that there was no order 25); orders 28, 29, 30. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $5,882.39.

The argument of appellants is as follows:

First. Lack of written orders for various items of extra work.

Second. Extras caused by reason of plaintiff's failure to comply with requirements of city building department.

Third. Items charged as extras which were provided for in original contract.

Fourth. Failure of evidence to sustain findings on certain items.

Fifth. Failure of court to allow credit for items omitted from original contract.

Sixth. Set-off claimed as damages for delay in completion.

1. Lack of Written Orders.—Necessarily of controlling importance here are the terms of the contract. In the contract it is provided:

"No changes or modifications from the plans and specifications will be permitted excepting upon written permission from the architect, and the cost of any such change, whether a deduction or extra, must be agreed upon in writing before the same is started. The architect reserves the right to make any such changes or deviations without in any way invalidating the contract or bond."

The facts as disclosed by the evidence are that it was the practice of the architect to visit the work at frequent intervals and go over the requirements with the contractor. When there appeared the necessity for any particular item agreed upon as an extra, the architect would orally direct the contractor to proceed and the price would be fixed. Thereafter a written order would follow. With the exception of orders 28, 29, and 30, the contractor did receive a written order from the architect for every item claimed as extra work, and in each instance the order was received before the work was completed. As to the items excepted there were no written orders. The testimony regarding orders 6-26 is not at all clear. All that appears concerning these is the statement that these orders were prepared by the contractor and left at the office of the architect, and that they would usually lay around for a week or so, and that the work on some of the items was commenced before the orders were actually received.

[1] The provision in the contract requiring the written order of the architect and agreement as to price is a provision designed for the protection of the owner and is to be construed in his favor. Courts generally have held this provision in a building contract as valid and binding, and have further held that without compliance therewith by the contractor the owner cannot be charged for extra work. The California cases are in accord with the general rule. Gray v. La Société Francaise, 131 Cal. 566, 569, 63 P. 848; White v. S. R. & S. Q. R. Co., 50 Cal. 417. Indeed, in almost every jurisdiction the rule is accepted, through in some courts a tendency has developed to modify the strictness of the rule by declaring a waiver when benefits have been accepted and retained. The purpose of a provision of this sort in a contract is to protect the owner from unnecessary or unwarranted expense and to assure him that there will be some limit to his outlay. The average person desiring to construct a home or other building would be wholly at the mercy of his architect and contractor if the courts were to hold such a provision ineffectual for any purpose. No harm can come to the contractor, nor can any loss or damage ensue to him, by a strict enforcement of a provision of this character. He has his contract, and is bound only by the provisions thereof. He is not obliged to do anything extra without the written order, and knows that if he does he must speculate upon the owner's pleasure as far as payment is concerned. We are called upon to determine whether or not this provision in the present contract has been met.

Appellants concede that the labor for which payment is sought was actually performed, and that likewise the materials were supplied. They accept the finding of the court that the charge was reasonable, and the record discloses that the benefits of the labor and material have accrued to the premises. They rest their whole contention upon the words of the contractor "before the same is started" in the provision quoted.

The transcript shows that the general work to be done under the contract was tied up with the extras; in other words, it was not a case of completion of the first agreement and then something additional, but the extras were interjected into the work as it progressed and were an integral part thereof. The situation was foreseen, obviously, in the execution of the contract itself. As we have seen, the work in hand was the alteration of an existing building for a specific purpose, and was initiated under general plans. No one knew just what each day would develop in the necessities of the situation. The owner for his protection inserted the clause as to extras, and placed in charge his representative, the architect. The contractor in turn was obliged to look to the architect for his directions, and for his protection to receive from him written orders as to the requirements. The contractor did attempt to secure these written orders from the architect and was successful. However, anticipating to a certain extent, he would on the oral order alone commence his work, expecting to receive immediately the written order confirming the previous directions.

[2, 3] We would not decide at this time that the possession of a written order obtained long after the work had been completed would always be a sufficient answer to a contention similar to the claim of appellants here. But, in case, as in the instant one, where there is no lack of good faith charged, where the owner has had the protection of his architect before the commencement of the work, and has accepted the benefits of the work and materials, it would indeed be too strict a construction to hold that the contractor must lose the value of his outlay and labor. This court will hold that under the present state of facts as outlined there has been no breach, confining the effect of this conclusion to the facts involved here and declining to announce any general rule. Indeed, it would be beyond human ingenuity to anticipate every set of facts which might arise and cover them with one general rule. We will approve and uphold the doctrine prevailing as to the necessity of compliance with these requirements, and treat each case on its own facts where a different doctrine is contended for. In the present case it is unnecessary to deviate from the established authorities or to modify the rulings in any respect. We hold simply that under the facts here brought out the contractor did make a sufficient and substantial compliance with both the letter and spirit of this provision of the contract to entitle him to recover. We deem citation of authority unnecessary to support this view. An exhaustive search has failed to disclose any case at all similar in its facts. Nor do we need to refer at length to the law of contracts generally, it being sufficient to rely on one of its elementary and well settled principles, namely, that a substantial compliance meets the requirements of any obligation. Just what acts will constitute a compliance sufficient to meet the requirements of the law is a question to be determined in each individual case. In this case almost as a question of fact we determine that the contractor and architect, as well, have made a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the contract. On the question of substantial compliance reference may be had to Ruling Case Law, vol. 6, p. 966 et seq.; Cal Jur. vol. 6, p. 415 et seq., each of the foregoing citing numerous cases from various jurisdictions. In hardly any case will the facts be found as compelling as in the instant case. Here the owner has designated the architect as his representative on the work, and has given him the discretion to determine what shall be classed as extras, but requiring of the contractor that all extras be approved by said architect in writing before the work was commenced. The written order of the architect obviously was intended to safeguard the owner against unwarranted claims for extras or unfair charges. This protection is fully given if the architect at any time during the progress of the work on the extras gives the written order after he has first approved and ordered it as was done here.

In the case of Abells v. City of Syracuse, 7 App. Div. 501, 40 N. Y. S. 233, a question similar to the one at bar arose, wherein the commissioner, occupying a position parallel with that of the architect here, had not given his order before the work had been commenced but did so afterwards. The court said:

"This provision of the contract could be * * * waived, * * * and, whether waived or not, it was ratified and adopted by the commissioner in writing, which was an equivalent to an original authority in writing."

[4] In the instant case we hold that the written orders of the architect complied with the requirements of the contract, that these orders issued in close relationship in point of time to verbal orders given by him, and that the whole constituted but one transaction, and the written orders given subsequent to work commenced related back to the date of the original verbal order.

This disposes of orders 1 to 6, inclusive, and orders 7 to 26, inclusive.

The remaining items are embraced in orders 28, 29, and 30. The court found that these were executed and performed at the instance and request of defendants, and fixed the reasonable value of the three items at the sum of $748.81.

[5] It is conceded that there were no written orders from the architect for any of these items; but respondent contends that the appellants are precluded from raising the question as to lack of written orders by reason of their having failed to urge it in the court below, either by pleading or by timely objection. As to the pleadings, plaintiff alleged the contract, and that it had performed extra work and furnished materials to the reasonable value of $5,589.74. Defendants admitted that plaintiff had performed extra work and furnished materials, but denied the reasonable value thereof was greater than $2,250. Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that all of the improvements alleged were made with the full knowledge and consent of the defendants. Defendants Bard and Berkowitz in the answer so admitted. The only issue therefore presented to the trial court by the pleadings was on the question of reasonable value. At the trial, when plaintiff offered in evidence the bills for the work and materials embraced in orders 28, 29, and 30, the same were admitted and received without objection, and no subsequent or any motion to strike was made. The defendant Bard, testifying in his own behalf, stated:

"When the bills finally came to us from the architect, we looked them over and made our objections immediately. We based our objections on the fact that to a layman they looked entirely too high."

The court found, in response to the issues and the evidence, the reasonable value of these items 28, 29, and 30; and also found, as admitted in the pleadings, that the work represented by them was done with the full knowledge and consent of the defendants. Appellants, in reply to the contention of respondent, argues that no waiver was pleaded, and that a waiver must be affirmatively alleged and proved. Conceding this to be true, it does not necessarily follow that a waiver may not arise as a matter of law. Indeed, we may grant there was not a waiver as such, but rather a failure to urge a right claimed; but whether it be a waiver or otherwise, the fact is that the question was and is not before the court for determination. Reviewing the record, as stated, it is evident that the court was compelled to find according to the admission in the pleadings and the issues raised therein.

[6] Whether the contract provided against extra work except agreed in writing is immaterial, for the parties could rescind the provision in the contract if they chose, and agree to alterations by parol. This proposition is firmly established in the case of McFadden v. O'Donnell, 18 Cal. 160, and in the case of Headley v. Cavileer, 82 N. J. Law, 635, 82 A. 908, found in 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) at page 564, accompanied by an exhaustive annotation. Surely there could be no greater evidence of rescission than the sworn statement or admission of the owner that the alterations were made with his full knowledge and consent, and his failure or refusal to raise the question at the trial. While we have indicated heretofore the disposition of the California courts to uphold and enforce stipulations in contracts requiring written orders, yet many cases may arise where these stipulations would meet the description given them by other courts, viz., a "cutthroat" claim in building contracts liable to entrap the unwary contractor (Elgin v. Joslyn, 36 Ill. App. 301), "a shabby defense to set up" (Myers v. Sarl, 14 Eng. Ruling Case Law, 656).

This disposes of items 28, 29, 30; and it might likewise suffice for the orders 1-26 hereinbefore discussed. However, as some effort was made to raise issue at the trial on orders 1-26, we have given appellants their opportunity for determination of the point involved.

2. Extras Caused by Reason of Failure of Plaintiff to Comply with Requirements of City Building Department.—The contract provides:

"Contractors shall take out all building permits, and owners shall not in any way be answerable for any loss or costs by reason of the violation of city ordinances or other laws by the contractor or any one working through or under it."

[7] The situation disclosed by the record is that after examination of the premises, and from time to time as the work progressed, it developed that the premises were not of an original construction to permit the change contemplated, namely, the change to a moving picture house. The building had formerly been used for other purposes, and the building department of the city of Los Angeles informed the owners that the proposed changes could not be made in the building without some alterations in the structure itself. Through no fault of the contractor, and unconnected with its contract, these requirements had to be met. Accordingly the architect, after consultation with the owners, gave his written instructions to the contractor to proceed with these alterations as extras within the terms of the contract so providing. Obviously the contractor is entitled to his recovery, and particularly so in the contract here under review, where, as before indicated, the plans were general and the work to be performed left much to be determined as the plan progressed.

3. Items Charged as Extra Work that are Provided for by the Original Contract.—On these items we are content to accept the finding of the trial court, made upon sufficient evidence unnecessary to detail here. The claim of appellants hereunder is based upon a construction of certain provisions in the plans, in themselves general and indefinite. All of these items were considered by the architect as being extras, and he was designated by the owners as the sole arbiter of the question, and the trial court, as indicated, found that they were extras and allowed compensation therefor, which finding will not be disturbed.

4. Failure of Evidence as to Certain Items or Orders Allowed.—In these instances we find sufficient evidence, though conflicting, to sustain the finding of the trial court.

5. Credits for Items Omitted from Original Contract.—The work covered 30 items of extras and alterations, and the original contract involved an expenditure of $20,000. After an attempt at analysis of some of the provisions in the original contract, appellants present their contention to this court as follows:

"Clearly the undisputed testimony demands some allowance for omitted work, and the finding to the contrary and the refusal of the court to allow any credit is wholly without support."

The functions of this court are perhaps sufficiently speculative in themselves without assuming new burdens. We will accept the finding of the trial court rather than attempt to locate and determine what this claimed "some allowance" might be.

6. Failure to Allow Set-off as for Damages for Delay in Completion.—The contract provides:

"Contractor agrees to complete the work hereby contracted for in sixty working days from the date of the contract. It is further agreed that the said contractor shall not be held responsible for any delays caused by the owners or their representatives."

[8] The trial judge found:

"That the failure of said plaintiff to complete the work described in said original contract within the time therein specified is due wholly to the extra work which said plaintiff was required by said Bard and Berkowitz to do in connection with the original contract; and said plaintiff could and would have completed the work described in said contract within the time therein specified, except for the extra work which it was required to do by said Bard and Berkowitz. That said defendants have not nor has any of them been damaged in any amount by reason of the failure of said plaintiff to complete said alteration and remodeling work within the time provided in said contract."

The admitted fact is that the contractor took 14 or 15 additional days in completing the entire work, including the extras. The evidence shows, and it is not disputed, that the work would and could have been finished were it not for the extra work ordered by the owners.

Appellants cite the case of Dermott v. Jones, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 220, 228, 229, 16 L. Ed. 442. The case is not in point or at all illuminating as to the question here presented. The testimony shows that approximately 30 per cent. of the entire work was extras ordered by the defendants and which the contractor was obligated to perform at their direction. The evidence fully supports the finding of the court. Further, the only evidence as to damage was the testimony of Bard that the rental value of the premises was $3,000 per month. Conceding the rental value to be as stated, there is not one word of direct testimony that there was any loss of rental, or that the premises were not in condition to be used for any period other than as we might draw the inference from the fact that the building was undergoing extensive repairs.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GHIO. (Cr. 1452.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California, March 24, 1927.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 823(2)—In prosecution for violating statute relative to bets on races, instruction that contention was that conduct violated four laws held not misleading, in view of other instructions (Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a).

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a, relative to bets on races, instruction that state's contention, was not that four acts were committed, but that same course of conduct violated four laws, held not misleading, in view of remainder of instructions, especially where jury acquitted on three of four charges.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 29—Bookmaking, occupying room with bookmaking paraphernalia, receiving bets on races, recording bets, permitting use of room for such purposes, and making or accepting bets held separate felonies (Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a).

Bookmaking, occupying room with bookmaking paraphernalia to record bets in races, receiving bets on races, recording bets on races, owner permitting room to be used for such purposes, and making or accepting bets on races, are separate felonies, though they are all defined in Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a.

3. Gaming $\S$ 96—In prosecution for violating statute relative to bets on horse races, it is unnecessary to show that race was run (Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a).

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a, relative to bets on horse races, it is not necessary that prosecution shall prove that any actual horse race was run, since statute includes purported, as well as actual, contests of speed.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 823(4)—Instruction it was immaterial what day offenses were committed, if error, held harmless, in view of other instructions (Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a).

In prosecution for violating four subdivisions of Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a, relative to bets on races, charged, in separate counts, instruction that it was immaterial as to what day or days offense or offenses charged were committed, if within one year from filing of information, if error, held not reversible, in view of other instructions, including instruction as to rule of reasonable doubt.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 665(1)—Exclusion of witnesses is in court's discretion.

Motion to exclude witnesses is addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(3)—In prosecution for receiving bets on horse races, any error in testimony that defendant had "card" room held cured by defendant's testimony.

In prosecution for receiving bets on horse races, any error in officer's testimony that there was card room in rear of defendant's premises, fitted with two card tables, as against motion to strike "card" as conclusion, held cured by defendant's testimony on direct examination that he was licensed to run card room.

7. Gaming $\S$ 97(1)—In prosecution for receiving bets on horse races, evidence that witness placed bet for purpose of securing evidence held admissible; "bet"; "wager" (Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a).

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 337a, for receiving bets on horse races, evidence that witness placed bet for purpose of securing evidence held admissible, since words "bet" and "wager," as used in such section, do not require kind of agreement contemplated by law of contracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bet; Wager—Wagering Contract.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Joe Ghio was convicted of receiving bets on horse races, and he appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Tyler, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Defendant was charged in two informations with violations of section 337a of the Penal Code. By stipulation of counsel the cases were tried together. Information No. 47988 charged the defendant with the crime of violation of subdivision 3 of section 337a of the Penal Code on or about the 5th day of March, 1926, by receiving bets on horse races. Information No. 47989 is not included in the record; but it appears from the instructions of the court that this information charged the defendant in three separate counts with violations of certain subdivisions of section 337a of the Penal Code on or about the 3d day of December, 1925, as follows: With occupying a room for the purpose of recording bets on horse races and selling pools thereon, with receiving bets on horse races and with recording bets on horse races. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as to the charge in information No. 47988, and a verdict of not guilty as to the charges in information No. 47989. Defendant appeals from the judgment following the verdict on information No. 47988.

Thomas E. Remington, a police officer of San Diego, testified that on March 3, 4, and 5, 1926, he went to defendant's place of business, which consisted of a cigar and candy store, with a card room in the rear; that at said time horse races were being run at Tia Juana; that on his first visit the officer placed with defendant a bet of $1 on a Tia Juana horse race; that on the next day he placed a similar bet with the defendant, and that on March 5th he placed a third bet with the defendant; that at each time the defendant made a notation of the bet on a scratch pad and telephoned the names of the horses, the initials of the witness, and the amount of the bet; that the witness was familiar with bookmaking; and that he went to defendant's place of business for the purpose only of securing evidence. It further appears that Officer Ward gave to Officer Remington money with which to place bets with the defendant; and that on one occasion during the early part of March he saw Officer Remington enter the defendant's store. Certain bookmaker's paraphernalia were found at defendant's place of business and received in evidence. The defendant testified that he had not placed any bets with the complaining witness, and that he did not have any knowledge of the bookmaker's paraphernalia which were found concealed in his place of business.

[1, 2] Appellant complains of certain instructions. The trial court instructed the jury that:

"It is not the contention that there were four different acts here committed by the defendant at the time and places mentioned in the information. The contention is that the same act, same course of conduct, violates four different laws."

Appellant urges that the jury was confused and misled by the language used in this portion of the instruction. The remainder of the instruction reads as follows:

"It all relates to the same set or series of acts; and it will be for you to determine whether or not he is guilty of one, two, three, or four of these charges, or whether he is not guilty of any one of them. And unless you are satisfied; as I have said, beyond a reasonable doubt that he has committed one or more of these acts, then it will be your duty to acquit him on all four of the charges."

We do not believe the jury was confused or misled by this instruction, especially when it is remembered that the jury found the defendant not guilty as to the three counts charged in information No. 47989 and guilty only as to the count charged in information No. 47988. Section 337a of the Penal Code contains six subdivisions, and is so framed that one set or series of acts might constitute a violation of each or all of said subdivisions. By its provisions the following acts are made felonies: In subdivision 1, bookmaking or pool selling; in subdivision 2, occupying a room with bookmaking paraphernalia for the purpose of recording bets on races; 3, receiving bets on races; 4, recording bets on races; 5, owner permitting room or building to be used for any of the preceding purposes; 6, making or accepting bets on races. Each of these constitutes a separate offense, as if it had been enacted in a separate section of the Code. In re Roberts, 157 Cal. 472, 108 P. 315; People v. Plath, 166 Cal. 227, 135 P. 954.

[3] Appellant next complains of the following instruction as not being in accord with the spirit of section 337a of the Penal Code:

"It is not necessary, in connection with any one of these counts, that the prosecution shall prove that there was any actual horse race run. If the other elements of the offense have been established beyond a reasonable doubt, the question of whether the horse race was actually run at Tia Juana, or anywhere else; it is not necessary that that should be proven by the prosecution."

In People v. Sutherland, 59 Cal. App. 462, 210 P. 965, the defendant was convicted of violation of subdivision 4 of section 337a of the Penal Code, and the court said, page 463 (210 P. 966):

"It was not necessary that it be actually established that the races upon which bets were being taken were actually being run at the time. People v. Carroll, 54 Cal. App. 684, 202 P. 885."

The language of section 337a of the Penal Code includes purported as well as actual contests of speed. We find no error in this instruction.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that the court erred in giving the following instruction, for the reason that part of the jurors might believe that one of the acts constituting the offense had been committed, while other jurors might believe that other acts constituting the offense had been committed. The instruction reads:

"The court instructs the jury that it is wholly immaterial as to what day or days the offense, or offenses, charged in the information was committed, if at all, provided you believe from the evidence that the offense, or offenses, were committed, and that the same was committed within one year prior to the filing of the information in this case."

Appellant loses sight of the fact that each count charged a different offense under different subdivisions of section 337a of the Penal Code. In re Roberts, supra; People v. Plath, supra. In People v. Wyett, 49 Cal. App. 289, 193 P. 153, the information contained two counts charging different crimes, and a similar instruction was given. The court said (page 291 [193 P. 154]):

"The foregoing instruction was expressly disapproved in the case of People v. Elgar, 36 Cal. App. 114, 171 P. 697, and would seem to be subject to the strictures made upon it in that case. The trial court, however, fully instructed the jury in other portions of its charge with respect to the duty of each member of the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant upon the first of said counts, and also and in a separate and distinct charge as to the second of said counts in the information. It would seem, therefore, that, taking the charge of the court as a whole, the jury could not have been so far misled by the indefiniteness of the above instruction as to have expressly found the defendant guilty upon each of said counts separately, but that their verdict as to each was the result of their unanimous conclusion as to his guilt upon each of said counts. We do not, therefore, feel that we should reverse this case upon that ground."

In the instant case the jury was fully instructed as to the rule of reasonable doubt. Each of the counts, defendant's plea thereto, and the issues raised were fully set forth in the instructions to the jury. The jury were told that the burden was upon the prosecution to prove one or two or all of the material allegations in the informations to their satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt. We find no reversible error in this instruction.

[5] Defendant's motion to exclude witnesses was denied. This is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. People v. Garbutt, 197 Cal. 200, 239 P. 1080. Nothing appears in the record indicating an abuse of such discretion.

[6] Appellant asserts that the trial court erred in certain rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. Officer Remington testified that there was a card room in the rear of defendant's premises which was fitted up with two card tables. Defendant's motion to strike the word "card" as a conclusion of the witness was denied. The witness testified that he was a police officer and had visited the premises on several occasions. Any possible error in the admission of such evidence was cured by the defendant's testimony on direct examination that he was licensed to run a card room with a freeze-out card game. Apparently the testimony of the police officer was a conclusion founded on fact.

Exception is taken to the ruling of the court that it was not necessary to prove that races were actually run on the different dates charged in the information. The exception is not well taken. It was not necessary that it be actually established that the races upon which the bets were being taken were actually being run at the time. People v. Sutherland, 59 Cal. App. 462, 210 P. 965; People v. Carroll, 54 Cal. App. 684, 202 P. 885.

[7] Officer Remington testified that he went into the defendant's premises for the purpose of securing evidence. Appellant urges that such testimony did not support the conviction of violating section 337a of the Penal Code in that it was impossible to bet or wager without the cooperation of both parties. The words "bet" and "wager," as used in section 337a of the Penal Code, do not require the kind of agreement contemplated by the law of contracts under which there must be an actual meeting of the minds of the contracting parties in order to form an agreement. So to hold would be to allow the escape from punishment of the defendants in all cases in which others might feign to be their accomplices and in which no evidence against the defendant exists except that coming from feigned accomplices. People v. Fitzpatrick (Cal. App.) 247 P. 601.

Finally, appellant excepts to the ruling of the court admitting the testimony of Officer Burk that races were being run at Tia Juana during the month of February, 1926. In view of the fact that we have herein held that the prosecution was not required to prove that races were run on any particular day or at all, we deem it unnecessary to comment on this objection.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

MURATA et al. v. VERNON SCHOOL DIST.
et al. (Civ. 5549.)District Court of Appeal. Second District, Division 2, California. March 28, 1927.
As Modified April 22, 1927.Schools and school districts $\Rightarrow$ 154—Children in territory annexed to city which original district continued to tax held under validating statute not entitled to attend city schools (Pol. Code, § 1576, as amended by St. 1917, p. 208; St. 1925, p. 233).

Children resident in area of former school district annexed to city of the sixth class, which cities can have only one school district within their territory under Pol. Code, § 1576, as amended by St. 1917, p. 208, held nevertheless not entitled to attend city's public schools, where annexed territory continued to be de facto part of original school district, being taxed as part thereof, under St. 1925, p. 233, confirming and validating boundaries of such school districts.

Application for mandamus by Toruk Murata and others against the Vernon School District and others, as trustees and principal thereof, to compel the admission of petitioning minors to the public schools of defendant district. Writ denied.

Thomas V. Cassidy, of Huntington Park, and Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Pierce Works, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. This is an original proceeding in mandata to compel the admission of the minor petitioners herein to the public schools of the Vernon City school district.

The following facts are undisputed: The territory in which the petitioners reside was, prior to February 20, 1914, outside of any incorporated city, and situated in what was then known as the Fruitland school district of Los Angeles county. On that date the area involved herein was duly annexed to the city of Vernon, which at that time was, and now is, a city of the sixth class. However, no change was in fact made in the boundaries of the Fruitland school district at the time of the annexation. It is recited in respondents' return:

"That at all times referred to herein the said district was, and now is, a duly organized and existing school district of the state of California, and that at all such times the said district was bounded by duly established and existing boundary lines within which, until December 6, 1926, was included the territory involved herein; that within one year prior to July 23, 1925, there was levied in said district, and in the territory involved herein, a school tax which purported to be, and which was, for the school purposes of the said Maywood school district. * * *

In 1917 section 1576 of the Political Code was amended (St. 1917, p. 208), to provide that: "In no instance shall the territory within an incorporated city of the sixth class be in more than one school district." In 1925, a law was enacted (Stats. p. 233), declaring that the boundaries of every school district as established one year prior to July 23, 1925, are confirmed and validated, provided that within such year a school tax for the purposes of such district shall have been levied therein.

A situation quite similar to that here presented was before us in the case of Matot v. Inglewood School District, 71 Cal. App. 557, 235 P. 667, the only difference in the facts being that in the last-named case the territory involved was annexed to the city of Inglewood after the enactment of the amendment to section 1576.

Petitioners herein urge us to recognize the theory, as they construe the decision in the Matot Case, that the territory in the Fruitland school district which was annexed to the city of Vernon became ipso facto a part of the Vernon school district, and, further, that, this being true, the validating act of 1925 could have no application to such territory.

In view of the undisputed facts as above outlined, it is not material to this decision to determine whether or not the territory involved became de jure part of the Vernon school district as argued by petitioners. Since the uncontested facts are that after such annexation this territory continued to be at least de facto a part of the Fruitland school district, and was at all times within one year prior to July 23, 1925, included in such district, and a school tax purporting to be and which was for the purposes of said Maywood school district, levied in the territory in question, we have a condition which exactly and fully meets the provisions of the validating act of 1925. It is clear that the last-named act was intended to apply to just such a situation. Had no school tax been levied within the territory involved within the year prior to July 23, 1925, or were any other element lacking from those required by the statute of that date to bring the case within its provisions, it would then be necessary for the determination of the issue presented in the instant proceeding to decide whether or not the territory was annexed to the Vernon school district through the enactment of the statute of 1917; but since the allegations which we have quoted from respondents' return are uncontested and meet all of the requirements of the validating act of 1925, the rights of the parties herein hinge alone upon the issue thus presented, and the conclusion is inevitable that the territory in which the petitioners reside is not a part of the Vernon school district, and that the writ of mandate should be denied.

Presiding Justice Works, being disqualified, does not participate in the foregoing opinion.

The writ is denied.

PEOPLE v. PATTERSON. (Cr. 1376.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 30, 1927.)

1. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 10—Evidence that defendant, unarmed and without assaulting any one, entered uninhabited building and stole therefrom held insufficient to sustain conviction for burglary in first degree (Pen. Code, § 460).

Where, in burglary prosecution, evidence showed that defendant entered uninhabited building and stole plumbing fixtures therefrom, but failed to show that while doing so he was armed with deadly weapon or that he assaulted any person, evidence held insufficient to support conviction of burglary in first degree, as defined in Pen. Code, § 460.

2. Burglary $\Rightarrow$ 10—Burglary in the nighttime is not necessarily burglary in first degree (Pen. Code, § 460).

Under Pen. Code, § 460, burglary in the nighttime is not necessarily burglary in the first degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

John Patterson was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

Frank A. Curtin, of Fresno, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel B. Browne, of San Francisco, for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. [1, 2] The defendant was found guilty of burglary in the first degree. From the judgment of conviction he has appealed, and has brought up a copy of the "record of the action" (Pen. Code, § 1207) and a certified copy of the reporter's notes as transcribed.

The appellant presents two points; one, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict of burglary in the first degree, and the other point is that the trial court gave to the jury an erroneous instruction defining burglary in the first degree. The two objections may properly be considered together. The undisputed evidence was to the effect that the defendant entered an uninhabited dwelling and stole therefrom the plumbing fixtures. There was no evidence to the effect that when he entered the building or at any other time he was armed with a deadly weapon, or that during the commission of the offense that he assaulted any person. Our statute is as follows:

"Burglary Defined.—1. Every burglary of an inhabited dwelling house or building committed in the nighttime, and every burglary whether in the daytime or nighttime, committed by a person armed with a deadly weapon, or who while in the commission of such burglary arms himself with a deadly weapon, or who while in the commission of such burglary assaults any person, is burglary of the first degree. 2. All other kinds of burglary are of the second degree. 3. This section shall not be construed to supersede or affect section four hundred sixty-four of the Penal Code." Pen. Code, § 460.

However, the trial court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are further instructed that burglary is of two degrees. If committed in the nighttime, it is burglary of the first degree, and if committed in the daytime, it is burglary in the second degree. If you find the defendant guilty, you must specify in your verdict the degree in which you find him guilty. You are further instructed that the phrase 'nighttime,' as used in this connection, means the period between sunset and sunrise."

The trial court also instructed the jury that it might find the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree, of burglary in the second degree, or not guilty. The evidence was insufficient to support a judgment of conviction for the crime of burglary in the first degree. Furthermore, the instruction purporting to define burglary in the first degree was an erroneous statement of the law.

The appellant makes an additional point, but it becomes unnecessary to consider it.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

1. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 110—Order denying motion for new trial is not appealable.

No appeal can be taken from order denying motion for new trial.

2. Eminent domain $\Rightarrow$ 200—In proceeding to condemn land for playground, city was required to prove that clerk gave notice by publication to assessment district of hearing of referees' report.

In action by city to condemn land for playground purposes, failure to prove that clerk gave notice by publication, required by law, to assessment district of time and place set for hearing of referees' report held fatal defect, no presumption arising that notice was actually published.

3. Eminent domain ☞167(4)—Statutory provisions for benefit of landowners are strictly construed in their favor in condemnation proceedings.

Proceedings in condemnation being in invitum, statutory provisions therefor are strictly construed in favor of property owners as to every requisite having semblance of benefit to landowner.

4. Evidence ☞83(1)—Presumption that official has performed his duty does not extend beyond official's own acts.

Application of presumption that official has performed duty cannot extend beyond acts of official himself.

5. Evidence ☞83(2)—No presumption arose in condemnation proceedings that newspaper publisher printed and published notice of hearing referees' report.

In proceedings to condemn land for playground purposes, no presumption arose that publisher of newspaper had printed and published notice of hearing referees' report, required to be given; publisher not being official and no presumption arising concerning his acts.

6. Eminent domain ☞169—Land could not be condemned by city, under initial ordinance declaring condemnation was for public park and final ordinance defining purpose as for public playground, legislative intent being uncertain (Park and Playground Act of 1909, § 5).

Land could not be acquired by city by condemnation, under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1067), § 5, under ordinance of intention stating land was to be taken for public park purposes and final ordinance declaring property was to be taken for playground; intention of city council being impossible to ascertain.

7. Statutes ☞207—Where statutory provisions are contradictory, rule that statutes should be interpreted to have effect does not apply.

Rule that statutes should be so interpreted as to give them effect held not to apply, where provisions of statute are flatly contradictory.

8. Eminent domain ☞169—City can condemn lands only for purpose for which council has directed acquisition.

Condemnation proceedings by city must fail unless purposes are not only lawful, but those for which city council has directed lands to be acquired by public.

9. Municipal corporations ☞11(1)—Court cannot supply defect resulting from contradictory provisions of ordinances.

Where legislative intent is left undetermined by contradictory provisions in ordinances, defect cannot be supplied by court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles against Andrew Glassell, Una E. G. Moss, Louis A. Clarke, M. E. Latham, and others, to condemn land for public playground purposes. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, the defendants named appeal. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed, and decree appealed from reversed.

J. E. Hannon, B. R. Berlin, and Ernest U. Schroeter, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Donald M. Keith and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. [1] This is an action in condemnation. It was first tried before referees, and on exception taken to their report was retried in the superior court of Los Angeles county. The appealing defendants moved for a new trial on various grounds, and have appealed from those parts of the interlocutory decree affecting them, and from the order denying their motion for new trial. Such an order is not appealable. Heine Piano Co. v. Bloomer, 183 Cal. 398, 191 P. 900.

Numerous irregularities appear throughout these proceedings. No doubt some of them are of such a nature as not to result in prejudice to the appellants, or of a character which would be fatal to the validity of the proceeding. However, we think that certain errors are vital.

[2] It appears to be admitted that no evidence was offered at the trial to prove that the clerk gave notice by publication, as required by law, to the assessment district of the time and place set for the hearing of the referees' report. The respondent relies upon the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed, and insists that, since no objection was made as to lack of the required notice, this presumption is sufficient support for the finding of the court that:

"Due and legal notice of the time and place fixed for hearing the said report had been duly made and given as required by law."

[3] Proceedings in condemnation are in invitum, and statutory provisions for the same are strictly construed in favor of the property owners. 20 Cor. Jur. p. 877; McCarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 211, 82 P. 615. This applies to "every requisite of the statute having the semblance of benefit to the landowner." 20 Cor. Jur. p. 882. The publication of the notice is jurisdictional in a proceeding in condemnation. Stanford v. Worn, 27 Cal. 171. This statute requires a special form and method of notice to the district before the hearing on the referees' report. The application of the presumption that an official has performed his duty cannot extend beyond the acts of the official himself.

[4, 5] In part, the requirement here is that the street superintendent shall cause notice to be published, for a period of 5 days, in a daily newspaper published and circulated in the municipality where the property is situated. It still remains for those having control of the newspaper to actually publish the notice as required. The law does not provide that the street superintendent shall print and publish notice, but only that he cause the same to be published in a newspaper, etc. The publisher of the newspaper is not an official, and no presumption arises concerning his acts.

The facts presented on this point are similar to those in the County of Sutter v. McGriff, 130 Cal. 124, 62 P. 412, in which it was decided that the presumption as to the performance of official duty could not be indulged further than to establish that the official had complied with such requirements as were within his power. On the contrary, legal requisites not under his authority are unaffected by that presumption.

In a proceeding to condemn land it has been held that the presumption of regularity cannot be invoked to establish jurisdictional facts. Cook v. Manasquan, 80 N. J. 206, 76 A. 310. Also, in a proceeding to open a road, the facts showing compliance with the statute as to notice must be established affirmatively. Taylor v. Todd, 48 Mo. App. 550. To the same effect is Crawford v. Frio County (Tex. Civ. App.) 153 S. W. 388, in which it was held that the burden is on the public to show affirmatively that the necessary notice has been given the landowner, and that no presumption will be indulged. It was also held in that case that the appearance of an objector and his participation in the proceeding does not waive the objection that the jurisdictional requirements as to notice have not been complied with.

[6] In the instant case, the city council passed an ordinance of intention, in which it was declared that the lands sought to be condemned were to be taken for public park purposes. Thereafter a final ordinance was enacted, ordering the acquisition by condemnation of these lands for public playground purposes.

In a proper effort to clarify the situation and to discover the true intention of the city council, respondent first resorts to the Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1066), under which this proceeding was begun, and calls attention to the fact that in section 5 thereof it is provided that the final ordinance "need not describe the property to be taken, nor the assessment district, but must refer to the ordinance of intention for all particulars." The contention is then advanced that this provision includes the purposes for which the land is sought to be taken, among the other particulars. We cannot agree with this argument. The "particulars" to which reference is made are clearly those concerning the description of the property and the assessment district. A mere reading of the provision indicates that this is true, and the enumeration is one to which the maxim ejusdem generis applies. But respondent contends that, since the final ordinance in its title declares that the property is to be taken "for the condemnation of certain lands situate in the city of Los Angeles for public playground purposes, as contemplated by Ordinance No. 43114 (New Series), of said city," it is apparent that the use of the word "playground" was a mere clerical error because the purposes announced in the resolution of intention were "park purposes." But this reasoning may just as well lead to the opposite conclusion. It all depends upon the premise which is adopted. The language found in the title of the final ordinance might reasonably indicate that the real intention was to take the property for playground purposes, and that the city council were under the impression that this had been declared in the first ordinance.

Respondent further points out that section 2 of the ordinance ordering the acquisition of the lands directs that the city attorney bring the action for condemnation of the property "to be taken for the improvement therein, and in section 1 hereof mentioned." It is obvious that this but results in "confusion worse confounded." By "the improvement therein" reference is made to the resolution of intention and to park purposes, but by "section 1 hereof" the declaration is renewed that the land is to be taken for playground purposes, for such is the statement contained in said "section 1 hereof."

Thus far every sign pointing to park purposes as the design of the city council is balanced by another sign pointing toward playground purposes. There is one other place in the record where the purposes are mentioned. It appears that a resolution extending the time to file a complaint for the condemnation of the land was enacted. In this it is recited that the purposes contemplated in Ordinance No. 43114 (N. S.) being the resolution of intention, are "public park purposes." This, of course, was true, and if the matter were to be determined by the number of times public park purposes were mentioned as against playground purposes, it would make the balance favor the former, but as establishing the real intention of the lawmakers it adds very little. We think the whole situation is one of hopeless uncertainty.

[7] It is true, as contended by respondent, that it is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that statutes should be so interpreted as to give them effect rather than result in their defeat, but this rule fails to furnish guidance in a case where the provisions of the statute are flatly contradictory. In this instance, if the principal object were merely to condemn the lands without regard to the purposes for which they were to be used, the court might, in effect, direct that this be done without regard to such purposes; but here the entire proceeding falls unless the purposes are not only lawful, but those for which the city council has directed the lands to be acquired by the public.

[8, 9] We cannot give effect to the proceedings which have been taken without determining the true intention of the lawmakers. Where the intention is left undetermined the court cannot supply the defect and declare for what purpose the lands shall be used. To uphold such loose proceedings as are contained in this record would be to ignore fundamentals of law intended to uphold substantial guaranties for the protection of private property rights.

Appellants attack the legality of this proceeding upon eight other grounds, but, in view of our conclusion concerning the two defects which we have discussed, it will be unnecessary to pass on these other assignments.

The appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

The decree appealed from is reversed.

PEOPLE v. PARSONS. (Cr. 1457.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 23, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1927.)

1. Criminal law ⇨998—Motion to vacate judgment on plea of guilty as without jurisdiction, because without preliminary examination, held late and without merit (Pen. Code, §§ 995, 996).

Motion to vacate judgment entered on a plea of guilty, on ground that information was filed without legal authority because no preliminary examination was had, made over three years and seven months after entry of plea of guilty and sentence, held properly refused, since filing of information gave court jurisdiction and objection came too late, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 995, 996.

2. Criminal law ⇨13—Statute denouncing offense of unnatural copulation held not unconstitutional, as vague and indefinite (Pen. Code, § 288a).

Pen. Code, § 288a, providing that any person participating in the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another is punishable by imprisonment, held not unconstitutional, as vague, uncertain, and indefinite.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

H. G. Parsons was convicted of violation of Pen. Code, § 288a. From an order refusing to vacate the judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. A complaint was issued charging the defendant with the degenerate crime denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code. At the time of his arraignment upon the complaint the defendant expressed a desire to waive his legal rights and confessed to the committing magistrate his guilt of the offense charged. Whereupon the justice of the peace ordered that he be held to answer before the superior court. The information was filed on February 10, 1923. On the same day the defendant pleaded guilty to the offense as charged in the information, and was sentenced for the term provided by law on February 13, 1923. On October 2, 1926, or after the lapse of more than three years and seven months, the defendant made a motion to vacate and set aside the judgment of conviction on the grounds, among others: (1) That the information was filed without authority of law because no preliminary examination was had; (2) that section 288a of the Penal Code is unconstitutional, for the reason that it is vague, uncertain, and indefinite—which two grounds are the only reasons assigned in support of his appeal from the order made November 15, 1926, denying his motion to set aside the judgment.

[1] Appellant reasons that no examination was held by the committing magistrate, and that the superior court was therefore without jurisdiction to hear the charge contained in the information, hence he may raise the objection at any time. Assuming that in legal effect there was no preliminary examination, the law has heretofore been determined contrary to appellant's views. The Supreme Court, in the case of Ex parte McConnell, 83 Cal. 558, 23 P. 1119, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Beatty, in a case where exactly the same contention was raised, says:

"The filing of the information gave the court jurisdiction to proceed in the case, and the section of the Code cited [Pen. Code, § 995] provides the exclusive method of trying the question whether the information was founded on the necessary preliminary examination and commitment."

Also in the case of People v. Ronsse, 26 Cal. App. 100, 146 P. 65, where it was argued that no preliminary examination had been had, because the person assuming to act as magistrate was not in fact invested with the powers of that office, it was held that the objection made after plea, at the time of the trial, and again after verdict, came too late. It is there pointed out that a defendant is precluded by section 996 of the Penal Code from raising the objection, unless made before the plea is entered.

"Any person participating in the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not exceeding fifteen years,"

—is unconstitutional, is probably inspired by the opinion found in the case of In re Lockett, 179 Cal. 581, 178 P. 134, which dealt with the act when it contained words of a foreign language, not contained in our English dictionaries. But what may have been said with reference to the act as it existed prior to its amendment in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1633) has no present application. Counsel says that only one of the parties may be guilty of an offense under the wording of the act, and that for that reason it is vague and uncertain. We do not so understand the words "any person participating in the act." Nor do we find anything else uncertain or indefinite.

The order is affirmed.

CLINE v. DIMMICK. (Civ. 4228.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1927.)

1. Innkeepers ⇐11(1)—Statute limiting innkeeper's liability to certain amounts for each container refers to container as single piece of baggage at time of loss (Civ. Code, § 1859).

The limitations on an innkeeper's liability to stated amounts for each trunk, valise, traveling bag, box, and contents, provided by Civ. Code, § 1859, refer to conditions of such containers at time of loss as single pieces of baggage, and do not limit liability to those amounts for containers and contents when unpacked.

2. Innkeepers ⇐11(1)—Hotel keeper's notice of nonliability, which did not specify furs, held not to relieve him of liability for fur cape (Civ. Code, § 1860).

Innkeeper's notice that he would not be responsible for loss of money, jewelry, or other articles of value taken from rooms, and that safe deposit boxes were provided for valuables and money, did not comply with Civ. Code, § 1860, providing for notice specifying fur garments, so as to relieve hotel keeper of liability for loss of fur cape.

3. Innkeepers ⇐11(1)—Statute limiting liability of innkeeper must be strictly complied with (Civ. Code, § 1860).

Civ. Code, § 1860, providing for limitation of liability of innkeepers for valuables where fireproof safe is maintained and guests notified to place them therein, must be strictly complied with to relieve innkeeper of his common-law liability.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by Virginia Cline against F. M. Dimmick, an innkeeper, for damages for loss of personal property. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lewinson & Barnhill and E. E. Morris, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. Plaintiff sued defendant, who was an innkeeper, for the loss of certain articles of personal property and apparel which were taken from her room while she was a guest at his hotel. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals.

Section 1859 of the Civil Code reads, in part:

"The liability of an innkeeper * * * for losses of * * * personal property, * * * placed by his guests * * * under his care, is that of a depository for hire; provided, however, that in no case shall such liability exceed the sum of one hundred dollars for each trunk and its contents, fifty dollars for each valise or traveling-bag and contents, and ten dollars for each box, bundle, or package and contents so placed under his care, and all other miscellaneous effects including wearing apparel and personal belongings, two hundred fifty dollars; unless he shall have consented in writing with the owner thereof to assume a greater liability."

Section 1860 of the same Code provides:

"If an innkeeper * * * keeps a fireproof safe and gives notice to a guest * * * that he keeps such a safe and will not be liable for money, jewelry, documents, furs, fur coats and fur garments, * * * unless placed therein, he is not liable, except so far as his own acts shall contribute thereto, for any loss of or injury to such articles, if not deposited with him to be placed therein. * * *"

Most of the articles lost by respondent, practically all of them of value, were contained, when brought into the hotel, in a leather hat box. The box itself was not taken and the trial court allowed respondent judgment for many times the value of "ten dollars for each box, bundle, or package and contents" prescribed by section 1859. Appellant contends that the judgment was excessive and that the recovery of respondent for the loss of the articles brought into the hostelry in the hat box should be limited to the value stated in the excerpt just made from the section.

[1] It is said that the enactment must be construed as relating to a box and its contents upon its arrival at an inn, no matter if the box be unpacked and its contents be placed about the room or in the closet of a guest upon his quarters being assigned to him, and if a part or all of the contents be then stolen and the box be untouched. We cannot so construe the statute. To follow appellant's argument to its logical conclusion is to say that respondent cannot recover at all for the loss of the articles taken into the hotel, as the statute refers to a box and its contents, and in the present instance the box was not taken. The argument of appellant also leads to the absurdity that, if prospective guests come to a hotel door with a large box containing wearing apparel of fine texture and great value, they must unpack at the portal and exhibit their finery, not only to the inspection of the innkeeper, but to the curiosity of bystanders, or suffer a great loss if the box be unpacked after an arrival in rooms assigned, or if it be broken open there, and a portion only of the goods in it be stolen:

"Before the enactment of sections 1859 and 1860 of our Civil Code, in this state, an innkeeper was held to his common-law liability as an insurer of the goods of his guests. * * * Sections 1859 and 1860 of our Civil Code were enacted on the same date. Together, they were intended to relieve the innkeepers in this state of the burden of their common-law liability. * * * If an innkeeper does not comply with the conditions of statutes exempting him from his common-law liability, the common-law liability is imposed." Baxter v. Shanley-Furness Co., 193 Cal. 553, 226 P. 391.

We think the Legislature, in section 1859, has not employed language appropriate to an intent to limit the common-law liability of innkeepers to the extent claimed by appellant. In using the expressions, "each trunk and its contents," "each valise or traveling bag and contents," "each box, bundle, or package and contents," we think the Legislature contemplated conditions to exist at the time of a loss and not at the time when truck, valise, or box might be taken into a hotel. Such a construction avoids the difficulties above pointed out. Further, it seems to be demanded by the terms of the section, although it must be admitted that the language of the enactment is not altogether plain. The section refers to liability for a "loss." The liability accrues at the time of a loss and the Legislature doubtless intended that the expression "box, bundle, or package and contents" should relate to a condition existing at that time. In other words, we think the expression contemplates the loss of a container and its contents as a single piece of baggage.

[2, 3] The trial court found that appellant did not comply with the provisions of section 1860 of the Civil Code, providing for a certain notice to guests at hotels. The only evidence as to notice was that a certain printed placard was posted in respondent's room and that she read it before her property was taken. The notice read:

"The proprietor will not be responsible for the loss of money, jewelry, or other articles of value taken from the rooms. Individual safe deposit boxes, in the fire and burglar proof safe, located in the office, are provided for the safe-keeping of valuables and money."

The principal article lost by appellant, upon the score of value, was a fur cape, and it is the loss of this garment that respondent has in mind in taking exception to the finding of the court. It will be observed that section 1860 provides for notice that an innkeeper, under certain circumstances, "will not be liable for money, jewelry, documents, furs, fur coats and fur garments, or other articles of unusual value and small compass." We think the notice posted by appellant did not comply with the statute. Under the enactment there was no more reason for inserting the words "money, jewelry" in the notice than for inserting a reference to fur garments. It naturally might not have occurred to appellant that the words "other articles of value," following the words "money, jewelry," were intended to cover such an article as her fur cape. Further, she was not likely to have thought that the management of the hotel expected to care for fur capes in "individual safe deposit boxes, in the fire and burglar proof safe," especially as it was said that the boxes were for the safe-keeping of "valuables and money." In addition to all this, it has been decided in many cases that statutes like section 1860 must be strictly complied with. Some authorities go even further:

"A literal compliance with the statute is generally held necessary to effect the limitation. This is true not only as to providing the iron safe required, but also as to giving all notices required by the statute exactly as provided." 32 C. J. 522.

DAWSON et al. v. SAN DIEGO ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 4832.)*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 31, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 930(1)—Appellate court is bound to resolve conflict in evidence in favor of party receiving verdict and to construe it favorably to him.

Where verdict was for plaintiff on conflicting evidence, appellate court had to assume as true evidence adduced at trial in her favor and to construe it in her behalf as favorably as was reasonably possible.

2. Negligence $\S$ 122(1)—Burden of establishing contributory negligence rests upon defendant.

Defense of contributory negligence is an affirmative one, and burden of establishing such defense rests upon defendant.

3. Negligence $\S$ 136(9)—Question of contributory negligence is one of law only where no other deduction can be drawn from evidence.

It is only where deduction to be drawn from evidence is inevitably that of plaintiff's negligence that court is authorized to declare presence of contributory negligence on part of plaintiff and thereupon withdraw case from jury.

4. Street railroads $\S$ 99(7)—Motorist must yield to street car's right of way, where reasonably prudent man would foresee collision.

Where street car has right of way under city ordinance, automobile driver must yield if, when he starts across tracks, relative position of two vehicles is such that reasonably prudent man would foresee that collision was likely to occur unless one or the other stopped.

5. Street railroads $\S$ 117(24)—Contributory negligence of truck driver struck by street car held for jury.

In action for damages for death of truck driver resulting from collision of truck with street car, question of truck driver's contributory negligence held for jury.

6. Trial $\S$ 252(8), 253(4)—Instruction that truck driver killed by street car was negligent if he drove above certain speed held properly refused, in view of evidence, and where it did not cover other provision of statute relied on (Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 22[a]).

In suit for damages for death of truck driver killed by street car, instruction that driver was guilty of negligence if he operated truck within intersection of streets above certain speed held properly refused, where there was no evidence that he drove truck at such speed within intersection, and where other provision relating to warning signs in Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 220) $\S$ 22(a), relied upon, was not covered by refused instruction or evidence.

7. Street railroads $\S$ 118(11)—Instruction on negligent speed of truck driver struck by street car held properly refused as too indefinite.

In suit for death of truck driver struck by street car, instruction that driver was guilty of negligence if he operated truck at certain speed held properly refused because it was too indefinite as to place or location at which it might be inferred truck was being operated.

8. Street railroads $\S$ 118(3)—Instruction stating duty of street car motorman to sound gong held proper.

In suit for damages for death of automobile driver struck by street car, instruction that it was duty of defendant's motorman to sound gong when approaching certain street, which duty was required by ordinance, held proper.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 1050(1)—Admitting evidence of habits of care in driving of truck driver struck by street car, where there were eyewitnesses, if error, held not prejudicial.

In suit for damages for death of truck driver struck by street car, admitting evidence of driver's habits as to care in driving, where there were eyewitnesses, and where testimony of eyewitnesses as to his conduct at time of accident coincided with such evidence, if error, held not prejudicial.

10. Evidence $\S$ 492—Admission of evidence street car was traveling at faster than ordinary rate and faster than truck struck held not error.

In suit for damages for death of truck driver struck by street car, permitting evidence that at or immediately preceding time of accident street car was traveling at speed "faster than ordinary rate," and that street car "was going the faster of the two vehicles," held not error.

11. Appeal and error $\S$ 1046(5)—Comment by trial judge that witness on street car at time of collision would know where it took place held not prejudicial error under circumstances.

Comment of trial judge to effect that, because witness was on street car when collision occurred, she would know where it took place, held not prejudicial error, where cross-examination established that her answer as to where collision occurred was not based upon actual knowledge from seeing collision, but from what she felt at time and from what she afterwards saw of accident, and where other witnesses fixed it at approximately same position.

12. Appeal and error $\S$ 201(2)—Where no objection was made to court's remark at any time during trial nor exception noted, point was not available on appeal.

Where no objection was taken to court's remark, either at time it was made or at any time during trial, nor any exception noted there-to, point was not available on appeal.

13. Appeal and error $\S$ 1046(5)—Court's remark, made as mere pleasantry, held not prejudicial error, especially in view of instructions.

Court's remark, "I don't see how you find your way home," to witness, who was uncertain as to which direction was east and which was west, and was unable to state whether accident occurred on east or west side of center of intersection, made as mere pleasantry, held not prejudicial error, where court instructed Jury not to consider anything said or done by court as indicating court's opinion as to what were facts in case.

14. Evidence $\S$ 219(3)—Permitting plaintiff, suing for death of husband, to testify whether defendant had paid her any compensation, held not error.

In suit by wife for damages for death of her husband, permitting her to testify concerning whether or not defendant had ever paid her any compensation for loss sustained held not error.

15. Death $\S$ 99(4)—\$10,000 for death of husband earning \$120 per month, held justified.

In suit by wife for damages for death of her husband, evidence that deceased's health was good, that he was earning $120 per month at time of death, and that, had he lived for full term of his life expectancy, he would have earned $19,396.80, held to sufficiently establish deceased's pecuniary worth and to justify verdict for $10,000.

16. Appeal and error $\S$ 1004(1)—Unless verdict is so plainly excessive as to suggest passion, prejudice, or corruption on jury's part, it cannot be disturbed as excessive.

Verdict cannot be disturbed on ground that it is excessive, unless it is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on part of jury.

17. Street railroads $\S$ 114(1)—Evidence held to justify conclusion street railroad was guilty of negligence as to truck driver free from negligence.

In suit for death of truck driver struck by street car, evidence held to warrant jury in concluding that defendant was guilty of negligence and that driver was free from negligence proximately contributing to happening of accident.

18. Appeal and error $\S$ 1003—Appellate court cannot consider evidence to determine weight as to any issue in pleadings or in whose favor it preponderated.

Appellate court cannot consider evidence for purpose of determining its weight as to any issue in pleadings or in whose favor evidence as a whole it preponderated.

Action by Susan M. Dawson and another against the San Diego Electric Railway Company for damages for the wrongful death of her husband. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; PRESTON; J., voting for a transfer.

HOUSER, J. Action by plaintiff Susan M. Dawson for damages resulting from the death of her husband William E. Dawson.

It appears that the cause of the death of William E. Dawson was a collision which occurred at a street intersection between a light automobile truck driven by said Dawson and an electric street car which was owned and operated by the defendant.

[1] The evidence with reference to the happening of the accident was conflicting, but was decided by the jury in favor of plaintiff. In such circumstances the rule is that, on appeal from a judgment, the appellate court is bound to assume as true the evidence adduced at the trial in favor of the plaintiff and to construe it in his behalf as favorably as is reasonably possible. Palladine v. Imperial Valley F. Lands Ass'n, 65 Cal. App. 727, 225 P. 291; Aubel v. Sosso, 72 Cal. App. 57, 236 P. 319; Woodard v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 513, 153 P. 951; Hassell v. Bunge, 167 Cal. 365, 139 P. 800; Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 P. 1157; Dunphy v. Dunphy, 161 Cal. 380, 119 P. 512; Showers v. Zanone, 7 Cal. Unrep. 263, 85 P. 857; Carteri v. Roberts, 140 Cal. 165, 73 P. 818; Smith v. Hampshire, 4 Cal. App. 8, 87 P. 224.

With such rule in mind, for many of the purposes of this appeal it becomes necessary to consider the following conclusions and inferences only which, notwithstanding the conflict in the evidence, the jury was entitled to deduce from evidence produced by plaintiff: Immediately before reaching the intersection of the two streets in a busy portion of the city where the accident in question occurred, Dawson had been driving the truck in a prudent and careful manner at a rate of speed between 8 and 10 miles per hour; that as he approached such intersection he slackened the speed of his truck to between 4 and 6 miles per hour, and looked to both his right and to his left; that it was a sunshiny day, and nothing intervened to obstruct his view, and that after he saw the approaching street car, he misjudged either its distance from the intersection, or its speed, or both such distance and such speed, and concluded that he had ample time to pass in front of such street car in safety to himself; that, in essaying such crossing, he was driving his truck at a rate of speed not in excess of that provided by any state statute or city ordinance of the city wherein the accident occurred; that in the circumstances then and there present he did not realize the danger that threatened him, nor the imminent peril of his situation until it was too late either to stop his truck in time or to increase the speed of the truck sufficiently, to avoid the collision; that immediately preceding the accident the street car of defendant which collided with Dawson's truck was traveling down a grade of 6½ per cent., and, considering the condition then and there present, was being operated at a fast and unusual or at a high and dangerous rate of speed, to wit, of not less than 25 miles per hour; that the gong on said street car was not sounded to give warning of its approach; that, although it was a sunshiny day and although no object interfered with an opportunity for a clear view of whatever was either within or approaching the intersection for a considerable distance, the motorman in charge of the street car did not see Dawson until "like a flash" the truck appeared in front of him (the motorman) within 5 or 10 feet; that the accident occurred to Dawson's right of the center of the intersection; that in the collision the truck was struck in about its middle, with the result that the body of the truck was torn from the chassis—the wooden portion thereof being thrown to one side of the street and the heavy portion of the chassis and Dawson being thrown to the front and to the curb on the opposite side of the street, a distance of 75 feet; that Dawson was rendered unconscious by reason of the collision; that both his legs were broken above the knees, his right arm sustained a compound fracture above the elbow, and the back of his skull was crushed; that, although the emergency brakes on the street car were operated most effectively, the street car traveled after the collision for a distance of between 180 and 220 feet before it was stopped.

Appellant first advances the point that the evidence proves the contributory negligence of Dawson in failing to yield to the defendant the right of way across the street intersection in accordance with the provisions of a local city ordinance, which gave such a preference to street cars over other vehicles.

[2, 3] It is settled law that the defense of contributory negligence is an affirmative one, and that the burden of establishing such a defense rests upon the defendant. Bidwell v. Los Angeles, etc., R. Co., 169 Cal. 780, 148 P. 197; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 241, 116 P. 513; Schneider v. Market Street Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 P. 734; Hutson v. Southern California R. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093. It is also well established that the contributory negligence of a plaintiff can be said to exist in those cases only where no deduction or inference from the evidence other than the plaintiff's negligence can be drawn by the jury, and that, even where the facts in the case are clear and undisputed, "if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury." It is only where the deduction to be drawn from the evidence is inevitably that of plaintiff's negligence that the court is authorized to declare the presence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff and thereupon withdraw the case from the jury. Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 P. 520; Seller v. Market Street R. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513.

[4] With reference to the effect of the provisions of the ordinance which gave the right of way at the intersection to the defendant, the law appears to be well stated in the syllabus of the case of Virginia R. & Power Co. v. Wellons, 133 Va. 350, 112 S. E. 843, as follows:

"Where a street car had the right of way under a city ordinance, it is the duty of an automobile driver to yield if, when he started across the tracks, the relative position of the two vehicles was such that a reasonably prudent man would have foreseen that a collision was likely to occur unless one or the other stopped."

The questions, then, to be considered are whether from the evidence reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of plaintiff's negligence, and whether, as plaintiff started across the intersection, as a reasonably prudent man he should have foreseen that a collision was about to occur, unless either the truck or the street car was stopped. The evidence of the witnesses produced by plaintiff showed that the street car was traveling at from four to six times the speed at which the truck was traveling after it entered the intersection; that the distance from the curb line of each of the intersecting streets to the center of the street was approximately 26 feet. It is therefore apparent that at the time the truck entered the intersection the street car was from 104 to 156 feet away from the center of the intersection. The evidence further shows that Dawson was habitually a careful man, and that on this occasion as he approached the intersection he slackened the speed of the truck and looked in the direction from which the street car was coming. Touching upon the law affecting a situation of such a character, it is said in the case of Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 278, 55 P. 908, 909:

"It cannot be said that a person is guilty of contributory negligence merely because he attempts to cross a street railway when a car is approaching. If that were so, he could never attempt to cross such a track in the crowded parts of a city where there is practically always an approaching car; and in such case, as street cars go at a comparatively slow rate of speed and are quickly stopped, the question of negligence would depend upon the proximity or remoteness of the car, and upon all the other circumstances surrounding the occurrence. In such a situation the traveler cannot be held to exercise the very highest prudence and judgment; it is sufficient if he exercises that degree of care and prudence and good sense which men who possess those qualities in an ordinary or average degree exercise."

In the case of Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 P. 677, the principle is discussed by the court, and the conclusion reached, that, in a situation resembling that presented in the instant case, the question of whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed proximately to the happening of the accident is one for the determination of the jury. And, to the same effect, see the following cases: Schneider v. Market Street R. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 P. 734; Kernan v. Market Street R. Co., 137 Cal. 326, 70 P. 81; Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 158 Cal. 596, 112 P. 53; Runnels v. United Railroads, 175 Cal. 528, 166 P. 18; Commonwealth Bonding, etc., Co. v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 42 Cal. App. 573, 184 P. 29; Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281; Carbaugh v. White Bus Line, 51 Cal. App. 1, 195 P. 1066.

[5] It is therefore manifest that in the circumstances of the instant case the question of Dawson's contributory negligence was one exclusively for the jury to determine; and consequently that the point presented by appellant with reference thereto cannot be sustained.

[6] It is next urged by appellant that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury in effect that, in the event the jury found certain stated facts were true, if Dawson operated his truck within the intersection of the two streets at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles per hour he was guilty of negligence. However, no foundation in fact existed upon which to base such requested instruction. No witness testified that Dawson was driving his truck at such a rate of speed within the intersection. Moreover, without going into details of the provisions of section 22(a) of the Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 220), upon which appellant relies as authority for the requested instruction, on an examination of the statute it appears that, among other things, it provides for a given rate of speed for vehicles "in traversing any steam, electric or other railway crossing at grade," provided that theretofore the governing body of the municipality wherein such "railway crossing" is situate shall have placed and maintained "warning signs," etc. The attention of this court is not directed to any evidence in the case touching the condition as to the placing and maintaining of the "warning signs" mentioned in the statute; nor is such condition covered by the instruction which was refused by the trial court. Assuming, without deciding, that the statute to which reference has been had is applicable to the situation here presented, it is clear that, if it applies in one part it should also apply in the other; and consequently, if the rate of speed is controlled by such statute, the regulation requiring "warning signs" is also a condition which must be met. For such reasons we think that the instruction was properly refused.

[7] Appellant also suggests error in that the trial court refused to give an additional instruction that, "if you also find from the evidence that William E. Dawson was operating said truck at a speed of 15 miles per hour or 22 feet per second, he was guilty of negligence," etc. The proposed instruction was properly refused, for the reason that it is indefinite as to place or location at which it might be inferred that the truck was being operated.

[8] Appellant predicates error in that the trial court instructed the jury that:

"It was the duty of the defendant's motorman to sound his gong when approaching Thirteenth street (one of the intersecting streets) so as to give notice to persons desiring to cross said street of the approach of the street car. * * *"

As such duty was required by an ordinance of the municipality in which the street car was being operated, the instruction was a proper one to be given to the jury. Driscoll v. Market St. Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 565, 32 P. 591, 133 Am. St. Rep. 203; Schneider v. Market Street Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 486, 66 P. 734.

[9] It is next urged by appellant that error was committed by the trial court in admitting, over defendant's objection, evidence of habit of Dawson as to care in driving his truck. It is not claimed that under no circumstances is such evidence admissible; but, because of the fact in the instant case that there were eyewitnesses to the accident, it is insisted that "there was no justification in law for admitting the evidence referred to"—citing Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117; 10 R. O. L. § 127, p. 955; 6 Thompson on Negligence, § 7140; 1 Elliott on Evidence, § 172.

It is manifest that in the instant case the particular phase of the inquiry was directed, not to Dawson's habit regarding the driving by him of an automobile over a street intersection, but was directed particularly to what he actually did on the occasion in question. His habit may have been to be very careful at such times, and yet on the occasion under consideration he may have shown the greatest carelessness. But, however that may have been, the testimony as to Dawson's habit apparently coincided with the testimony of the witnesses introduced by plaintiff regarding Dawson's conduct at the time the accident occurred. And, while evidence of his habit may have added weight to the testimony given in his behalf, the language used by the court in Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 665, 195 P. 408, 409 (15 A. L. R. 117) to wit: "If the fact of the existence of habits of caution in a given particular has any legitimate evidentiary weight, the party benefited ought to have the advantage of it for whatever it is worth, even against adverse eyewitnesses; and, if the testimony of the eyewitnesses is in his favor, it would be at least a harmless cumulation of evidence to permit testimony of his custom or habit"—would seem to indicate that the error, if any, was not prejudicial to defendant's substantial rights.

[10] It is also contended by appellant that the trial court erred in permitting certain witnesses to testify that at or immediately preceding the time of the accident the street car was traveling at a speed "faster than the ordinary rate," and that the street car "was going the faster of the two vehicles." No authorities are cited by appellant to sustain its position. On the other hand, the authorities are numerous in principle which uphold the admissibility of such evidence. Overtown v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 598; Ill. Central R. Co. v. Ashline, 171 Ill. 313, 49 N. E. 522; Ottofy v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 197 Mo. App. 473, 196 S. W. 428; Johnsen v. Oakland, S. L. & H. E. Ry. Co., 127 Cal. 608, 60 P. 170; Scrags v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 140 P. 706; Cargall v. Riley, 209 Ala. 183, 95 So. 821; Schultz v. Starr, 180 Iowa, 1319, 164 N. W. 163; Parker v. Boston & M. R. R., 84 Vt. 329, 79 A. 865.

[11] Error is also predicated on the fact that the trial court overruled an objection to a question propounded to a witness as to where the accident took place, and in connection therewith allege prejudicial misconduct committed by the judge of the trial court in commenting on the knowledge of such witness.

The bill of exceptions herein shows that, after the witness had stated that, at the time the accident occurred, she was sitting on a side seat "on the front end of the car on the left-hand side of the car next to the motor-man, * * * the very front seat," she was asked the question as to where the collision took place, to which question she answered:

"Well, I would say, from the appearance of all things, that the radiator, the front end of the truck, was on the street car track. The whole front part would be on the track, and the rear end would be about where the pimple, the traffic pimple, would be; just about the middle of the street crossing."

Before the question was answered, the defendant interposed a general objection, and included therein the further specification that no foundation had been laid for the question. In response thereto, the judge of the trial court stated in effect that he thought the required foundation would "develop"; that "it was obvious that a person on a street car would know where a collision took place; she might feel it, under the conditions she testified to." On cross-examination, the witness stated:

"The first I knew anything of the collision was when the two cars hit. I did not see them hit or come together, but I felt it. If I remember correctly I was looking at my sister, back up toward Twelfth street, just before the time of the impact.

"Q. You have explained on direct examination that the front of the truck was across the track and the rear of the truck was about what you described as the pimple there? A. I say I would judge, from the position of the way that the truck was hit, that that would be where the truck would be. I did not say I saw it there. I did not see the truck hit."

While perhaps the remark made by the judge, to the effect that, because the witness was on a street car at the time the collision occurred, she would know where it took place, was not a correct deduction, the cross-examination to which reference has been had satisfactorily established that her answer as to where the collision occurred was not based upon her actual knowledge derived from witnessing the collision, but was from what she felt at the time and from what she afterwards saw of the accident. Her testimony, therefore, in regard to the place where the accident took place, was of no particular value one way or the other. Other witnesses who clearly saw the collision testified fully regarding its location, and fixed it at approximately the position indicated by the testimony of the witness to which objection was made. In such circumstances, we think that the comments made by the trial judge regarding the testimony of the witness could not have affected the verdict.

[12] It appears that one of the witnesses produced by the defendant at first was uncertain in her testimony as to which direction was east and which direction was west, and was likewise unable to state whether the accident occurred on the east side or on the west side of the "wart" in the center of the intersection. In response to a question asked of her by the judge of the trial court as to whether she knew "the east and west," the witness replied, "I do, sometimes;" whereupon the judge rejoined, "I don't see how you find your way home; Broadway runs east and west, but Thirteenth street north and south." The witness, being thus instructed, then testified as to the direction in which the street car was moving and as to the place where the accident occurred. Appellant now assigns as prejudicial error the remark made by the judge that "I don't see how you find your way home." But, in view of the fact that no objection was taken to the remark either at the time it was made or at any time during the trial, nor any exception noted thereto, the point is not available on appeal.

In the case of People v. Ferrara, 18 Cal. App. 271, 274, 122 P. 1089, 1090, the court said:

"As to the claimed misconduct of the court, no objection having been taken to the remark at the time, the possibility of injury to the defendant cannot now be considered. People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 P. 1009; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 45 P. 860; People v. Davenport, 17 Cal. App. 557, 120 P. 451; People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, 114 P. 48, 54."

[13] However, in all probability the remark was considered as a mere pleasantry and of no importance as affecting any issue before the court; at any rate, it was of trivial consequence. Moreover, at the close of the case the jury was instructed by the court that it should—

"not consider anything that may have been said by the court, nor any act of the court during the progress of this trial, as indicating any opinion of the court as to what are or not the facts in the case, or what has or has not been established, or whether the witness who is testifying is testifying truthfully or not. Those are matters left entirely to your discretion, and the court has not by any word or action intended to convey to you any information or impression as to the court's opinion in these matters of fact. Consequently, if you have in your mind any word that you think expressed some opinion of the court on matters of fact, you should dismiss it from your mind as improper of consideration."

It is therefore manifest that the defendant was in nowise prejudiced in its substantial rights by reason of the incident to which reference has been had.

[14] It is also contended by appellant that:

"The court erred in overruling the objections of defendant to and in refusing to grant the motion of defendant to strike from the record testimony of plaintiff concerning whether or not defendant had ever paid her any compensation for loss sustained."

We are unable to see any error in connection with the matter to which appellant has referred, nor are we able to perceive in what manner such evidence could prejudicially affect the defense to the action.

[15, 16] Appellant presents the further point that "evidence of pecuniary worth of deceased and consequent damage not sufficiently established to justify verdict." The evidence showed that Mr. Dawson's "hearing and eyesight were both good; prior to his death he was in perfect health every way; he was earning $120 a month at the time of his death. He was a good husband and made a good living, and was always tending to his own affairs"—also that, had he lived for the full term of his life expectancy, he would have earned the sum of $19,396.80. In such estimate, no account was taken of the loss by plaintiff of the society, comfort, support, and protection which she would have received but for the negligence of the defendant. In the circumstances we think Mr. Dawson's "pecuniary worth" was sufficiently established to justify the verdict in the sum of $10,000. The rule is established by a host of authorities that a verdict cannot be disturbed on the ground that it is excessive, unless it is "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 P. 83. No such conditions are even suggested by appellant as having been present in the instant case.

[17, 18] Appellant's final attack is based upon the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. From what heretofore has been stated herein, the jury was warranted in concluding that the defendant was guilty of negligence, and that Mr. Dawson was free from negligence proximately contributing to the happening of the accident. Those are the ultimate essentials in the maintenance of an action of this character. It is clearly outside the province of this court to consider the evidence for the purpose of determining its weight as to any issue in the pleadings, or in whose favor the evidence as a whole preponderated.

The judgment is affirmed.

MEYERSTEIN v. GREAT AMERICAN INS.
CO. et al. (Civ. 5470.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1927.

1. Insurance ⇨146(3)—Where language of insurance policies is capable of two interpretations, it is to be construed liberally in favor of insured.

Where the language of an insurance policy may be understood in more senses than one, it is to be construed liberally in favor of the insured, and any ambiguity is to be interpreted most strongly against the insurer.

2. Insurance ⇨163(2)—"Additions," in fire insurance policy, held to cover water tank and laundry not physically connected with principal building.

Where insurance policy covered frame building and additions, the word "additions" was held to include water tank and laundry not physically connected with building except by pipe lines.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Addition.]

3. Insurance ⇨146(1)—Construction of insurance policies is question of what was intended by the parties.

In ascertaining what property is covered by an insurance policy, the intent of the parties will be the decisive question.

4. Insurance ⇨163(2)—Water tank and laundry held to be intended as property covered by word "additions" in insurance policy.

Where insurance policy recited that it covered frame building and additions, including fences, walk, and sidewalks, held that it was the intent of the parties that all the property within inclosure, including water tank and laundry, was to be covered by the word "additions," although not physically connected with the frame building.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Actions by Alfred L. Meyerstein against the Great American Insurance Company and the Phoenix Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Goodfellow, Ells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This is an action to recover a certain sum of money under the terms of two fire insurance policies. The property insured belonged to plaintiff and was used by him as a country home. It was situated at Woodside, San Mateo county, and consisted of several buildings located on a tract of land of some 20 acres. The buildings consisted of a dwelling house, a garage with living rooms on the second floor, which was occupied by female help, and a third building, containing on the first floor a laundry, and on the second two bedrooms and a bath which was used for the male help. Immediately alongside of the house containing the laundry was a wooden tower, 60 feet in height, on which was mounted a 10,000-gallon redwood water tank. The garage and laundry building were entirely separate frame buildings, situated some 70 feet distant from the main dwelling. The tank frame was also an entirely separate structure, and it, too, was some 70 feet distant from such dwelling. The water tank supplied all the buildings with water through pipes. Between the several houses were concrete paths connecting one with the other. The entire premises, including the three buildings and the water tower and tank, were inclosed by a fence marking the entire tract owned by plaintiff. On the 7th day of October, 1918, plaintiff caused the property to be insured by defendant companies. The policies are identical in form, and the printed portion thereof is the California standard form fire insurance policy provided for by statute. Attached to the policies were slips describing the property insured. The coverage clauses in each of the policies, so far as they refer to the buildings, contained the following recitals:

"$4,000. On the frame building and additions, including equipment, foundations, platforms, porches, * * * and fixtures, belonging to or forming part of the building and additions thereto, and also including * * * walks and sidewalks located on, in, and around the premises. * * * $250. On frame building occupied as a private garage situate on same premises. * * *"

On each of the policies there appeared in typewriting the following:

"Detached at Woodside, San Mateo, Cal.

"Permission granted to make alterations and repairs to above-described building and to build additions, this policy to cover therein and or thereon according to its respective items.

"This policy shall also extend and apply, under its respective items, to cover all material and supplies in and or about the within described premises to be used in the construction, reconstruction, alteration, and repairing of property mentioned above."

On September 19, 1920, a fire occurred on plaintiff's premises which destroyed the laundry building, tank, and tank frame, but which did no damage to the main dwelling or garage. Proof of loss was made. The insurance carriers denied liability on the ground that the portions of the premises destroyed were not covered by the policies, and this action followed. It will be noticed that while the main dwelling and garage are mentioned in the policies, no specific mention is made of the laundry building or the tank and its frame. It was plaintiff's contention at the trial that the laundry and tank were included in the coverage under the head of "additions" to the main building, and as such they were covered by the language of the policy. The lower court sustained this contention. It found that the loss amounted to the sum of $5,103. Judgment was accordingly rendered against each of the defendants for one-half of the total loss. It is from such judgment that this appeal is taken. The sole question here presented is, Was it the intention of the parties, by the use of the word "additions" in connection with the main building, to thereby intend to cover the separate laundry building and tank?

Primarily, it may be said that an insurance policy is a contract of indemnity for loss, and, as in the case of construction of contracts, generally the main object, where there is doubt or ambiguity, is to determine in what sense the words employed are used or intended. Words are seldom construed by courts literally, but are adjudged according to the context and the approved usage of language; technical words and phrases, and such others as have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, are to be construed according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition. Code Civ. Proc. § 16. In the case of Taylor v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 34 Cal. App. 471, 167 P. 899, it is said some flexibility of meaning must be given to the language of standard forms of insurance, the rigid language of which must be interpreted in the light of the common understanding of the parties in order to do justice between them; that the construction of a policy of insurance is to be ascertained from the whole instrument, the nature of the property to which the language of the policy is to be applied, the purposes for which the property is ordinarily to be used and its situation; that policies of insurance should be interpreted most strongly against the insurance carriers because of the fact that they draw the contracts. See, also, O'Neil v. Caledonian, 166 Cal. 310, 135 P. 1121; Greer

[1] Where, then, the language may be understood in more senses than one, the rule of law is that an insurance policy is to be construed liberally in favor of the insured, and any uncertainty or ambiguity in the contract is to be interpreted most strongly against the insurer. Northy v. Bankers' Life, 110 Cal. 547, 42 P. 1079; Victoria S. S. Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 167 Cal. 348, 139 P. 807.

[2] This, of course, does not mean that these rules will authorize a court to disregard the plain and unequivocal terms of the policy, and make a new contract for the parties. The word "additions" may and is often intended to cover structures not physically connected with or attached to the principal building. The adjudicated cases on the subject, where this word has been employed, are numerous, and it has been generally held that, where, as here, the buildings were in existence at the time of the issuance of the policy and were used in connection with the main building, they are included within the meaning of that term. The question is what was intended by the parties to be covered by the policies.

[3, 4] In the coverage clause of the instant case it is recited that the policy covers the frame building and additions, including the fences, walks, and sidewalks, located on and in or around the premises "situate detached at Woodside," and under the clause relating to the insurance on the personal property it is recited that all betterments and additions paid for by the assured and contained in the main building and additions thereto are included in the coverage clause. Permission was also given to make repairs and alterations to the property insured. It seems manifest to us that the clear intent of the parties was to include in the coverage clause all the property within the inclosure. It specifically included the fences and the walks between the houses located on and "around the premises." The tank and its tower was the source of the water supply to the various buildings and was connected by pipe lines to the several houses, and they were part of the premises. As suggested by counsel for respondent, had the tank been located on the roof of the residence proper, there could be no possible question but that it would be included in the policy. Considering the fact that plaintiff was given express authority to make alterations, and the alterations when so made would be covered by the policy, to give to the instruments the construction contended for by appellants would be to render meaningless the word "additions," for there was nothing else of an insurable nature within the inclosure to which it possibly could apply. In our opinion, the case is on all fours with Taylor v. Northwestern Nat. Ins.

Co., 34 Cal. App. 471, 167 P. 899. In that case the policy, among other things, provided for insurance on a one-story frame building and additions. There was located on the premises a shed used for storage purposes, which was disconnected from the main building, it being a separate structure. The shed was destroyed by fire, and the contention was there made, as here, that the word "additions" should be construed as intended to cover only such additions to the store building as were structurally connected therewith. The trial court concluded otherwise, and held that the construction contended for would be too narrow a one to be placed upon the language of the policy. The case was affirmed on appeal, this court holding that the shed was an addition to the store, within the meaning of the word "addition" as it was used in the policy. A transfer of this case was denied by the Supreme Court.

We conclude, therefore, that the language employed in the coverage clauses of the policies is general and comprehensive enough to include the property destroyed, and that it was so intended by the parties.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOOTH v. FRIEDMAN et al. (Civ. 5833.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 4, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 837(11)—Appellate court must consider testimony of plaintiff suing executors of deceased, in absence of objection or motion to strike out such testimony (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1880, subd. 3).

Where, in action against executors of deceased to recover on alleged obligation of deceased to pay plaintiff certain moneys, there was no objection or motion to strike out testimony of plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1880, subd. 3, appellate court must consider it in determining whether finding was supported by evidence.

2. Guaranty $\S$ 105—Signers on guaranty are liable for proportionate share of obligation assumed, in absence of contrary showing.

Where guaranty was to be signed by three persons, signers are, between themselves, liable for one-third of obligation assumed, in absence of contrary showing.

3. Guaranty $\S$ 106—Finding that deceased, at time of plaintiff's executing guaranty agreement, obligated himself to pay one-third thereof, held supported by evidence.

Finding, in action against executors of deceased on alleged obligation of deceased to pay proportionate share of guaranty paid by plaintiff, to effect that deceased at time of ex-execution of guaranty agreement by plaintiff agreed that he would be obligated for one-third thereof, held supported by evidence.

4. Guaranty $\Leftrightarrow$ 105—Joint guarantor on paying obligation has cause of action to require others to contribute (Civ. Code, § 1432).

Under Civ. Code, § 1432, whenever one of joint guarantors pays obligation of guaranty, cause of action requiring others to contribute arises.

5. Trial $\Leftrightarrow$ 404(1)—Finding, if possible, should be construed to give judgment force and effect.

Finding should be so construed, if possible, so as to give judgment force and effect, and not to overthrow it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by F. E. Booth against Helen E. Friedman, as executrix, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Claiming that M. S. Eisner, deceased, was at the time of his death under obligation to pay the plaintiff certain moneys, the plaintiff commenced this action against the defendants as executors of the estate of the deceased. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and a judgment in accordance with those findings was entered. From that judgment the defendants have appealed and have brought up a bill of exceptions. On the appeal the appellants attack certain findings as not being supported by the evidence. Before taking up a consideration of those attacks it is necessary to recite some of the facts.

Prior to the year 1920 the Novelty Products Company, a corporation, had been engaged in the manufacture of toys. It had a paid-up capital of $100,000. B. D. M. Greene was president and manager. Under his solicitation $2,500 of the stock was sold to M. S. Eisner, deceased, and $2,500 was sold to F. E. Booth and $2,500 was sold to H. G. Maxson. B. D. M. Greene was the holder of $45,000, and other stockholders each held $2,500, more or less, making in all about 25 stockholders. In January, 1920, the Novelty Products Company owed the Bank of Italy on certain promissory notes. The bank was asking for security. On that date, after certain conversations held, F. E. Booth, M. S. Eisner, and B. D. M. Greene signed a written guaranty in the sum of $10,000 in which they recited:

"We hereby promise and agree to pay to you at any time upon demand, in United States gold coin, the full amount of principal and interest due to you from said the Novelty Products Company at the time of said demand, not exceeding the sum of $10,000."

On March 14, 1920, F. E. Booth was in Europe, and a similar paper in the sum of $5,000 was signed by M. S. Eisner and B. D. M. Greene. On May 17, 1920, under similar circumstances, the latter two signed another guaranty in the sum of $3,000. Later, when F. E. Booth had returned, the bank asked that it be given one guaranty and that the others be taken up. On November 12, 1920, a document identical in form, but in the principal sum of $18,000, was signed by F. E. Booth alone and was delivered to the bank, and thereupon the bank surrendered the three guaranties for $10,000, $5,000, and $3,000, respectively. Thereafter F. E. Booth was compelled to pay the bank. Having paid the bank, he made his claim to the executors to be reimbursed to the extent of one-third of the amount so paid by him. The claim was rejected, and thereupon he brought this suit, and in his complaint he pleaded his cause of action in accordance with the claim theretofore presented by him.

Whenever the bank asked for a guaranty, B. D. M. Greene communicated the request to the decedent. In turn, the decedent acted alone or took the matter up with F. E. Booth and later communicated with B. D. M. Greene. Each of the first three guaranties was on the printed form of the Bank of Italy; each was in duplicate; when B. D. M. Greene received them he signed one copy only and delivered both copies into the hands of M. S. Eisner; and when M. S. Eisner or F. E. Booth, or both, had signed, the signed copy was returned to B. D. M. Greene and he delivered it to the bank. All of these steps were taken as to the one sued on except this—the record shows that B. D. M. Greene never saw either copy after he delivered them to M. S. Eisner. It does not show who delivered it to the Bank of Italy. Although B. D. M. Greene was the principal witness of the plaintiff, he testified that he could not account for his signature not being on the guaranty dated November 12, 1920. There was no evidence explaining its absence. There was no evidence, oral or written, accounting for the absence of M. S. Eisner's name from the same document except the testimony of F. E. Booth herein-after set forth.

The appellants claim that the sixth finding is not supported by the evidence. That finding is as follows:

"That at the time of the execution of said $18,000 guaranty agreement and thereafter, and in consideration of the execution thereof by said F. E. Booth, as aforesaid, the said Milton S. Eisner agreed and acknowledged that he was responsible for, and would pay to, F. E. Booth, one-third of any amount which the said F. E. Booth might be obliged to and did at any time actually pay to the said Bank of Italy by virtue and because of the execution of said $18,000 guaranty agreement by the said F. E. Booth, and that said Milton S. Eisner would pay to the said F. E. Booth said one-third of such amount whenever and at such time as the said F. E. Booth paid to the Bank of Italy such sums as the said F. E. Booth became liable for to the said bank because of said $18,000 guaranty agreement."

The appellants claim there is no testimony in the record to the effect that the deceased promised to pay one-third of the amount paid to the bank by F. E. Booth, that there is no testimony in the record that the deceased authorized F. E. Booth to make any payment to the bank, and that there is no testimony in the record that the deceased would repay F. E. Booth "whenever and at such time as" F. E. Booth might pay the bank.

Before proceeding further it should be stated that the F. E. Booth Company had on its books an account of other transactions and of moneys loaned by it to the Novelty Products Company, but none of those matters comes within the scope of this litigation. However, some of the conversations held between the decedent and representatives of the F. E. Booth Company were concerned with the book account and not with the guaranties held by the bank.

When the plaintiff was introducing its case in chief it called F. E. Booth as a witness. The defendants interposed an objection to his testimony. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3. The objection was sustained, and the witness withdrew.

Between the time that the first guaranty was signed and his death, the decedent held conversations from time to time with B. D. M. Greene, James G. Jessie, secretary of the F. E. Booth Company, and H. G. Maxson, assistant general manager of the F. E. Booth Company. The last two took the stand and testified to certain admissions made by the decedent. Some of those admissions tended to support the case of the plaintiff. When the plaintiff rested the defendants called certain witnesses and offered proof of statements made by F. E. Booth and by some of his witnesses inconsistent with the theory of the plaintiff's case. In rebuttal F. E. Booth took the stand and testified as to his recollection as to the connection in which those inconsistent statements were made by him. Among other things in his direct examination, he testified:

"I don't know whether it was that particular day or at a subsequent meeting, but I told them why this $18,000 note was signed, and I told them further that Eisner had asked me, in view of the fact that I owned twice as much stock as he did, and in view of the further fact that he didn't want to entangle his financial affairs—he had had some difficulty, he told me, and I told them, with some sheep business and one thing and another—and he asked me as a favor if I would not let his name be off of that note, but that he assured me on his word that this responsibility would not be rubbed out; that it would remain just the same as if his name was on that. All this I explained to young Milton and to Mr. Friedman."

The defendants made no objection and made no motion to strike out, but proceeded to cross-examine the witness. On cross-examination, among other things, the witness testified:

"At the first one I did not realize that Eisner's name was not on that paper. Had I known that at the time there would not have been any doubt in my mind. Subsequently I recalled that Eisner had requested his name to be left off for the reason that I have given. I had not recalled it up to that time. Subsequently I remembered that Eisner's name was not on that note, and that he had asked me as a favor and explained the reason."

[1, 2] As there was no objection to or motion to strike out the foregoing testimony, we must consider it. Kinley v. Largent, 187 Cal. 71, 200 P. 937. The foregoing evidence shows that from the beginning each guaranty was to be signed by three. Nothing to the contrary appearing, the signers, as between themselves, would be liable for one-third of the obligation assumed. Bunker v. Osborn, 132 Cal. 480, 482, 64 P. 853. When the bank asked for one guaranty in the place of the first three, B. D. M. Greene signed it and delivered the document into the hands of M. S. Eisner for the signatures of M. S. Eisner and F. E. Booth. Nothing was said by any one showing that B. D. M. Greene was to be released from liability. Nothing was said to the effect that the liability of M. S. Eisner would be increased or decreased, but it was said that it would remain the same as if his name was on the new guaranty dated November 12, 1920. It cannot be claimed, therefore, that there was no evidence that the liability of the decedent was not fixed at one-third.

Under all of the facts it is patent that, upon the demand of the bank, F. E. Booth was bound to pay the bank. As his name was the only name on the guaranty, he was the sole maker. When he requested that his name be left off, M. S. Eisner impliedly waived his right to participate in settling the account with the bank, and at the same time he expressly promised to respond to his portion of the amounts so paid by F. E. Booth to the bank.

[3, 4] The uncontroverted evidence was to the effect that M. S. Eisner agreed to bear his burden and that the same should be the same as if his name was on the guaranty dated November 12, 1920. If his name had been on it, it is clear, as we have shown above, that he would have been liable to the extent of one-third. Whenever one of the joint guarantors paid, he would have at once a cause of action against the others requiring the others to contribute. Civ. Code, § 1432. The respondent by his pleading claimed no additional or modified liability on the part of the decedent. It may be conceded that there was no direct evidence that F. E. Booth was to be repaid at the time he made his payment. It must also be conceded that there was no direct evidence to the contrary. The respondent's pleading, and the findings made in response thereto, but followed the time of repayment which the law implied. We cannot say the findings were not supported by the evidence on this particular matter.

[5] The appellants claim that neither the findings nor the judgment are supported by the pleadings, and the findings do not support the judgment. They call attention to paragraph 5 of the complaint and to paragraph 6 of the findings, and they claim the latter is narrower than the former. That is true, but if we look at other findings we discover that there is a finding responsive to every allegation contained in the complaint. In this same connection the appellants assert that the agreement as set forth in the findings may be so construed as to bring it within the statute of frauds. That is possible, but the rule is well settled that findings should be so construed, if possible, as to give the judgment force and effect, not to overthrow it. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 77, 31 P. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257. Following that rule, we have no trouble in saying that the point made by the appellants is not well founded.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOSS v. SILENT DRAMA SYNDICATE et al.
(Civ. 4574.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 30, 1927.

1. Licenses ⇨39—Trustee's sale of shares in common-law trust without permit is void (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 12, 14).

Under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, pp. 679, 680), §§ 12, 14, trustee's sale of unit shares in common-law trust company without permit from corporation commissioner is void.

2. Contracts ⇨107—Generally, act penalized by statute is void.

Generally, act for doing of which statute prohibits or attaches a penalty is void.

3. Licenses ⇨39—Trust syndicate and officers issuing share certificates without permit are responsible to good-faith purchasers, though syndicate acted through mistake (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Not only trust syndicate exceeding its power in issuing certificate for shares without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St.

1917, p. 679), § 12, but officers issuing them, are legally responsible to purchasers in good faith for implied representation that certificate is genuine, though syndicate's act be done through mistake without fraudulent intent.

4. Licenses ⇨39—Issuance of certificate for shares in trust syndicate without permit, in reliance on corporation commissioner's statement that none was necessary, and offer to issue valid certificate on securing permit after purchaser commenced action for fraud, held not available defenses (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Neither fact that certificate for shares was issued in good faith by trust syndicate, without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679), § 12, in reliance on corporation commissioner's statement that no permit was necessary, nor fact that it secured permit several months after purchaser commenced action for damages and by amended answer offered to issue valid certificate, is available defense; especially in absence of showing that such certificate was worth amount of plaintiff's investment.

5. Licenses ⇨39—Trust syndicate cannot affirm or ratify issuance of share certificate without permit (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Issuance of certificate for shares in trust syndicate without permit being void under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679), § 12, was incapable of later affirmation or ratification by syndicate.

6. Licenses ⇨39—Evidence held to support judgment for purchaser, suing trust syndicate and owner of shares purchased for fraud in issuing certificate therefor without permit (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

Evidence that plaintiff paid owner $500 cash for shares in trust syndicate without notice or knowledge that certificate therefor was void because issued without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679), § 12, and relied on genuineness thereof to his damage, held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff, in action against owner and syndicate for fraud, as against contention that plaintiff relied solely on owner's representations.

7. Licenses ⇨39—Purchaser of shares in trust syndicate for cash at par held to have relied on validity of certificate issued without permit (Corporate Securities Act).

One purchasing shares in trust syndicate for cash at par value held to have relied on validity and genuineness of certificate therefor, and hence entitled to recover damages for fraud in issuing certificate without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673).

8. Licenses ⇨39—Statement on certificate that shares in trust syndicate were issued pursuant to trust agreement did not place purchaser on notice of issuance without permit (Corporate Securities Act).

Statement on face of certificate for shares in trust syndicate that they were issued pursuant to conditions in trust agreement did not place purchaser on notice that certificate was issued without permit from corporation commissioner under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673); being merely implied representation that certificate was genuine and that syndicate had right to issue it.

9. Licenses 39—Purchaser of shares certificate issued without permit acquired no beneficial interest in trust syndicate and was damaged by payment therefor (Corporate Securities Act).

Purchaser of shares in trust syndicate, issuing certificate therefor without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), acquired no beneficial interest in syndicate, and was damaged by payment of money without consideration in reliance on implied false representation of certificate's genuineness; sale being absolute nullity.

10. Damages 69—One recovering damages for issuance of certificate for shares in trust syndicate without permit held entitled to interest from day of issuance (Civ. Code, § 3287; Corporate Securities Act).

Under Civ. Code, § 3287, purchaser of shares in trust syndicate issuing certificate therefor without permit required by Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917 p. 673), was entitled to interest on amount of damages recovered from day that certificate was issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Otto J. Boss against the Silent Drama Syndicate, an unincorporated association, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Neil S. McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry K. Sargent, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. At the time when the cause of action herein accrued the defendant Silent Drama Syndicate was an unincorporated association operating by virtue of a trust agreement under which defendants Graydon and Brown were its trustees. The business or property of the syndicate was divided into shares of the par value of $100 each, of which one Keady was the owner of 220 shares evidenced by a certificate of stock to that effect. For the sum of $500 in cash paid to him by Otto J. Boss (the plaintiff herein), Keady sold to Boss 5 shares of such syndicate; and thereupon Keady surrendered his certificate of 220 shares to the defendant Silent Drama Syndicate, which association, in lieu of said 220 shares, issued a certificate of stock to plaintiff for 5 shares and a second certificate to Keady for 215 shares. Approximately 16 months thereafter plaintiff brought an action against all of said defendants for damages to him arising out of the fraud and deceit of said defendants in issuing the said certificates of stock. From a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

[1] It is admitted by appellants that at the time of issuing the certificate of stock to plaintiff no permit had been issued by the commissioner of corporations of this state by which the Silent Drama Syndicate was authorized to sell, offer for sale, negotiate, or issue any certificate of the said syndicate as provided by the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 673).

In the case entitled In re Girard, 186 Cal. 719, 200 P. 593, the facts with reference to the association therein involved were similar to those herein. It was held (syllabus) that:

"A sale by trustees, without a permit from the corporation commissioner, of unit shares or unit interests in a common-law trust company organized in pursuance of a declaration of trust executed between the trustees, is a violation of the Corporate Securities Act."

Section 12 of the Corporate Securities Act provides that:

"Every security issued by any company, without a permit of the commissioner authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void. * * *"

And by section 14 of the same act a penalty is prescribed as to "every officer, agent, or employee of any company, and every other person, who knowingly authorizes, directs, or aids in the issue or sale of, or issues or executes, or sells, or causes or assists in causing to be issued, executed, or sold, any security, in nonconformity with a permit of the commissioner. * * *"

[2] Furthermore, as is stated in the case of Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14, "the general rule * * * is that where a statute prohibits, or attaches a penalty to, the doing of an act, the act is void." See, also, Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36.

[3] While, as suggested by appellants, much authority is available to the point that in an action for deceit, intentional fraud, rather than constructive fraud, is a necessary element to the maintenance of an action, nevertheless, with reference to the act by a corporation acting in excess of its powers in issuing certificates of stock, it appears to be well-established law that not only the corporation, but as well its officers so issuing such stock, are legally responsible therefor to purchasers in good faith, even though the act by the corporation be done through mistake and without any fraudulent intent. 5 Fletcher's Encyc. Corporations, § 3493; 1 Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) § 292; 14 Cor. Jur. p. 468.

In the case of Green v. Caribou Oil Min. Co., 179 Cal. 787, 178 P. 950, it appeared that the secretary of a corporation fraudulently issued a certificate of stock therein to himself and that the vice president of the corporation, acting in the absence of the president thereof, negligently affixed his signature to such certificate; that the certificate also bore the official seal of the corporation; that about two months after such certificate had been issued the secretary borrowed a sum of money from Green (the plaintiff) for which the secretary gave his promissory note to Green and pledged said certificate of stock as security for the payment of said note. It was held that the corporation was liable. In discussing the matter and in commenting upon a case theretofore decided by the Supreme Court of the state of Washington, the court said, in part:

"Furthermore, we think the Washington court mistook the basis of the liability of the corporation for fraudulently issued stock. It does not arise from anything that occurs in the making of a subsequent transfer. It comes from the false issue itself, which is the act of the corporation officers within the apparent scope of their authority, which, in effect is a representation by the corporation itself to the purchaser from the original holder that the false stock is genuine. * * *

[4, 5] In principle, we can see no difference between the case last cited and the instant case. In the Green Case, money was loaned in good faith on a false representation by the corporation issuing the stock; and in the instant case, instead of a loan being made on the stock, it was purchased outright on what in law amounted to a false representation. In the one case, the lender of the money had a right to rely upon the implied representation made by the corporation that the certificate of stock was genuine; and in the instant case, the plaintiff had a similar right not only as to the original certificate for 220 shares standing in the name of Keady, but as well in the new certificate issued by the association to plaintiff. We are of the opinion that neither the fact that the certificate was issued in good faith by the association and in reliance upon a statement made by the corporation commissioner to the effect that no permit was necessary to enable the association to issue such stock, nor the fact that several months after the action was commenced by plaintiff the Silent Drama Syndicate secured from the corporation commissioner the necessary permit and thereupon, by amended answer to the complaint, offered to issue to plaintiff a valid certificate for the 5 shares which he had purchased, is available to the defendants as a defense to plaintiff's cause of action. As declared in numerous cases cited in each of the several authorities heretofore noted herein, the question of good faith by a corporation in issuing what in law is a void certificate of stock is wholly immaterial; and the offer by the corporation of reimbursement to plaintiff by issuing a new certificate to him (especially in the absence of a showing that such corporate certificate was at least equal in value to the amount of plaintiff's investment) would also be unavailing as a defense. The cause of action had accrued to plaintiff long before any attempt was made by the association to obtain the permit necessary to enable it to legally issue its certificate of stock. Besides, the original act having been void, it was incapable of later affirmation or ratification by the association. In addition thereto, it is clear that between the date when the certificate of stock was originally issued and the date of its offer to plaintiff to reissue to him a valid certificate, the association had no right to speculate on whether the value of its stock would remain stationary or whether it would increase or decrease. While it may be assumed that when plaintiff purchased the stock it was worth its face value, there is no evidence upon which a conclusion could rightly be based that at the time the defendants offered to reissue to plaintiff a valid certificate of stock in lieu of the void certificate, the stock was worth par, or, indeed, had any value whatsoever.

[6] It is also urged by appellants that in purchasing the stock in question plaintiff did not rely upon the representations made by the association, but relied solely upon representations made to him by Mr. Keady. With reference to the facts, the finding by the trial court was that:

"Plaintiff paid to one L. Y. Keady $500 in cash for said certificate in good faith and without any notice or knowledge that the said certificate was illegal and void and believed and relied upon the genuineness thereof to his damage."

It thus appears that the evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion reached thereon by the trial court.

[7] Appellants advance the further contention that in purchasing the certificate of stock plaintiff did not rely upon its validity and genuineness. But it is manifest that to attribute such a state of mind to the purchaser of stock in a corporation would import to him a mentality bordering on imbecility. It would seem incredible that anyone in his right mind would buy stock in a corporation or an association of the character of the defendant syndicate if even a suggestion were present regarding the validity or genuineness of the certificate representing the shares of stock which he was about to purchase. Had plaintiff exchanged some "wild-cat" mining stock or other commodity of equally doubtful value for the certificate in question, the transaction might have afforded some basis for appellants' criticism. But in view of the fact that plaintiff's purchase was for real money, and that, far from buying the stock at a discount, he paid par value for it, little if any doubt can exist as to the estimate which plaintiff placed upon the genuineness and validity of the certificate of stock purchased by him.

[8] Furthermore, it is claimed by appellants that because on the face of the certificate there appeared a statement to the effect that the shares represented thereby were issued pursuant to the conditions contained in the trust agreement and declaration of trust, the purchaser was placed on notice and required to make an independent investigation. But the difficulty with such a conclusion is that both by statute and by judicial declaration the certificate was void. It is manifest that, so far as the purchaser was concerned, such a statement represented nothing other than an implied representation on the part of the association that the certificate was genuine and that the association had the right to issue it. In other words, the language of the "notice" conveyed to the mind of the purchaser the fact that in accordance with the powers vested in the trustees by the provisions of the trust agreement, the trustees were issuing certificates of shares or units in the trust property as evidence of the ownership therein of the respective holders of such certificates; but which from a legal standpoint, without the necessary permit from the corporation commissioner so to do, was an act forbidden by law and consequently was of no validity.

[9] Appellants advance the further point that plaintiff is the equitable owner of an undivided beneficial interest in the trust estate which he contracted to purchase from Keady, and that he has not been damaged by reason of the premises.

But it is difficult, if possible, to understand how any beneficial interest in the association could have been transferred to plaintiff by virtue of a transaction which was void not only by the provisions of the statute, but as well by judicial determination, as hereinbefore set forth. If equitable interests in unincorporated associations could be sold and transferred without the necessity of complying with the provisions of the statute, the entire purpose of the statute would be rendered nugatory and of no effect. If any meaning is to be credited to the language of the statute regarding the invalidity of attempted sales of "securities" of such an association without first having obtained from the corporation commissioner the necessary permit to make the same, it must be that such language carries the significance that any such act is an absolute nullity and consequently transfers no rights, nor incurs any obligations or duties so far as the person is concerned to whom such attempted sale is made. Without any consideration moving to him, plaintiff was induced to and did pay his money on what in law was a false representation upon which he relied. His damage follows as a matter of course.

[10] It is finally urged by appellants that plaintiff should not have been allowed interest on his claim prior to judgment. Section 3287 of the Civil Code, in part provides that:

"Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day. * * *"

It is clear that plaintiff's "right to recover * * * vested in him upon a particular day," to wit, on the same day that the purported certificate of stock was issued to him; hence his right to interest from such day is controlled by statute. On principle, to the same effect, see Tome v. Parkersburg R. R. Co., 39 Md. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 540; National Bank of Webb City v. Newell-Morse Royalty Co., 259 Mo. 637, 168 S. W. 699.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 28, 1927.

1. Prohibition ☞28—Order denying motion to transfer trial for judge's prejudice, which was denied, held conclusive in prohibition proceedings.

Where, in reply to motion and affidavit for order transferring trial on account of prejudice of judge, judge filed counter affidavit denying all material facts set forth, court would not review order denying motion in prohibition proceedings.

2. Records ☞7—Affidavit held "filed," where turned over to file clerk before hearing, though register failed to disclose filing.

Where department clerk marked fully executed affidavit "filed" and delivered it to file clerk in customary manner before hearing of motion, affidavit held filed, though register of actions failed to disclose filing.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, File.]

Application by Jay Butler Harris for writ of prohibition, to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, to prevent respondent from hearing and determining a certain cause pending before it. Writ discharged.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Ray C. McAllaster, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This proceeding is founded upon an alleged "prejudice and bias" of Hon. Hugh J. Crawford as judge of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles against petitioner, which, if established, would prevent petitioner from having a fair and impartial trial in an action now pending in said court.

Prior to the filing of the petition herein petitioner, as plaintiff in the action, made and presented his motion therein for "an order transferring the trial * * * to a judge * * * other than Hon. Hugh J. Crawford. * * *" The grounds specified in the notice of motion were the prejudice and bias of said judge which, as alleged, would result as hereinbefore indicated. The motion was supported by an affidavit which specified the particular facts from which it was claimed by the plaintiff that the prejudice of the said judge against him would appear and legally follow. In reply to such affidavit Judge Crawford made and filed his counter affidavit, in which, in force and effect, he completely and specifically denied each of the material facts set forth in the affidavit presented by the plaintiff, and, in addition thereto, alleged that "he has never had, nor does he now have, any feeling of animosity toward said plaintiff and never has had and does not now have any prejudice or bias or dislike or contempt against and concerning the said plaintiff, and alleges that he is qualified in all respects to act as presiding judge over the trial of this action, and that the said plaintiff has had and will continue to have a fair and impartial trial and hearing herein before affiant."

On the hearing of the motion it was denied.

[1] The law relating to such a condition as is hereinbefore set forth is clearly stated in the syllabus in the case of Estudillo v. Security Loan & Trust Co., 158 Cal. 66, 109 P. 884, as follows:

"An order refusing a change of venue, requested on the ground of the alleged bias and prejudice of the trial judge, will not be reviewed on appeal, when the statements contained in the moving affidavits tending to show bias are fully met by counter affidavits. Under such circumstances, the finding of the trial judge, on the question of his own disqualification, is conclusive on appeal."

To the same effect are Swan v. Talbot, 152 Cal. 142, 94 P. 238, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066; McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 6, 155 P. 86; Estate of Kasson, 141 Cal. 33, 74 P. 436; People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 P. 351; People v. Phillips, 30 Cal. App. 31, 157 P. 1003, 1005.

It therefore appears that the conclusion reached by Judge Crawford as to whether he was either prejudiced against the plaintiff or biased in favor of the defendant in the action before him is conclusive in the present proceeding.

[2] The question is also incidentally presented regarding the status of the filing of Judge Crawford's affidavit with the clerk of the court. The register of actions fails to disclose that such affidavit was ever filed. However, the affidavit filed herein by one of the department clerks of the superior court is to the effect that, prior to the hearing of the motion to which reference has been had, Judge Crawford subscribed and swore to the affidavit in question before said clerk and directed him to file the affidavit in the action to which it referred, and that thereafter and on the same day the clerk marked the affidavit "filed," and delivered the same to the file clerk of the county clerk of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, in the manner usually and customarily employed by deputies by said office assigned to the several departments of said superior court."

Respecting such a situation, in the matter entitled Estate of Sankey (Cal. Sup.) 249 P. 517, 519, it is said:

"The actual indorsement of the instrument is not a necessary part of the filing, but is mere evidence of that fact. An officer is presumed to have performed his duty, and one may not be prejudiced by the mere failure of an officer to perform his ministerial duty. When the instrument is deposited with the proper officer, at the proper place for the purpose of filing, in contemplation of law it is deemed to have been filed. Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 255, 53 P. 796; Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 344, 21 P. 15, 23 P. 314; Estate of Carroll, 190 Cal. 105, 111, 210 P. 817; 3 Words and Phrases, First Series, p. 2768."

The point advanced by petitioner, therefore, that the counter affidavit of Judge Crawford was never filed, is not tenable.

On the hearing of the petition for the writ herein a demurrer thereto was presented by respondents on the specified ground of its ambiguity; also that the petition as a whole failed to state facts sufficient to show any cause for the granting of the writ of prohibition. The demurrer is overruled.

As it is apparent that petitioner is not entitled to the relief for which he prayed in his petition, it is ordered that the writ be and it is discharged.

DOUGLAS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. ★

WHITE v. SAME.

(Civ. 4402.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District. Division 2, California. March 29, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 26, 1927.)

1. Railroads $\S$ 398(1)—Evidence held to justify recovery for injuries to persons on pile of ties struck by car.

In action against railroad for injuries and death, alleged to have resulted when some part of car being switched struck pile of ties on which plaintiff and decedent were sitting, evidence held sufficient to justify recovery.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1170(9)—Instruction, authorizing recovery for injuries if employees operated train negligently, held prejudicial as inconsistent with other instructions (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

In action against railroad for injuries and death, alleged to have resulted when some part of car being switched struck pile of ties on which plaintiff and decedent were sitting, instruction, authorizing recovery if injuries were caused by negligence of employees operating train, held prejudicial, within Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, as inconsistent with other instructions on subject of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. S. Burnell, Judge.

Separate actions by Louise Marie Douglas, as administratrix of the estate of Dean Cheney Douglas, and by S. I. White against the Southern Pacific Company. On death of S. I. White, Jennie H. White, as his administratrix, was substituted as party plaintiff. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene C. Campbell, of Long Beach, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. On May 7, 1921, the defendant and appellant was switching a steel gondola-type car at the Los Angeles harbor, when some part of the car struck a pile of ties which were stacked alongside of the tracks and upon which Dean Cheney Douglas and the original plaintiff, S. I. White, were sitting, and resulting in the death of Douglas and the injury of White. The exact cause of the accident is very much in doubt. There was testimony, which was also positively denied, that a piece of iron extended out from the side of the car a couple of feet and that the whole pile of ties was knocked out of place about 1 foot. There is other testimony that, which the ties were of the same length and stacked so as to clear the edge of the car by 6 or 8 inches, one of them, about 15 minutes prior to the accident, was observed to be shorter than the others as the witness saw it from the end away from the tracks. This would authorize the inference under the circumstances, especially as several witnesses testified that only one tie had been knocked off the pile, that it had been pushed over and protruded sufficiently far to be struck. The engine and car were traveling, according to the prevailing testimony, under 6 miles an hour, although one witness testified that he had told plaintiff's counsel that they were running between 20 and 25 miles an hour. The lookout was not on the forward end of the car, but on the rear of the gondola near the top, from which point he claimed vantage in ability to see.

Under these circumstances, action was commenced to recover damages for the death of Douglas by the administratrix of his estate, and by White to recover damages for the injury suffered by him. The actions were tried together, and the jury returned a verdict in the action brought by the administratrix in the sum of $5,000 and in favor of White in the sum of $4,500. The defendant appealed from the judgments entered on the verdict, and by stipulation a single bill of exceptions is filed for use in the consideration of both causes. Since the appeals were taken S. I. White has died, and Jennie H. White, as administratrix of his estate, has been substituted as plaintiff.

[1] The appellant complains that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts, and in support of this contention recites a stipulation that the defendant had no control of the platform upon which the ties were piled or over the ties, but that the platform was under lease to the Banning Company, a stranger to the defendant, hence that the defendant was only charged with operating its cars over and along the tracks with ordinary care. Aside from the fact that the jury were entitled to say from the evidence already recited that the crew in charge of this car failed to use ordinary care if they failed to observe a protruding tie, there was the other evidence of a piece of iron which stuck out 2 feet from the side of the car, which would also be sufficient to justify the verdicts.

[2] However, there is a much more serious question raised by appellant with respect to the instructions. The judge gave the following instruction:

"It is admitted by defendant in this case that A. J. Beck, E. L. Carr, G. J. Clouth, D. Frazer, and Leslie Straight were employees of defendant and were acting within the scope of their employment at the time of the accident. If you should find that the injury to one plaintiff and the death of the other were caused by the negligence of these employees, or either of them, while operating defendant's engine and car, at the time of or immediately prior to the accident, your verdict should be for plaintiffs and against the defendant, since an employer is bound by the acts of his employee while acting within the scope of their employment, and their negligence is, in law, deemed to be the employer's negligence."

It will be noted that the jury was directed to return a verdict for the plaintiffs and against the defendant, in the event they found that the death and the injury were caused by the negligence of either of the employees. The appellant claims that the instruction is inconsistent with other instructions given by the trial judge on the subject of a pleaded defense—contributory negligence. These other instructions properly told the jury that, if White and Douglas did not use ordinary care for their own protection and such negligence contributed to their injuries, they should find for defendant, regardless of defendant's negligence. The respondents assert that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in saying that there was contributory negligence, and, further, that the instructions should be read as a whole and the inaccuracies of one cured by the others. There was sufficient testimony to justify the jury in saying that the negligence of plaintiff in the one case and the negligence of the deceased in the other had contributed to the injury and the death, respectively. They were sitting on the ties in a position to observe whether they were in danger by reason of a tie being out of position, or even to observe the iron extending from the side of the car, had they directed their attention to it. Many times previously they had been on the ties, knew their proximity to the tracks, and that the tracks were being used for the purpose of switching. The jury should have passed upon this question, whether they did or not.

There appears to be some uncertainty in the adjudicated cases upon the question as to whether an instruction such as the one given in this case is cured by instructions covering the omitted condition. There is, in fact, no occasion for uncertainty or confusion concerning the principle involved. If we mentally situate ourselves in the place of a juror—on the receiving instead of the delivery end of the battery—and assume that we know no law other than that expressed in the instructions, the question may be resolved by asking ourselves whether the subsequent instructions harmonize and elucidate the inaccuracies in a previous instruction, or whether they conflict with or create confusion in our minds. In the former case, the error is cured; in the latter case, the error is not cured.

We have examined all of the authorities cited by respondents. Many of them do not direct a verdict under conditions specified, but merely fail to state all the law applicable to the subject. In these instances, of course, the instructions supplement each other and must be read together. Those authorities do not call for further analysis here. We do direct attention, however, to the case of Parkin v. Grayson Owen Co., 157 Cal. 41, 49, 106 P. 210, 214, in which this language is used to point the distinction:

"It is true that instructions are to be read and considered as a whole, but there is no room here for the application of the principle stated in Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407, and other cases, that 'the fact that when taken separately some of them may fail to enumerate in precise terms and with legal accuracy propositions of law does not necessarily render them erroneous; but it is sufficient if all the instructions taken together, and not being inconsistent with each other or confusing, shall give to the jury a fair and just notion of the law upon the point discussed.' The said instructions are inconsistent and confusing. The direction that a violation of the ordinance follows from the determination of one fact by necessary implication excludes the consideration of other facts and circumstances." (Italics ours.)

The case from which we have quoted involved a determination of whether a team of horses had been hitched pursuant to an ordinance, and one instruction in effect told the jury that if one of the horses was not hitched it was in violation of the ordinance, and in two subsequent instructions the judge properly directed the jury that they should take into consideration all of the facts and circumstances to determine whether or not the team was hitched.

The case of Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407, appears at first reading to be quite in point that, where the jury is told to return a verdict for plaintiff and the instruction omits proper reference to the plea of contributory negligence, it may be cured by subsequent instructions covering that subject. The first-quoted instruction in that opinion says:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence as charged in the complaint, and that the plaintiff was injured thereby, your verdict should be for the plaintiff. * * *

The next instruction informed the jury "that, in determining the question of negligence in this case," they should take into consideration whether plaintiff used "ordinary care and prudence in the situation in which she found herself placed." (Italics ours.) In other words, the court immediately defined its use of the word "negligence" in the first instruction, and limited it by saying that in order for it to be the cause of the injury it must be freed of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. The opinion therefore does not present as clear a case of inconsistent and confusing instructions as first appears, and justifies the language used by the court therein, that "It is sufficient if all of the instructions taken together," are not "inconsistent with each other or confusing."

The case of Weihe v. Rathjen Mercantile Co., 34 Cal. App. 302, 167 P. 287, is determined on the authority of Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, and Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 P. 521. The last-named precedent, however, should not be considered as bearing directly upon the question herein involved for the reason that it simply states the rule that:

"If it appears therefrom that the jury were fairly and fully instructed on all the law applicable to the facts in the case, the judgment will not be reversed simply because the particular instructions, taken alone, may not have embodied all the law applicable."

It does not appear that there was a direction to return a verdict on certain conditions; nor that there was a conflict.

Ingalls v. Monte Cristo Oil Co., 23 Cal. App. 652, 139 P. 97, relied upon by respondents, uses the following language:

"It is contended on behalf of defendant that instruction 2 given by the court is erroneous because it tells the jury that if they find certain facts, then the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict; and that the court thus instructed in favor of the plaintiff regardless of whether the defendant knew or ought to have known of the unsafe and dangerous condition of the roof, and also regardless of the fact as to whether plaintiff did not have the same means of knowledge of the defect, if any existed, as did the defendant. It is further claimed that the instruction is erroneous because in conflict with instruction No. 4, which was a full statement, including these elements omitted from instruction 2. We are of opinion that instruction 2 is aided, rather than destroyed, by instruction 4. A similar situation with regard to instructions was under review in Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407."

Instructions 2 and 4 therein mentioned are not set forth in full in the opinion, but we have examined the records in the case and find that instruction 2 did not omit the question of contributory negligence and that instruction 4 did elucidate and explain it.

So far we have considered those cases most firmly relied upon by respondents and which demanded careful analysis to prevent further confusion. The authorities relied upon by appellant which are pertinent are as follows: Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248, 107 P. 309; Pierce v. United States Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Keena v. United R. R. of San Francisco, 57 Cal. App. 124, 207 P. 35; and Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 209 P. 1015. In the first case the trial judge erroneously instructed the jury that it was necessary for the defendant to overcome a presumption of fact by a preponderance of the evidence, instead of stating to them that the presumption was entitled to consideration by them in arriving at the ultimate fact. The Supreme Court determined that the error was not cured by an instruction that the burden was upon plaintiff to prove every material allegation by a preponderance of the evidence. It says:

"The different declarations of the court were not capable of being harmonized."

In the case of Pierce v. United States Gas & Electric Co., supra, we find the following:

"It is clear that an instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff in the event that the jury finds certain facts to be true, must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion contained therein that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, and such is the rule in this state."

The cases of Keena v. United R. R. of San Francisco, supra, and Beyerle v. Clift, supra, present situations almost identical with the instant case. In both of these cases the court directed the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff if they believed the defendant was guilty of negligence in doing the acts complained of, and in both the court failed to include the element of contributory negligence, which defense had been pleaded. In both cases the trial judge had given, as here, appropriate instructions covering the question of contributory negligence; but in each case it was determined that the error was not cured by the subsequent instruction which "simply produced a clear conflict." We have examined the records in the case of Beyerle v. Clift, supra, and find that the concluding words of the instructions concerning contributory negligence were the same as those in this case, and that one instruction went even further in an effort to harmonize than in the present instance. In the instant case, the instructions given by the court were not tied back to the erroneous instruction in explanation or as a limitation upon it, as was done in the Stephenson Case. There is no way for us to tell which instruction the jury followed. It may have determined that there was no contributory negligence, or it may have ignored that question and followed the instruction complained of.

We have already determined that there was sufficient testimony to warrant the jury in passing upon the question of contributory negligence. We cannot say, therefore, that there has been no miscarriage of justice, as is required by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

The judgments are reversed.

PEOPLE v. BROSE. (Cr. 1342.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 31, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1927.

1. Larceny ⇨65—Evidence that guest was drugged and robbed while in defendant's apartment held sufficient to sustain conviction of grand larceny.

Evidence that guest, invited to defendant's apartment for dinner party, was drugged and robbed and prevented from communicating with police after becoming conscious, and that defendant left her apartment and took an assumed name, held to sustain conviction of grand larceny.

2. Criminal law ⇨742(1)—Credibility of witnesses giving conflicting testimony on grand larceny trial held for jury.

Where stories told by witnesses for the defense in the prosecution in grand larceny trial conflicted, the credibility of witnesses held to be a question for jury's decision, which appellate court will not disturb.

3. Larceny ⇨70(1)—Instruction defining liability of accessories held applicable on grand larceny trial, where guest was drugged and robbed at dinner party (Pen. Code, § 31).

Pen. Code, § 31, making those aiding and abetting in the commission of a crime principals, held applicable to case where guest was robbed at dinner party, and hence instruction defining liability of accessories under that section held proper.

4. Larceny ⇨70(1)—Instruction that principals only and not accessories could be convicted under grand larceny indictment held properly refused.

Defendant's instruction to the effect that principals only and not accessories could be convicted under an indictment for grand larceny held correctly refused.

5. Criminal law ⇨807(1), 829(1)—Highly argumentative instruction held properly refused, where such part as was sound law was covered by other instructions.

Where a proposed instruction was highly argumentative and was covered by other instructions in so far as it was sound law, refusal to submit to jury held no error.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Emma Brose was convicted of grand larceny, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; CURTIS, J., voting for a transfer.

T. T. Califro and John D. Harloe, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny and has appealed on a typewritten record. She claims the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and that the verdict is contrary to the evidence; that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence; that the trial court misdirected the jury in a matter of law; and the trial court erred in the decision of questions of law arising during the course of the trial. The respondent has answered these points under two subtitles, namely, "Sufficiency of the Evidence," and "Instructions." We will take up the points in the form and order as last stated.

[1] As to the sufficiency of the evidence, it should be stated in the very beginning that the uncontradicted story is to the effect that on the evening of the 27th of October, 1925, in apartment No. 401 of the Braeburn Apartments, there were taken from the fingers of Eva Flemming, the complaining witness, six diamond rings of the total value of $16,000. The point presented by the appeal raises solely the question as to who did the taking. On the trial Eva Flemming took the stand and was examined and cross-examined as to the facts. Among other things she testified that she was an insurance broker and in that capacity became acquainted in the fall of 1924 with the appellant and appellant's husband, Fred Brose. At that time, and indeed at nearly all times, she wore the rings continuously. After their first meeting Fred Brose took out an insurance policy through the solicitation of his wife, and caused Miss Flemming to issue the policy and accept his promissory note temporarily in payment of the first premium. Later the defendant caused Miss Flemming to issue to her an insurance policy and to accept a promissory note temporarily in payment of the first premium. In September, 1925, the defendant commenced extending invitations to Miss Flemming, asking her to attend parties and dinners. She extended many of them. On the 24th of October, 1925,

Jack Lorraine rented the Braeburn Apartment for the period of one week under the name of Mr. Laury. Jack Lorraine is referred to by both parties as a known crook. The defendant testified that she had known him some months and that Lorraine had been arrested and that the defendant had gone on his bail a short time before the following incidents occurred. On the evening of October 26, 1925, the defendant telephoned an invitation asking Miss Flemming to come to the apartment. She did so, and at that time she met Jack Lorraine, who was introduced to her as Mr. Barr, a friend from Chicago. Red Rafferty, Fred Brose, and Rachel Jones were also there. Miss Flemming remained until about midnight and then returned to her hotel. In the meantime she was invited to return to the apartment October 27th for dinner. She did so, and on that occasion she met the defendant, Fred Brose, Jack Lorraine, Red Rafferty, and Myrtle Pomyea. She arrived about 7 p. m. A big dinner was served at about 7:15. Among other things served to her was a cup of coffee, which, she testified, had a bad taste, but which she drank.

Miss Flemming testified that after dinner she helped to dry the dishes and then went into the living room and sat on a box couch and began to read a magazine. At that time she became unconscious, and the next thing she remembered was that appellant and Myrtle Pomyea were standing over her and saying that the apartment had been robbed. As she regained consciousness she looked at her watch and it indicated 9:30. All of the dinner guests above mentioned were still in the apartment. As soon as she observed that her rings were gone she wanted to telephone to the night clerk, to the police, etc.; however, one or the other of those present coaxed her not to do so, physically prevented her from doing so, or threatened her if she did do so. In the same manner she was restrained from leaving the apartment. She was detained there during the rest of that night and during the following day until evening time. She was then taken in an automobile to her hotel. On arriving at her hotel she promptly communicated with certain private detectives and the police, and with their help she immediately proceeded to make an investigation. During that evening they went from house to house, among others to the Braeburn Apartments. At that place they learned that Lorraine had already checked out. On going to apartment No. 401 they found that all luggage had been removed. Later in the night when Miss Flemming retired she discovered a spot on each one of her shoulders that appeared to be irritated, and the next day she went to her physician, who made an examination and testified at the trial. His testimony was to the effect that she had been given a hypodermic injection of chloral and that the effect of drinking chloral or of the injections would be to produce drowsiness or unconsciousness, according to the amount taken.

At this point it should be noted that the indictment ran against Jack Lorraine, Emma Brose, and Fred Brose. No reason has been shown why Myrtle Pomyea and Red Rafferty were not included in the indictment. Jack Lorraine was never served, and so far as the record discloses has not been seen since October 29, 1925.

Myrtle Pomyea left the apartment before Miss Flemming left. Soon after Miss Flemming left the apartment Jack Lorraine crossed the bay to the Hotel Oakland to call on Myrtle Pomyea. Red Rafferty, Emma Brose, and Fred Brose also went over there. They all met and stayed at the Hotel Oakland during the night of October 28th. The next day, about noon, Emma Brose and Fred Brose returned to San Francisco. They did not go to their home on Twenty-Seventh avenue, but they took lodgings under an assumed name at the Hotel Ogden on Mission street. The foregoing story contains an abundance of evidence sufficient to support the verdict.

[2] The appellant says that the evidence would equally support a verdict against each and all of the other guests. That may be freely granted, but the argument does not lessen the weight of the above evidence as against the appellant. The appellant cites the testimony of her own witnesses and argues that the story disclosed by Emma Brose, Fred Brose and Myrtle Pomyea was so plausible as to discredit entirely the story told by Miss Flemming. That argument runs to the credibility of the witnesses. But that subject was a question for the jury. We are not at liberty to usurp the functions of the jury and state that the witnesses for the appellant were more credible than the prosecuting witness. The appellant cites and relies on People v. Silva, 48 Cal. App. 728, 737, 192 P. 330. The case is not helpful. It differed in its facts in many material respects.

[3-5] The trial court gave an instruction defining the liability of accessories as defined in section 31 of the Penal Code. The appellant objects to the instruction and cites People v. Silva, supra. In that case it was held that the instruction correctly stated the law, but was not applicable to the facts. It was applicable in the case before us. The appellant complains because the trial court refused her proposed instruction No. 11. There was no error in the refusal. It was not pertinent to any set of facts to be found in the evidence. The same remark applies to appellant's proposed instruction No. 12. She also complains because her proposed instruction No. 9 was not given. It should not have been. As worded, it was to the effect that principals only and not accessories could be convicted under the indictment. Again, she complains because her proposed instruction No. 5 was not given. That instruction deals with a condition of the record where the evidence is susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, etc. The instructions, as given, are not numbered. However, we have read the entire charge of the court. It was full and complete both as to direct evidence and circumstantial evidence and covered the subject-matter of the proposed instruction No. 5. Finally, the appellant complains because her proposed instruction No. 2 was not given. In so far as it was sound law, the subject-matter was covered by other instructions. In part the proposed instruction was highly argumentative, and it was not error on the part of the trial court to refuse to give the instruction as it was presented.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

BLANK v. RODGERS. (Civ. 5467.) ★

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 24, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1927.)

1. Principal and agent — 89(8)—Evidence held to support findings that plaintiff had expended money and rendered services in managing defendant's camp, and that he was ejected without reimbursement.

Evidence held to sustain findings that plaintiff had made improvements, performed services, and expended money in managing defendant's camp pursuant to an agreement, by which he was to have a 10-year lease for managing the camp, and that he was ejected without reimbursement.

2. Frauds, statute of — 138(1)—Oral agreement, void under statute, is properly pleaded to show circumstances of plaintiff's possession and expenditures.

Though oral agreement to give plaintiff a 10-year lease on property to be developed as a camp site was within the statute and void, it was proper to set forth its terms to show the circumstances under which plaintiff took charge of defendant's property, rendered services, made improvements, and spent money for her benefit, for which he seeks reimbursement.

3. Improvements — 4(1)—Complaint showing defendant's enrichment at plaintiff's expense, under void contract, held to support judgment reimbursing plaintiff for improvements made.

Where complaint showed that plaintiff made improvements on defendant's land under void oral agreement, and that defendant was thereby unjustly enriched, held that plaintiff was entitled to relief to the extent of the reasonable value of his improvements.

4. Principal and agent — 23(2)—Creation of agency may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

Direct evidence of plaintiff's agreement to act as agent of defendant in managing property to be developed as camp site held unnecessary, in order to afford a recovery for his expenditures, since the creation of an agency may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

5. Principal and agent — 22(1)—Agency cannot be proved solely by declarations of alleged agent.

The declarations of one claiming to have been another's agent are not sufficient to prove the agency.

6. Principal and agent — 89(8)—Evidence held to show ratification of plaintiff's acts as defendant's agent.

Where plaintiff acted as manager of defendant's camp, evidence of visits and conferences with defendant held to show ratification of plaintiff's acts as agent, whether or not they were, in fact, authorized.

7. Money paid — 1—Work and labor — 4(2)—Where plaintiff furnished money and rendered services under void contract, he may recover reasonable value, under contract implied by law.

Where the plaintiff paid money, rendered services, and made improvements upon defendant's land under a void oral agreement, held that he could recover reasonable value of the money expended, under a contract implied by law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Blank against Elizabeth A. Rodgers, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Defendant, cross-complainant, and appellant has appealed from a judgment entered against her in the sum of $3,083.74, assigning four reasons why the judgment should be reversed by this court: (1) That the complaint does not state a cause of action and the findings do not support the judgment, for the reason that the complaint and findings both proceed upon the theory of the breach of a special contract, or the failure of consideration for that contract, and, as the contract alleged was void, there could have been no breach of it or consideration for it. (2) That there is no evidence in the record of the existence of the agreement because the evidence consists of declarations of an agent who thereby sought, first, to establish his agency, secondly, to prove the agreement, and, thirdly, whose testimony is itself contrary to the very material parts of the agreement found. (3) That the cases relied upon do not support the judgment here. (4) That in any event a recovery here must be limited to whatever was done before September 10, 1921, because on that date the alleged agreement was fully repudiated, and it is the law that a party has a right to repudiate an agreement void under the statute of frauds.

The facts as testified to by respondent are substantially these: The appellant was the owner of certain real property known as the Rodgers ranch, or Camp Taylor, situated in the county of Marin, consisting of 3,228 acres, which for a long time had been unimproved land. The public had been accustomed for many years to freely picnic and camp upon this property. It had been entirely unproductive of revenue. In the early part of July, 1921, Frank J. Jones, the son-in-law of appellant, sent for respondent to come to his office, and when he arrived said to him that he had a very fine business proposition for him, something that was exactly suited to his abilities, and that he had practically picked him out of a number of others making application for a lease on the Camp Taylor property. He informed him that he was the manager of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Rodgers' property and that she was the owner of the Camp Taylor property; that he, being the manager of this property, had decided to run this Camp Taylor proposition along business lines, and that respondent was the man to do it—that he could rely upon him; that respondent would use his judgment, and that his integrity was above reproach. Jones wanted respondent to go there and make use of the property and camp site, to lay out camp sites and let them out to applicants, and to make improvements on the land; that it would be necessary for him to build tent platforms, and to put up tents and certain other buildings. There was even mentioned that a hotel would be the proper thing to erect to properly serve people who desired to come there; that he should work out a scheme of charges and charge the people so much. Of course, to do so Jones informed respondent he would have to offer them inducements, which he left to respondent's judgment. Jones informed respondent that this property had been running wild, and that people had camped there and had damaged the property, and that Mrs. Rodgers had gotten nothing out of it, not even the taxes; that Mrs. Rodgers "is willing to-day," if respondent would go on there, and patrol this property properly, and police it and keep out the hoodlum element, and put it on business lines to give him a 10-year lease on the property—the exact terms of this 10-year lease to be determined on the basis of what could be done.

Mr. Jones said to respondent: "Of course, the camp for this season is now pretty nearly at the close"—it was near the end of July—"but you can get some idea as to what we may do in the future. You are going to put this on a business basis, but you will have to be there yourself. You can do whatever you please along business lines, and you will keep exact account of your receipts and expenditures, and on that basis we will then be able to determine the value of the lease to Mrs. Rodgers. We may put this thing on a flat rental, or we may put it on a progressive rental, or we may put it on a profit-sharing basis, but we cannot tell right yet."

Respondent thought the proposition over for several days, and on July 16th Jones took him over to see the property, and after several conversations with Jones, on July 20th respondent told Jones in the latter's office that he accepted the proposition, whereupon Jones dictated, had transcribed, signed and delivered to respondent the following memorandum upon the letter head of appellant:

"Office of Elizabeth A. Rodgers, 429 Davis St.,
"San Francisco, Cal., July 20, 1921.

"This is to certify that I have this day leased to C. A. Blank, San Rafael, 3,228 acres of Rodgers ranch, commonly known as Camp Taylor property, for purposes of camping, fishing, hunting, and picnicking. Mr. Blank is authorized to sublet the above-mentioned rights in any manner he sees fit and collect money therefor. Elizabeth A. Rodgers,

"Per F. Jones, Manager."

At the same time Jones told respondent that the lease would provide that, in the event the property was sold, respondent would be reimbursed for the improvements he would make upon the property and be recompensed for the time put in and for the value of the unexpired lease.

Jones took respondent to the property the next day and had him deputized as a deputy sheriff in San Rafael. Respondent prepared for properly policing these grounds. He hired one deputy besides himself and an assistant and went to work with them. They patrolled the grounds and expelled all people who were there without authority, and who would not pay the fee set by respondent and were not willing to submit to the rules and regulations, and cleaned up the property, which work extended over many weeks; put up toilets for the accommodation of the campers, also a water system. They filled the reservoir about 2,000 feet from Camp Taylor and ran the water into Camp Taylor, paid for the water pipe, built crossings, a foot-bridge, lawns, and put up a living place for respondent—a kind of a bungalow with an open approach in front and two rooms behind and a kitchen, the front being used for store purposes. Respondent purchased a horse to be used in patrolling the property, put up platforms, tents and camp stoves, built a stable and did other things, such as putting out fires, making improvements on the creek, cleaned up and deepened holes, built crossings, and picked out debris.

Respondent advertised the camping and picnicking facilities in the newspapers and got out rate cards and permits. He fixed the rates to be charged campers and hikers. He had receipt books printed so that each camper received the original and the carbon remained in the book as a voucher, and put up large signs on the property inviting people to come and camp and fish and see the manager.

From the time respondent went upon the property he reported to Jones continuously what he was doing. Jones also came to the property in company with appellant, Mrs. Rodgers, and alone. Respondent first met Mrs. Rodgers personally in September, 1921. She came to Camp Taylor accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Jones, Mr. Jones and her chauffeur. Jones introduced respondent to Mrs. Rodgers. Respondent had temporary living quarters and an outdoor store on the property. There were signs everywhere. Respondent testified to the following conversation with Mrs. Rodgers:

"One of the specific conversations was that Mrs. Rodgers asked me for copies of my literature. She asked me if I wouldn't allow her to have some copies of my permits and my rate cards, and then I handed her such copies."

Mrs. Rodgers came again to the property on an afternoon in September, 1921, in company with her daughter, Mrs. Jones. She asked respondent to go over the property with her. There were many campers at the time and signs were posted up over the property notifying campers that they would have no right on the property except upon issuance of a permit by the manager, C. A. Blank, and that they would have to comply with the regulations. Mrs. Rodgers on this occasion suggested certain changes by way of improvement to the bridges, and when they came to where formerly stood the old home place she informed respondent that she did not want campers on that particular part. Mrs. Rodgers asked respondent to accompany her to the "Devil's Gulch ranch," a tract she had rented out for grazing purposes and separated from Camp Taylor by a fence. Some campers were camping on this property, and she requested respondent to remove the campers, fearing trouble with her tenant if any money were collected from campers permitted to camp on his ground.

Respondent kept account of receipts and disbursements, and his book of account, together with vouchers, was received in evidence. During September, October, and November respondent brought his book of account to San Francisco and submitted it to Mr. Jones. During these same months respondent and Jones conversed regarding the final lease. The substance of these conversations was that Mrs. Rodgers was not yet prepared to determine on the proper terms, and that was causing the delay. Towards the end of October respondent and Jones went together to see Mrs. Rodgers at the Palace Hotel. Mrs. Rodgers had visitors at the time, and a brief conversation took place in an anteroom. Mrs. Rodgers at that time asked:

"Did you bring Mr. Blank in connection with the Camp Taylor and the proposition of the lease and his account?"

Mrs. Rodgers at that time said she was not prepared to enter into the arrangement, that she had not decided on the terms, and the interview was rather short and the matters were postponed for some future time. At the same time respondent told Mrs. Rodgers that a man representing himself as Mr. Johnston, warden of San Quentin Penitentiary, refused to pay, and she told him that Johnston had no right to refuse to pay, and that she was going to instruct her lawyers to write him a letter informing him that all who were on the property must submit to Blank's authority and to the rules and regulations and pay the fee.

About a month later respondent and Jones went to see Mrs. Rodgers again. On this occasion the accounts were submitted. Respondent testified that Mrs. Rodgers asked him, "How much money did you take in?" and respondent stated the amount. "How much did you spend?" and the expenditures were considerably in excess of the moneys taken in, and Mrs. Rodgers remarked:

"Well, you are a nice business man—you spend more money than you have taken in."

On January 10, 1922, respondent and Jones again visited Mrs. Rodgers, and on this occasion respondent made a final demand for the lease, and Mrs. Rodgers positively refused to give it to him, and on February 24, 1922, she served written notice on respondent to quit, vacate, and deliver possession, and notified him if he did not do so action would be taken to eject him, whereupon respondent surrendered possession. During his occupancy the reasonable value of moneys expended, services rendered, and materials furnished by respondent, according to the record and found by the court, amounts to $3,659.04, and he collected from campers and picnickers $575.50.

[1] While the witness Jones testified that respondent was employed at $75 per month as a caretaker, and in this respect there is a conflict in the evidence, the foregoing facts were testified to by respondent and are sufficient to support the finding of the court that defendant, on or about July 20, 1921, entered into an oral agreement whereby plaintiff was to go upon the land of the defendant, patrol and police it, keep out the hoodlum element, prevent the property from being damaged, lay out camp sites, make various improvements, and rent out the camping and picnicking privileges for such amount as he should find to be reasonable. For performing the services and doing the things requested and agreed upon, defendant promised a 10-year lease; that the plaintiff performed the acts requested and agreed upon; that the sum of $3,659.04 was and is the actual and reasonable value of the materials furnished, moneys expended, services rendered, and labor performed by plaintiff upon said premises, pursuant to said agreement. That all of the work done, improvements made, and money expended were beneficial to the said property; that the defendant, after the rendition of the services aforesaid, without cause, refused to carry out the terms of the agreement, demanded that the plaintiff quit, vacate, and deliver up possession; and that the plaintiff did vacate and surrender possession in compliance with said demand. That plaintiff collected while in possession $575.50 from campers and picnickers, and has neither been paid nor reimbursed in any further amount. That whatever was done upon said premises was done by plaintiff pursuant to said agreement. That the consideration for which plaintiff made such expenditures and rendered said services has failed in its entirety, except as to said sum of $575.50.

As to appellant's contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action and the findings do not support the judgment, there is no merit.

[2] The action is not one for damages for breach of contract; and while no action at law would lie on the contract itself, it being within the statute of frauds and void, yet it is proper to set forth the terms of the oral agreement in order to show the circumstances under which respondent went into possession of the premises and expended the money for which he sought reimbursement.

[3] Where one, entering upon land under an oral agreement subsequently repudiated, voluntarily makes improvements which he was under no promise to make, it is commonly held that he must plead and prove that the improvements enhanced the value of the land to the extent of the recovery sought, but the complaint here avers that it was part of the oral agreement that the plaintiff should do the very things for which he seeks compensation. From the declarations of the complaint there is thus a showing of an unjust enrichment of the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff, from which follows the legal conclusion that plaintiff is entitled to relief to the extent of the reasonable value of his improvements. White v. Wieland, 109 Mass. 291; Parker v. Tainter, 123 Mass. 185; People's Nat. Bank v. Magruder, 77 Fla. 235, 81 So. 443; Ingram v. Corbit, 177 N. C. 318, 99 S. E. 20; 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, 390.

If the agreement, instead of calling for improvements, had required respondent to plant and cultivate land, and if before the crop matured he was ejected, he would certainly be entitled to compensation for his labor and expenditures (Crane v. Franklin, 17 Ariz. 476, 154 P. 1036; Williams v. Bemis, 108 Mass. 91, 11 Am. Rep. 318), and there is no essential difference between such a condition of affairs and the condition of affairs pleaded and found in the instant case.

[4] Appellant is in error in the second point urged that there is no evidence in the record of the existence of the agreement, because the evidence consists merely of the declarations of the agent himself as to his agency and as proof of the agreement, etc. It is true that, aside from the testimony of the witness Jones as to his agency, there is no direct evidence of his authority to act as the agent of appellant, but the principle is well established that the creation of an agency, like the extent of an agent's authority and the ratification of an unauthorized act, may be proved by circumstantial evidence. 1 Cal. Jur. 696.

[5, 6] There is no question or dispute upon the proposition that agency cannot be proved by the declarations of the alleged agent. Upon this question we quite agree with counsel for appellant and the authorities cited by him, but it would seem that the conduct and declarations of appellant are sufficient to establish the agency alleged, but if there be any question on this point they certainly established a ratification by appellant of the agreement entered into by Jones assuming to act as her agent with respondent. Jones was intrusted with her stationery upon which the memorandum of agreement was written. On her first visit to Camp Taylor after respondent assumed charge, when she was first introduced to respondent, she asked for copies of his permits and rate cards; she saw signs posted up all over the premises; she asked him to remove the campers from adjoining land under lease to a Mr. Dixon for cattle grazing, fearing trouble if respondent collected the rates as shown by his rate cards for camping privileges; she asked him not to permit campers where formerly stood the old home place; she saw the improvements he had placed on the premises, which, certainly, a caretaker receiving $75 a month would not have erected; she was insistent that the warden of San Quentin prison should submit to respondent's authority, to his rules and regulations and pay the fees he had established. When respondent and Jones called upon her the first time at the Palace Hotel she asked Jones if he had brought Mr. Blank in connection with the Camp Taylor property and the proposition of the lease, and on respondent's second visit she told him he was a nice business man, that he had spent more money than he had taken in. These circumstances amply justified the trial court in finding a ratification of the unauthorized acts of Jones as agent, if, in fact, they were unauthorized.

As to the claim that recovery cannot be had for anything furnished or expended after September 10, 1921, because on that date the alleged agreement was fully repudiated, it is sufficient to say that there is a conflict in the evidence on this question, respondent positively denying that he received notice to leave the property on September 9, 1921, and Jones admitted that he expected appellant to give respondent the lease until the occurrence at the Palace Hotel along towards the end of the year. That respondent was notified to leave the property on September 9, 1921, is inconsistent with the facts and circumstances, and is found by the court not to be true.

Appellant has cited numerous authorities to the effect that the lease or agreement to lease is void as being within the inhibition of the statute of frauds in that by its terms it was for a longer period than one year and was not reduced to writing, and to the point that, in order to bind a principal to an agreement affecting real property, which is required to be in writing, the authority of the agent must also be in writing, and, further, that the lease or agreement for the lease is void for uncertainty. We are in perfect accord with the authorities cited, but this is not an action to enforce specific performance of the lease or agreement, nor for damages for a breach of contract, but is based upon a contract which the law implies, where services are rendered and moneys and materials furnished at the request of another in consideration of a void promise. The promise made is a nullity, but the respondent is in no worse situation than if no promise whatever were made.

[7] The contract being void and incapable of enforcement in a court of law, yet respondent having furnished moneys, materials, and services in pursuance thereof, he may recover the reasonable value of the moneys and materials furnished and the services performed. This is the universal rule in cases where the contract is void for any cause not illegal. Smith v. Administrators of Smith, 28 N. J. Law, 208, 78 Am. Dec. 49, 51. In Graham v. Graham, 134 App. Div. 777, 119 N. Y. S. 1013, in a case where the contract was void by reason of the statute of frauds, the court says, in part:

"The complaint in this case alleges a parol contract to convey land unenforceable by the statute of frauds, a repudiation of that oral contract by the promisor, the payment of money and the performance of labor and service upon the faith of said contract by the plaintiff, and seeks to recover therefor. These allegations would seem to contain all the allegations necessary to a cause of action upon the contract which the law implies, where services are rendered under a contract void by the statute of frauds which the promisor refuses to fulfill.

"If money has been paid, or services rendered, in the performance of a void contract by one party thereto, and the other party fails to voluntarily perform on his part, the injured party has no remedy at law upon the contract; he may, however, under such circumstances, disaffirm such contract, and maintain his action at law to recover back moneys so paid, or the value of services so rendered." Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal 110; Hill v. Den, 121 Cal. 45, 53 P. 642.

In the case of a contract for services rendered at a reduced price in consideration of future employment, the future employment being too uncertain to be specifically enforced and therefore void, the plaintiff may disregard the promise for future employment and bring an action to recover the reasonable value for services actually rendered. Davidson v. Laughlin, 138 Cal. 320, 71 P. 345, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579.

It would make no difference if the contract were void for uncertainty, or void because within the statute of frauds. It would be a nullity in either case, and in either case the law implies a contract to pay the reasonable value for materials furnished and services performed, where, as in this case, the promisor refuses to fulfill the contract. Of course, if the agreement were immoral or against public policy, a different situation would be presented, as the court under such circumstances would leave the parties as it found them.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

PEOPLE v. FAY et al. (Cr. 1409.)

(District Court of Appeals, Second District, Division 2, California. March 25, 1927.)

1. Criminal law §511(2)—Testimony of accomplice in conspiracy to commit grand larceny held sufficiently corroborated to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit grand larceny, testimony of coconspirator and accomplice connecting defendant with the conspiracy held sufficiently corroborated by other testimony to sustain conviction.

2. Criminal law §511(1)—Corroborative evidence to support testimony of an accomplice need not be sufficient to establish guilt.

It is not required that corroborative evidence supporting testimony of an accomplice be sufficient to establish guilt, it sufficing if it connects defendant with the crime, even though, if standing alone, it is of little weight.

3. Criminal law ⚡424(1)—Evidence of conspirator's subsequent sale of bonds and cashing of checks held admissible in prosecution for stealing bonds.

Where information charged conspiracy to steal, and that defendants, in furtherance thereof, stole bonds from a named person, evidence of subsequent sale of bonds and cashing of checks received therefor by conspirators held admissible.

4. Criminal law ⚡1159(3)—Finding of jury on conflicting evidence that defendant was not intimidated in district attorney's office held conclusive.

In prosecution for conspiracy to steal, finding of jury on conflicting evidence that defendant was not intimidated in the district attorney's office at time statements and admissions were made by him is conclusive.

5. Criminal law ⚡543(2)—Evidence held to show diligence of district attorney in issuance of subpoena for state witness, authorizing admission of her testimony given at preliminary examination (Pen. Code, § 686).

In prosecution for conspiracy to steal, evidence that subpoena was issued for state witness three weeks before trial, and witness could not be located because she had removed from last address, without leaving forwarding address of information as to destination, held to show due diligence of district attorney within Pen. Code, § 686, in attempting to have her served, authorizing admission of her testimony given at preliminary examination.

6. Criminal law ⚡543(2)—"Diligence" within statute, requiring effort to locate witness before testimony at preliminary examination, is admissible (Pen. Code, § 686).

The term "diligence," as used in Pen. Code, § 686, requiring diligence in effort to locate witness within the state before his testimony given at preliminary examination can be admitted, is relative, and its application depends on facts in each particular case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Diligence.]

7. Criminal law ⚡1158(4)—Whether due diligence is exercised to locate witness before testimony at preliminary examination is admissible is for trial court's determination (Pen. Code, § 686).

Question whether due diligence, as required by Pen. Code, § 686, in effort to locate a witness within the state, before testimony given at preliminary examination is admissible, has been exercised, is for trial court's determination, and his ruling thereon will not be disturbed, if supported by substantial evidence.

8. Criminal law ⚡422(3)—Admitting evidence as to defendant's conversations prior to formation of conspiracy held without error.

Where defendant was charged with grand larceny, embezzlement, and conspiracy to commit grand larceny, and convicted of conspiracy, admitting evidence of his conversations with victim of conspiracy prior to formation thereof held not error, where evidence was admissible under some of the charges for which defendant was being tried.

9. Criminal law ⚡407(2)—Failure of defendant to reply when accusatory statement was read held admissible to establish admission of guilt.

In prosecution for conspiracy to steal, where written, accusatory statement by coconspirator was read in defendant's presence at the district attorney's office, defendant's failure to reply thereto, after being given opportunity, was admissible as evidence indicating an admission of guilt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Hugh Fay and others were convicted of conspiracy to commit grand larceny, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Spicer, of Los Angeles (Lyle Pendergast, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The three defendants above named were charged by information in three counts with the crimes of grand larceny, conspiracy to commit grand larceny, and embezzlement, respectively. King and Fay only were tried at the time of the proceedings here presented for review. At the conclusion of the trial, and before the jury retired, the district attorney dismissed the charges of grand larceny and embezzlement. Thereafter the jury returned separate verdicts, acquitting King, and convicting Fay of conspiracy to commit grand larceny. The latter appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It appears that in January of 1926 Mrs. Cassie L. Bush was the owner of $4,700 worth of 7 per cent, gold bonds of the Witmore Hotel Company, consisting of four bonds of the face value of $1,000 each, one of $500 and two of $100 each. Appellant admits, and the record supports the fact, "that Mrs. Bush suffered larceny of the bonds is clear."

The defendant Murphy testified for the people, in minute detail, as to conversations which he swore occurred between himself and his codefendants and two other men named Mott and Goss, and as to their movements before, during and after the bonds were fraudulently obtained from Mrs. Bush. In brief, he recited facts concerning the inception, progress, and consummation of a conspiracy between himself and the four last-mentioned persons to feloniously get possession of the securities, dispose of them, and divide the proceeds. The testimony of this witness was, substantially, that he had known Goss for about ten years, that Mott introduced him to King at San Diego in November or December, 1925; and that he became acquainted with Fay at Long Beach late in January, 1926; that he met Fay, King, and Goss at Long Beach on February 3, 1926, at which time and place these four parties agreed that the witness should call upon Mrs. Bush on the following morning, and state to her that the Witmore Hotel Company bonds were called in; and that he had been authorized to take them up. He further testified that his companions stated that they could not perform this part of the transaction because each had previously interviewed the lady, and believed that she would not have further dealings with them. Murphy swore that they all agreed to, and did, meet at Los Angeles on the next day; that King furnished him with blanks upon which he was instructed to receipt to Mrs. Bush for the bonds in the name of "A. P. Bourk"; that they drove in Fay's automobile past Mrs. Bush's residence, which was pointed out to Murphy, and turned the corner, where the witness alighted, and walked back to the house.

From this point Murphy's testimony strikingly coincides with that of Mrs. Bush as to the manner in which her bonds were demanded, received, and receipted for. It thus appears that, when Murphy called, the prosecuting witness was in conversation with a neighbor; that he informed her of the purpose of his visit, whereupon she stated that her bonds were at the bank, and that she was not dressed to go into the city; that he remarked that he was "going down the street to see a party," and would return for her; that shortly thereafter Murphy did return with an automobile, conveyed Mrs. Bush to the bank, where she obtained the bonds, and both returned to her house. Murphy there received the Witmore bonds, receipted for them in the name of Bourk, and, when Mrs. Bush inquired about a check, he promised to pay for them on the following Saturday, which admittedly he did not do.

Mrs. Bush testified also that about ten days previously to Murphy's visit Fay had called upon her, ostensibly for the purpose of interesting her in stock of the American Magnesium Company, and that he was accompanied by a man whom he introduced as Ward; that a day or two thereafter Fay again called with another man whose name was not revealed; that upon each of these occasions she declined to consider Magnesium Company stock; and that Fay during each such visit informed her that her Witmore Hotel Company gold bonds were to be called in at a premium, notwithstanding the fact that she had not mentioned, and did not know how he learned, that she had them. Mrs. Bush further testified that following each of their respective calls, as heretofore related, she did not see any of the parties until after they were arrested.

Murphy's testimony proceeded, in substance, as follows: That his purpose in going "down the street" while Mrs. Bush dressed was to get Fay's Cadillac car, and that Fay, Goss, and King waited for him until his return with the bonds. He swore that he showed the bonds to his three companions, and that ways and means of disposing of them were discussed; that they finally drove to the home of King's sister, where they divided the bonds, each taking one of the $1,000 issue, and that, by "flipping a coin," they determined that King should also hold the $500 bond; that the witness, Goss, and Fay then returned to town, where Murphy entered Mott's car, which had been parked during the day, and drove to Long Beach. On the following morning, February 5th, according to Murphy, all four met again pursuant to prearrangement, and the witness and Goss were instructed by Fay and King to sell the bonds through a Mr. Smith, at the stock and bond house of A. C. Wagy & Co., which they did, receiving checks which they attempted to cash, but, being unable to do so, Mr. Smith, at the request of Goss and Murphy, had the checks so indorsed that the bank gave three cashier's checks in equal amounts therefor. The two last-mentioned conspirators returned to the machine, explained to Fay and King what had occurred, and thereupon Murphy, King, Fay, and Goss drove to Long Beach, where unsuccessful attempts at three different banks were made to open accounts from which they might draw funds. Murphy averred that finally he, Mott, and Goss departed for San Diego, where a bank account was opened, from which the witness received $900, and other moneys were divided, including $500 which Mott agreed to deliver to Fay and King at Los Angeles. Whether or not the latter received their share the witness testified that he did not know.

[1] The principal ground assigned for reversal here is that Murphy was a coconspirator, and therefore an accomplice, and that he was not corroborated in any way in his statements as to appellant Fay's connection with the crime.

The manner in which appellant learned that Mrs. Bush owned Witmore Hotel bonds is not revealed by the record, but it is significant that, as we have shown, Murphy did not appear upon the scene until after Fay had twice visited her, and had stated that they were to be called in, which later proved to be untrue. In addition to this concert of action, appellant, when arrested, was confronted by the other defendant, and a written statement which had been given by Murphy was read to them at the district attorney's office. Murphy was asked if such statement contained a true recital of the facts, to which he replied that it did. A deputy sheriff, who was corroborated by others, testified that he then asked the others if they had anything to say; that, if they did, it was the time to say it, but that Fay "never said a word."

The people's witness Pirrotte, another officer, testified that subsequently to Fay's arrest the latter voluntarily remarked that he had gotten into bad company, and asked the witness' help; that, when asked "How bad are you in?" Fay replied, "Well, we got the bonds. We divided them up, and the next morning we gave them all back to one man to sell, and King and I never got a cent out of it."

At the trial Fay stoutly denied that he knew anything about Mrs. Bush's bonds, or that he knew Murphy. One of the officers testified that appellant admitted having been at Long Beach with Goss and King, but stated that they went there in connection with certain oil leases which he later confessed that he knew nothing about. It appears that appellant also denied that he was acquainted with King, whose sister testified that she knew Fay, Goss, and Mott, and that they, with King, were at her residence on the night of February 4th. Murphy's testimony as to occurrences was further corroborated by people's witnesses Lamont of the California Bank at Los Angeles, Neal of the Bank of Italy at San Diego, Smith of A. C. Wagy & Co., and Symonds of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank at Los Angeles. Further, in addition to the corroboration of Murphy and the conflicting statements of appellant, his own testimony was contradicted in many respects before the jury.

[2] As was recently held by this court, it is not required that the corroborative evidence offered to support the testimony of an accomplice be sufficient to establish guilt. It will suffice if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, even though, if it stood alone, it would be entitled to but little weight. People v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 245 P. 781. We think, however, that the testimony of the defendant Murphy in the instant case was amply corroborated, and that the extensive citation of authorities upon this point is unnecessary.

[3] The count of the information upon which appellant was convicted charged that the defendants "did willfully, unlawfully, fraudulently, corruptly, and feloniously conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together to take, steal, and carry away property of one Cassie L. Bush," and that thereafter the said defendants "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and in furtherance of the conspiracy aforesaid, steal, take, and carry away from the said Cassie L. Bush" the bonds in question. Appellant contends that, the charge having been framed to consist only of a conspiracy to take, and the actual taking, of the property, on a day stated, it was error to admit evidence of the subsequent sale of the bonds and the cashing of the checks. Authorities are cited which might be construed as holding that the prosecution did more than was absolutely requisite, but none of them hold that such evidence was inadmissible. A contrary view was expressed in People v. Dean, 66 Cal. App. 602, 226 P. 943, wherein it was said:

"It would seem to us that the conspiracy was not ended until the spoils had been divided, and if this be the rule, the testimony was properly admitted. But, however that may be, the outstanding fact upon this appeal is that the judgment in this case has done substantial justice. The record leaves no reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, quite apart from any testimony to which any objection is made."

While conversations occurring after the termination of a conspiracy are inadmissible, it was definitely held by the Supreme Court in People v. Trim, 37 Cal. 274, that, in a prosecution for conspiracy to commit arson, evidence or endeavors following the fire to collect the amount of the loss insured against was competent and properly received.

[4] It is next insisted that the trial court erred in admitting the testimony of five attachés of the district attorney's office as to statements and admissions of appellant, in that they were not of the free and voluntary character required by the rule in such cases. Each of the witnesses in question testified that such statements and admissions were freely and voluntarily made, without any threat, force, promise of immunity, or offer of reward, and a careful perusal of the record convinces us that the evidence was properly admitted. Fay testified to conduct on the part of the officers which he claimed was intimidating, but they all flatly contradicted him in this, and, the jury having determined the question adversely to the defendant, upon conflicting evidence, it became conclusive. People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 59 P. 772; People v. Saenz, 50 Cal. App. 382, 195 P. 442.

[5-7] People's witness, Ruth Conde, a sister of the defendant King, testified at the preliminary examination, but was not present at the trial, and the district attorney offered her former testimony upon the ground that she could not be located. Counsel for appellant objected to the introduction of such evidence, contending that due diligence, as required by section 686 of the Penal Code, had not been exercised by the people in an effort to locate the witness within the state. Thereupon other witnesses were sworn, who testified to the following facts, which are not disputed: A subpoena was issued, and a search was commenced for the witness about three weeks before the date of the trial. Inquiries were made in the neighborhood of the residence where service was made prior to the preliminary examination, and at the place of business of the witness' husband. Both the house and the store were found to be vacant, and each bore a "for rent" sign. Investigators were informed by the landlord and by the neighbors that the Condes had departed without leaving any forwarding address or information as to their destination; that Conde was "one of the worst kind of bootleggers," and that "no one in the neighborhood knows where they went." An officer later returned to the house, and he testified that it was then occupied by strangers. He inquired of the defendant King, and of appellant's counsel, each of whom stated that he did not know where the witness might be located, and endeavors to trace her through the records at the post office were unavailing. At the time of the trial further investigation was made at the instance of the court, but without success.

It is well settled in this state that the term "diligence," as intended by section 686 of the Penal Code, is a relative one, and its application to each particular case depends upon the facts therein presented. People v. Ramos, 52 Cal. App. 491, 199 P. 544; People v. Boyd, 16 Cal. App. 130, 116 P. 323; People v. Johnson, 13 Cal. App. 776, 110 P. 965. The question as to whether or not due diligence has been exercised is one for the determination of the trial court, and, when there decided, its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal, if there is any evidence of a substantial character to support it. People v. Lederer, 17 Cal. App. 369, 119 P. 949; People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 P. 467; People v. Wilson, 26 Cal. App. 336, 146 P. 1048; People v. Padilla (Cal. App.) 254 P. 585.

There is no fact contained in the record which would suggest that the witness might have gone to any particular locality in the state. The nature of Conde's occupation and the manner in which he and his wife suddenly disappeared shortly before the trial might suggest that the witness was evading the service of process. Nothing known concerning them would give the slightest clue either to the direction in which they may have gone or the type of community in which they might take up their abode. Under such circumstances to have extended the search beyond the territory in which it was conducted would have been purely a hit and miss investigation, and to demand that such a search be made would be to require a search in every county and community of the state. From the facts presented we do not think the district attorney can be said to have been remiss in failing to take earlier steps to have her served. As was said in People v. Melandrez, 4 Cal. App. 396, 399, 88 P. 372, 373:

"The record discloses evidence showing that a considerable search had been made for the witness in and about the places that he had formerly frequented and that the officers had been unable to find him. We cannot say as a matter of law that this evidence was insufficient to reasonably satisfy the trial court that the witness could not be found in the state; and for this reason we cannot agree with appellant's contention that the deposition should have been excluded."

In People v. Boyd, supra, circumstances quite similar to those of the instant case were presented. It was there said:

"Counsel for appellant seem to think that, in order to disclose the 'due diligence' contemplated by the statute and necessary to be shown before the deposition of an absent witness taken at the preliminary hearing may be read in evidence at the trial, it must appear that a subpoena for such witness has been sent to every county in the state. In this they are mistaken.

"As is said in Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 670 (38 P. 512), 'diligence is a relative term incapable of exact definition. What would amount to due diligence under one state of facts would fall absolutely short of it under another and different state of facts. It depends, therefore, so essentially upon the particular circumstances of each case, with all their distinct and varying phrases and bearings, as they have appeared to the lower court at the trial and throughout the conduct of the cause, in determining whether diligence has been used in any particular instance, that this court should hesitate to disturb a ruling upon this ground where it has any substance whatever upon which to rest. The presumption is that the discretion has been properly exercised, and that presumption must be overcome by a clear want of facts before the order will be disturbed.'"

The case at bar is plainly distinguishable from People v. Keller (Cal. App.) 254 P. 580, recently decided by this court, wherein it appeared that, notwithstanding the fact that the investigator could have subpoenaed the missing witness twelve days before the trial at a hotel in San Diego, or two days thereafter at a hotel in Los Angeles, "absolutely nothing was done to insure the attendance of the most important witness for the prosecution" for a period of 15 days next preceding the day upon which the case was to be called for trial.

[8] Appellant further asserts that it was error to admit evidence as to conversations alleged to have occurred between himself and Mrs. Bush during the month of January, because they occurred, if at all, prior to the formation of the conspiracy as alleged in the information and testified by Murphy. At the time when such evidence was received the defendants were charged with grand larceny and with embezzlement, in addition to the crime of conspiracy to commit grand larceny. It was the theory of the prosecution that Fay personally laid the foundation for the commission of the offense, and thereafter delegated others to obtain the securities and the proceeds of their sale. Since the evidence complained of was therefore admissible under some of the charges for which appellant was on trial, it was not error to admit it. We are not prepared to hold, however, that the conspiracy between appellant and some of his codefendants had not actually been formed at the time he visited Mrs. Bush. There is no merit in this contention.

[9] The only remaining point presented consists of the argument that, when the accusatory statement heretofore mentioned was read in appellant's presence, the defendants King and Murphy also being present, at the district attorney's office, appellant's silence did not constitute evidence of guilt, and that the circumstances were not such as reasonably to call for a reply. It appears that appellant had previously requested an opportunity to make a statement to the assistant district attorney, and that, when there questioned, he made various conflicting remarks. He was not coerced, but was given time to deny or affirm Murphy's version of the transaction, and was asked if he desired to make any statement about it, but he stood mute. The district attorney requested that, before offering the statement and proof of appellant's silence, the jury be instructed to disregard its substance; that the people offered merely "their silence or their act or conduct in relation to it as evidence." The jury were so instructed, and were again fully advised as to the law in such cases in the general instructions. Under these conditions appellant was not only fairly afforded an opportunity to reply, but his failure to do so must be regarded as evidence strongly tending to indicate an admission of guilt. Under such circumstances the testimony was clearly admissible to establish that fact as is indicated by innumerable authorities, among which are: People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 P. 794; People v. Byrne, 160 Cal. 217, 116 P. 521; People v. Ong Mon Foo, 182 Cal. 697, 189 P. 690; People v. Bringhurst, 192 Cal. 748, 221 P. 897; People v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. App. 730, 236 P. 214.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Ex parte NICHOLS (Cr. 1472.)

1. Indictment and information §125(42)—Information charging conspiracy in two counts held to charge but one offense (Pen. Code, §§ 182, 519).

Information charging conspiracy to commit crime of extortion defined in Pen. Code, § 519, in one count, and conspiracy to falsely move and maintain suit, action, and proceeding in second count, held to involve single transaction and to charge commission of but one offense, under section 182.

2. Criminal law §982—On conviction under information charging only single offense of conspiracy, though in two counts, court could not grant probation and at same time sentence defendant to imprisonment.

On conviction under information containing only single charge of conspiracy in two counts, trial court had no authority to grant probation to defendant and at same time to sentence her to term of imprisonment in state prison.

3. Criminal law §982—Where court, after conviction under two counts charging only single offense, granted probation, and at same time sentenced defendant, result was as though no judgment had been rendered.

Where court, after conviction under two counts containing only single charge of conspiracy, granted probation to defendant and at same time sentenced her to term of imprisonment in state prison, result was as though no judgment had been rendered.

4. Habeas Corpus §111(1)—Where court granted probation and at same time sentenced defendant to imprisonment for single offense, defendant was not entitled to release.

Where court, on conviction of what was single charge of conspiracy in two counts, granted probation to defendant and at same time sentenced her to term of imprisonment in state prison, defendant was not entitled to be released because of error.

Application by Gladys Nichols for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the sheriff of Los Angeles County, to secure release of petitioner after conviction of conspiracy. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

A. D. Orme, of Pasadena, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. Habeas corpus. In the first count of the information, petitioner was charged with "the crime of conspiracy to commit the crime of extortion"; and in the second count of the information with the "crime of conspiracy to falsely move and maintain a suit, action, and proceeding." On the trial of the action, petitioner herein was convicted on each of such counts. Under the first count, by order of the trial court, petitioner was placed on probation, and under the second count she was sentenced to a term in the state prison.

In this proceeding it is the contention of petitioner that, notwithstanding the fact that the information formally contained two counts, as a matter of law, but one offense was stated therein, that the order made by the trial court on the so-called first count of the information in granting probation to petitioner exceeded the jurisdiction of said court, and that the sentence imposed on petitioner under the second count of the information was in excess of the jurisdiction of said court and consequently was a nullity.

The prosecution of petitioner in the criminal action was authorized by section 182 of the Penal Code, wherein, among other things, it is provided that, if two or more persons conspire "(1) to commit any crime; * * *

(3) falsely to move or maintain any suit, action or proceeding * * *”—they shall be punishable as in said section prescribed.

[1] In the first count of the information, as hereinbefore set forth, petitioner was charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit the crime of extortion, in that she and two other persons named therein—

“did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, wickedly, and fraudulently conspire, combine, confederate, and agree with Carl H. Marks and Hilda E. Daws, and each with the other, to commit a felony, to wit, the crime of extortion, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that thereafter, and in furtherance of the conspiracy aforesaid, the said defendant Gladys Nichols, together with Carl H. Marks and Hilda E. Daws, did call up the said R. J. Johnson on the telephone and make an appointment for a demonstration of an automobile, and did go out with said R. J. Johnson for a demonstration, and did rent a room in the Crawford Apartments at No. 941 South Georgia street, in which the said R. J. Johnson was to be trapped with Hilda E. Daws, and did make an appointment with the said R. J. Johnson to go to said room with Hilda E. Daws, and did watch the said Hilda E. Daws and R. J. Johnson go up to said apartment, and did thereafter enter the said room and surprise the said R. J. Johnson therein in company with the said Hilda E. Daws, and did demand money from the said R. J. Johnson, and did threaten to sue the said R. J. Johnson for alienation of affections, and did hire and employ an attorney for the purpose of suing the said R. J. Johnson, and for the purpose of thereby and therein, as aforesaid, of extorting and obtaining money from the said R. J. Johnson, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California.”

Without setting forth the language of the second count of the information, it may suffice to state that thereby petitioner was charged with the commission of the crime of conspiracy to falsely move and maintain a suit, action, and proceeding by doing and performing substantially the same acts as were set forth in the first count, together with the additional allegation that petitioner and her confederates “did falsely pretend and represent that Carl H. Marks was married to Hilda E. Daws, and did thereby and therein conspire to falsely maintain a suit for alienation of the affections aforesaid.”

The act alleged to have been committed by the defendant in the first count of the criminal action by which a conspiracy to commit one criminal act was charged was therefore substantially restated in the second count by which the defendant was charged with having committed a different offense. The only difference between the allegations in the two counts was that in the second count the falsity of the pretension of the conspirators that Hilda E. Daws was the wife of Carl H. Marks was alleged, which allegation was omitted from the first count.

By section 518 of the Penal Code, extortion is defined as “the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear. * * *” And the “fear” which will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat to do an unlawful injury to the property of the individual who is threatened. Section 519, Pen. Code.

In the count on conspiracy to commit extortion, the only injury with which the intended victim was threatened was that he would be sued for “alienation of affections” of Hilda E. Daws. Neither count of the information contains an allegation that the affections of Hilda E. Daws had been alienated by the intended victim; nor apparently, at least so far as may be determined from the information, had he committed any unlawful act. Had Hilda E. Daws been an unmarried woman, her “affections” could not have been alienated so as to create a cause of civil action in Marks or any other person. As specifically stated in the statute (section 519, Pen. Code), in order that the criminal act may amount to extortion, in effect the threat must be that, unless the intended victim comply with such demands as may be made of him, an unlawful injury will result to his property. It is plain that ordinarily, and in the absence of collusion, no unlawful injury would ensue to a man who was sued, or threatened to be sued, because he had alienated the “affections” of a married woman, and that, in the circumstances, the threatened unlawful injury to the intended victim in the criminal action here being considered arose solely because Hilda E. Daws was not the wife of Carl H. Marks; in other words, on the assumed facts herein, there could be an unlawful injury only in the event that no cause of action existed with reference to the feature of alienated affections. The gist of the offense was that money was demanded by the alleged conspirators for the purpose of preventing the bringing of an action that could not be maintained—which constituted the threatened unlawful injury to which reference is made in the statute.

In the case of People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 369, 370, 94 P. 407, 419, 420 (15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 717), in denying an application for hearing in the Supreme Court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, the following language occurs:

“It is very clear that to constitute the crime of extortion committed by means of any threat to injure property of the person threatened, the injury threatened, as was, in effect, said by the learned district court, must be, in itself, unlawful, irrespective of whether or not the purpose with which the threat is made is to obtain money to which the person threatening is not entitled. * * * The word ‘unlawful,’ as used in this statute, qualifies the word ‘injury’ alone. If the injury threatened to property is one which the person threatening has an absolute legal right to do, he cannot be held to have threatened ‘to do an unlawful injury’ to the property, even though his motive in making the threat is to obtain from the person threatened money to which he is not entitled, and, consequently, it cannot be held to be an injury within the provisions of sections 519 and 520 of the Penal Code. * * * What is meant by the term 'unlawful injury'? Giving to such term the broadest meaning possible under the authorities, it can include no injury that is not of such a character that, if it had been committed as threatened, it would have constituted an actionable wrong, an injury for which an action for the resultant damages could be maintained against the defendant, or which, if merely threatened, could be enjoined in equity if the remedy at law were deemed inadequate."

In the later case of People v. Sanders, 188 Cal. 744, 756, 757, 207 P. 380, 385, the ruling in the Schmitz Case was reaffirmed. In commenting thereon, it is said:

"This court in that case decided that the term 'unlawful injury' as used in section 519, subd. 1, of the Penal Code, had reference to injuries of such a character that if committed as threatened would have constituted an actionable wrong, and further held that the indictment in that case did not sufficiently show that the acts threatened, as stated therein, were not such as could and would have been lawfully done; and that in order to render an act which a person might lawfully do an unlawful injury to the person or property of another, such act must be threatened to be done by means which the law denounces as unlawful. * * *"

It may therefore be taken as established law that, considering the first count of the information herein, one of the essential allegations was that an unlawful injury was threatened as to the property of the intended victim. The only unlawful injury which, solely from the context of such count, could possibly result to the intended victim was that a civil action would be brought against him for alienating the affections of Hilda E. Daws, not from her husband, because she had none, but from her coconspirator Carl H. Marks. If it be possible (which point is unnecessary of decision here) that said first count stated the commission of a criminal offense, it does so only by considering that it contains a sufficient averment of fact that Hilda E. Daws was not a married woman, and therefore that, by reason of the threatened civil action for the alienation of the affection of Hilda E. Daws, an unlawful injury was threatened as against the intended victim. So considered, in substance, the first count of the information would be identical with the second count thereof.

In the case of People v. Johnson, 22 Cal. App. 362, 134 P. 339, under the provisions of section 182 of the Penal Code, which is the same section under which the prosecution in the instant case was maintained, the defendant was charged in two counts with having committed the crime of conspiracy. In the first count thereof the accusation was that the defendant and two others had conspired to commit a crime, to wit, to falsely accuse the named individual with having issued a check on a bank without having sufficient funds or credit at that bank to meet the check. As a part of the same transaction, the second count charged that defendant and said persons had conspired to pervert and obstruct the ends of justice by falsely charging the same person with the crime of drawing a check on a bank, knowing that he had not sufficient funds in it or credit at said bank to meet the check on its presentation.

Touching the point here in question, the court said, in part:

"In this case the indictment neither charged two offenses, nor does it appear that the acts which were described in the first count were different from those described in the second. To do all of the things enumerated in the different subdivisions of section 182 of the Penal Code amounts to a single offense only, and it is quite plain that the district attorney might have joined in one count of his indictment all of the matters which were made the subject of the two counts. * * *"

With reference to the two counts in the information in the case here being considered, it is clear that the basis therefor was a single transaction and involved but one conspiracy.

In the case of United States v. Weiss (D. C.) 293 F. 992, in which one of the questions before the court was that of the right of the prosecution to charge several different criminal offenses where they arose out of one conspiracy, the following language appears:

"At the threshold it must be noted that the government cannot split up one conspiracy into different indictments, and prosecute all of them, but that prosecution for any part of a single crime bars any further prosecution based upon the whole or a part of the same crime. Murphy v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 285 F. 804 at page 816; In re Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 7 S. Ct. 556, 30 L. Ed. 638; 16 Corpus Juris, 270, and cases there cited."

Perhaps the same thought is expressed in People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, 513, where, in speaking of the crime of forgery, the court said:

"Where, in defining an offense, a statute enumerates a series of acts, either of which separately, or all together, may constitute the offense, all such acts may be charged in a single count, for the reason that notwithstanding each act may by itself constitute the offense, all of them together do no more, and likewise constitute but one and the same offense. * * *"

See, also, People v. Powell, 50 Cal. App. 436, 438, 439, 195 P. 456.

And in the case of People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 79 P. 965, where it was charged in the first count of the information that by means of force and violence the defendant committed the crime of rape, and in the second count of the information the defendant was likewise accused of the crime of rape, by committing an act of sexual intercourse with the same person described in the first count, who at the time of the commission of the offense was under the age of 16 years, the court held that the nature of the allegations of the information made it manifest that it was sought to charge but one offense, and that an attempt had been made "to set forth the same transaction in different ways," and added that:

"All these allegations might undoubtedly have been joined in one count, for there is nothing inconsistent in them, or the second count might have been entirely omitted, for testimony showing the existence of the facts alleged therein would have been sufficient to sustain a conviction under the allegations of the first count [citing cases]."

To the same effect, is the case of People v. Eagan, 116 Cal. 287, 48 P. 120.

Assuming that the authorities hereinbefore cited satisfactorily establish the conclusion that but a single transaction was involved in the aggregate of the allegations contained in both the first and the second counts of the information, and that the defendant therein was legally charged with the commission of but one offense, the question of the effect of the action of the trial court in granting the defendant probation as to the "first count" and sentencing her to state prison on the "second count" remains for consideration.

The case entitled In the Matter of the Application Cyril J. O'Connor (Cal. App.) 252 P. 730, is pertinent to the inquiry. With reference to the point involved, the court said:

"From this testimony it clearly appears that if the defendant was guilty, as the jury found him to be, of larceny by trick and device as charged in the first count, he cannot also be punished under the fourth count. But one transaction occurred between the parties in connection with the subject-matter which forms the basis of the prosecution upon these two counts. They not only relate to one and the same transaction, but the facts which constitute the larceny charge pleaded and established by the evidence are identical with those constituting the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses. Under such circumstances, the jurisdiction of the court was exhausted when it pronounced sentence upon the verdict returned on the first count, and habeas corpus is a proper remedy where it is claimed that the prisoner has been placed in jeopardy for the identical offense, because if such assertion be true it is not merely a matter of defense which if not properly sustained in the trial court would furnish ground for appeal, but goes to the continuance of jurisdiction of the trial court for any purpose."

In the case entitled In re Fink (Cal. App.) 250 P. 714, the defendant, who had been convicted of a felony, was granted probation, with the further order that he "be placed in the charge and under the supervision of the county probation officer, and requiring that he (the defendant) be placed and kept in the psychopathic ward of the county farm." Under the authority of People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998, it was held that "the last requirement of the court's order was illegal," and that the defendant should be discharged from custody.

[2-4] The instant case, then, stands as though the defendant had been convicted of but one charge of conspiracy; that the trial court granted her application for probation thereon, and at the same time sentenced her to state prison for the commission of the identical offense for the commission of which the defendant had been granted probation. In the Mendosa Case (178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998), the judgment of the trial court was that the defendant be imprisoned in the state prison; that the sentence be suspended and the defendant remanded to the custody of the sheriff and confined in the county jail until the further order of the court; and, while it was held therein that such a judgment was illegal in that there was no authority in law for the action of the court in suspending the execution of the sentence and at the same time remanding the defendant to the custody of the sheriff to be confined in the county jail, and consequently that such judgment should be reversed, it was also ruled that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial by reason of such error, but that the trial court should again arraign defendant for judgment and thereupon proceed to pronounce a proper judgment on the conviction legally obtained. The error, therefore, was not fatal in the sense that it was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant. It did not have the effect of exhausting the jurisdiction of the trial court so as to prevent it from pronouncing a new or different judgment. And so, in the case under consideration, it is manifest that on a conviction on what we have held was a single charge of conspiracy the trial court had no authority to grant probation to the defendant and at the same time to sentence her to a term of imprisonment in the state prison. The court might have done either the one thing or the other, but clearly not both of them. Like the judgment in the Mendosa Case, the defendant could not be under a sentence to the state prison and at the same time be either released on probation or remanded to the custody of the sheriff to be confined in the county jail. The two respective conditions of the judgment are so opposed one to the other that neither is capable of enforcement without doing extreme violence to, if not destroying, the other. The result is as though no judgment had been rendered. However, reasoning from the decision in the Mendosa Case, we are constrained to hold that the error committed by the trial court should not avail to the end that the release of the petitioner should be ordered. As is said in the Matter of Smith, 152 Cal. 566, 567, 93 P. 191, 192:

"It does not by any means follow that the prisoner must be discharged if the judgment and commitment are void. * * * The contention on the part of the prisoner that the sentence pronounced * * * is utterly void for the purpose of committing him to the state prison, but is nevertheless valid for the purpose of vacating the bench warrant, and ending the felony case, is illogical in the last degree, and finds no support in the decisions which he cites."

The intention of the trial court in the premises is perfectly clear, and petitioner has suffered nothing so far as her substantial rights are concerned by reason of the error on which the petition is predicated.

In disposing of petitioner "as the justice of the case may require" (section 1484, Pen. Code), and in accordance with the practice as indicated in the Matter of Application of Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958, In re Bouchard, 38 Cal. App. 441, 176 P. 692, and In re Adams, 61 Cal. App. 239, 214 P. 467, it is ordered that the writ be discharged, and that the petitioner be and she is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, with directions to the superior court to arraign petitioner for judgment and thereupon to proceed in the manner required by law.

SCOTT v. LARSON. (Civ. 5576.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 24, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨134(1)—On perfecting appeal from superior court's judgment, appellate court had jurisdiction, though judgment had not been formally entered (Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 5; Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

District Court of Appeal, on appeal from judgment of superior court under Const. art. 6, §§ 4 and 5, had jurisdiction immediately on perfecting of appeal, though judgment had not been entered or docketed in superior court, as appeal could not be dismissed on ground that it was taken after rendition of judgment, and before its formal entry under Code Civ. Proc. § 939.

2. Appeal and error ⇨32—Appellate court had jurisdiction of appeal from superior court judgment affirming municipal court judgment, notwithstanding failure of Legislature to provide procedure (Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 5).

District Court of Appeal had jurisdiction on perfecting appeal from superior court from judgment affirming municipal court judgment, amount being over $300, under Const. art. 6, §§ 4 and 5, giving District Courts of Appeal appellate jurisdiction on appeal from superior courts, notwithstanding Legislature failed to provide appropriate legislation for hearing and determination by District Courts of Appeal as contemplated by section 5.

3. Courts ⇨203—Power given Legislature to provide means of appeal from superior courts could not abridge appellate jurisdiction given District Courts of Appeal (Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 5).

Power given Legislature under Const. art. 6, § 5, to provide appropriate legislation for hearing appeals by District Courts of Appeal from judgments of superior court, could not diminish or abridge provision of section 4, giving District Courts of Appeal jurisdiction on appeal from superior courts.

4. Constitutional law ⇨33—Failure of Legislature to carry out directions as to procedure cannot deprive litigants of rights granted by Constitution.

Failure of Legislature to carry out implied directions indicated in constitutional provisions with reference to details of practice or procedure cannot deprive litigants of substantial rights given under constitutional provisions.

5. Courts ⇨78—Where Legislature failed to provide method of procedure court granted jurisdiction by Constitution could regulate procedure.

Court granted jurisdiction by Constitution could, in absence of legislative provision, regulate practice and provide procedure necessary to protect litigants' constitutional rights by virtue of its inherent power.

6. Appeal and error ⇨456—After appeal had been perfected from superior court judgment affirming judgment of municipal court, stay bond being given, District Court of Appeal could restrain issuance of execution from municipal court (Code Civ. Proc. § 949).

On perfecting appeal to District Court of Appeal from judgment of superior court affirming municipal court judgment and on filing undertakings including stay bond, municipal court could be restrained by District Court of Appeal from issuing execution on judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 949, providing perfecting of appeal by giving undertaking stays proceedings in court below on judgment appealed from.

7. Appeal and error ⇨456—After taking of appeal, appellate court has discretion to restrain court below from enforcing judgment.

If, after appeal, court below seeks to enforce judgment from which appeal is taken, appellate court, in its discretion, may grant special order restraining action of lower court in that regard.

Application by A. Larson for supersedeas to be directed to the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles to prevent execution of judgment pending appeal to the District Court of Appeal from judgment of the superior court affirming a municipal court judgment in an action wherein H. W. Scott was plaintiff and A. Larson defendant. Petition granted.

Harold C. Morton and Claude A. Shutt, both of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Newby & Palmer and Wm. Fleet Palmer, all of Los Angeles, for defendant.

HOUSER, J. Supersedeas. Briefly stated, the facts appear to be that in an action brought in the municipal court plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant for the sum of $514.85. Defendant appealed to the superior court, where a judgment was rendered in affirmance of the judgment theretofore rendered in the municipal court. The papers and files in the action were thereupon returned to the municipal court, and execution issued therein on its judgment, which execution was returned unsatisfied. Thereafter defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal from the judgment of affirmance rendered in the superior court, and duly filed the required undertakings on appeal, including stay bond, and for costs; after which plaintiff caused a second execution on the judgment to issue out of the municipal court, by virtue of which certain property of defendant was levied upon.

The prayer of the petition presented herein in effect is that the said levy be quashed, and that, pending the decision of the appeal to this court, the judges and officers of the municipal court be required to desist from the enforcement of said judgment.

[1] The petition sets forth the judgment which was entered in the superior court; and, while respondent denies that any judgment was ever entered or docketed therein, no authorities are cited by respondent which would indicate that in such matters the practice or procedure is such as to require a formal entry or docketing of such judgment before an appeal may be taken therefrom. The general rule relating to the time when appeals may be taken is to the effect that no appeal shall be dismissed on the ground that it was taken after the rendition of the judgment and before its formal entry. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc. See, also, the case of Aspegren & Co. v. Sherwood, etc., Co. (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 400. And by judicial determination it has been held that, although the record on appeal be not filed until later, the appellate court acquires jurisdiction immediately upon the perfecting of the appeal. Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 342, 346, 139 P. 805. So far, therefore, as the present proceeding is concerned, it will be assumed that it is properly before this court.

[2] Again, without citing any authority therefor, respondent objects to the issuance of the writ herein on the ground that:

"The Constitution of the state of California, and the statutes of said state, do not provide a way or means for appeal from the superior court wherein an order has been entered affirming the judgment of the municipal court."

Generally, the Constitution provides that:

"The District Courts of Appeal shall have appellate jurisdiction on appeal from the superior courts in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and does not amount to two thousand dollars. * * *" Section 4, art. 6, Const.

In addition thereto, among other things, section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution provides as follows:

"* * * The Legislature may, in addition to any other appellate jurisdiction of the superior courts, also provide for the establishment of appellate departments of the superior court in any county or city and county wherein any municipal court is established, and for the constitution, regulation, jurisdiction, government and procedure of such appellate departments, and for the hearing and determination by District Courts of Appeal of causes in which judgment has been rendered by the superior court or an appellate department thereof; provided, however, that the appellate jurisdiction of appellate departments of the superior court and of District Courts of Appeal shall not extend to the hearing and determination of actions at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, is less than three hundred dollars. * * *"

As the action herein was one at law on a demand for $660.70 and on which judgment was rendered for $514.85, the jurisdiction of this tribunal on appeal from such judgment would seem to be indicated at least so far as the question of the amount involved is concerned.

[3-5] While the language of the constitutional provision is not characterized by such clarity and precision or directness in expression as might be desirable, it does contain statements which can leave no doubt that appeals to this court from judgments rendered on appeal to the superior court from judgments given in the municipal court were contemplated. Clearly, the Legislature is given some sort of power with reference to providing appropriate legislation affecting "the hearing and determination by District Courts of Appeal of causes in which judgment has been rendered by the superior court" on appeal from the municipal court where the amount involved is at least $300. Such power, however, on the part of the Legislature, of whatever character or extent, in no event can diminish or abridge the constitutional guaranty. That is a right which must forever remain unaffected by legislative enactment. It can be modified, altered, or repealed only by and through the source by which it was originally provided. That the Legislature has failed to carry out the implied directions indicated in the constitutional provision with reference to possible details of practice or procedure can in no manner deprive interested litigants of their full rights respecting the hearing and determination by this court on appeal in proper cases from judgments rendered by the superior court on appeal to it from the municipal court. Were it otherwise, the plain intent of the beneficial provisions of the Constitution might be thwarted and indefinitely delayed, either premeditatedly, through sheer procrastination, or neglect on the part of the legislators, or from the inability of the members in either House of the Legislature to agree, either among themselves or with the co-ordinate branch of the lawmaking body, upon the practice or the form of procedure or whatever regulatory measure which might be suggested or seem desirable. Human rights are not to be thus frittered away or utterly destroyed. The fiat of the people having gone forth, it should be obeyed. The failure of its agent, the Legislature, to perform its duty in arranging and providing for a detail in connection with the broader and more comprehensive privilege should work no injury or prejudice to nor lessen the right for which special constitutional provision has been made. In the absence of legislative provision therefor, the courts have inherent power to regulate the practice and to provide for every just want relative to procedure before them.

In the case of People v. Jordan, 65 Cal. 644, 4 P. 683, the principle is fully discussed, and the rule as announced in the syllabus is that:

"Where the Supreme Court has been given by the Constitution appellate jurisdiction in a particular class of cases, but the Legislature has prescribed no means for taking an appeal, the appellate court has inherent power to establish any appropriate system of procedure, and for such purpose may adopt rules, issue writs of mandamus and certiorari, or frame and issue any suitable writ, or adopt any mode of procedure already prescribed for bringing a cause before it."

Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in effect that in cases of appeal of the character of that here involved "the perfecting of an appeal by giving the undertaking, * * * stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from. * * *" No question is raised regarding the sufficiency of the undertaking given by the appellant herein. The difficulty, however, as suggested by petitioner, is not with the provisions of the statute, but lies in the fact that its provisions have been disregarded, in that, since the appeal has been perfected, respondent has caused execution to be issued and levied upon property belonging to petitioner, and which property respondent threatens to sell under said execution in satisfaction of the judgment recovered by him.

[6, 7] The law appears to be well settled that, if after an appeal the court below seeks to enforce the judgment from which the appeal is taken, the appellate court, in its discretion, may grant a special order restraining the action of such lower court in that regard. Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 306, 33 P. 123; McAneny v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 6, 8, 87 P. 1020; Southern Pacific Co. v. Superior Court, 167 Cal. 250, 252, 139 P.

69; Luckenbach v. Krempel, 188 Cal. 175, 177, 204 P. 591; Freeman v. Donohoe, 188 Cal. 170, 174, 204 P. 593.

It follows that the petition should be granted. It is ordered that the levy of the second execution hereinbefore referred to be quashed, and that, pending the final decision of the appeal herein, the judges and officers of said municipal court refrain and desist from the execution of the judgment.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

WELCH v. REESE (Civ. 5578.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 24, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 123—Form of judgment as regards appeal is immaterial, if rights have been determined thereby (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 577).

Form of judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 577, from which appeal may be taken, is immaterial so long as it appears therefrom what rights, if any, of respective parties have been determined; test of sufficiency being substance rather than form of judgment.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 84(2)—Judgment of superior court that judgment entered by municipal court be affirmed held sufficient final judgment as regards appeal (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963).

Judgment of superior court that "judgment made and entered by the municipal court in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, affirmed," held sufficient in form and substance to authorize appeal therefrom under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, providing for appeal from final judgment in superior court in action brought there from another court.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 456—Issuance of execution on municipal court judgment pending appeal from decision of superior court affirming judgment held quashed, and execution restrained pending appeal (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963).

Action of municipal court in issuing execution on municipal court judgment, pending appeal under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 963, from decision of superior court affirming municipal court judgment, held to warrant interference by District Court of Appeal by order quashing levy and restraining execution pending appeal.

Application by Hettie Reese for superseas to be directed to the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles to prevent execution of judgment pending appeal to the District Court of Appeal from a judgment of the superior court affirming a municipal court judgment in an action wherein Ethel Welch was plaintiff, and Hettie Reese defendant. Writ granted.

James, Pace, Smith & Younkin, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

S. C. Schaefer, of San Pedro, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. In this proceeding the facts and the prayer of the petition are similar to those set forth in the case of Scott v. Larson (Civil No. 5576) 255 P. 248, this day decided by this court. The only additional point presented is that the judgment by the superior court in affirmance of the judgment rendered by the municipal court is not such a judgment as is within the meaning and intent of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for an appeal from a final judgment in the superior court entered in an action brought into the superior court from another court.

In the instant case that part of the judgment rendered by the superior court which is here material was as follows:

"Whereupon it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the * * * judgment made and entered by the municipal court * * * in the above-entitled cause be and the same are (is) hereby affirmed. * * *"

Section 577 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines a judgment as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding.

[1-3] The form of the judgment is of no consequence so long as it may be ascertained therefrom what rights, if any, of the respective parties in the action have been determined by the court. The test of its sufficiency must rest in its substance rather than in its form. Hentig v. Johnson, 8 Cal. App. 221, 96 P. 390; Hoover v. Lester, 16 Cal. App. 151, 116 P. 382; Black on Judgments, § 115; Freeman on Judgments, § 50.

The judgment by the superior court was clearly sufficient in form and substance to authorize an appeal therefrom. Scott v. Larson (Civ. No. 5576) 255 P. 248.

On the authority of the last-mentioned case, it is ordered that the levy of the execution by the municipal court be quashed, and that, pending the final decision of the appeal herein, the judges and officers of said municipal court refrain and desist from the execution of the judgment.

NORMAN v. COGSWELL et al. (Civ. 5427.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1927.

1. Certiorari ⇨12—Certiorari lies only to review judicial or quasi judicial proceedings.

Only proceedings of a judicial or quasi judicial character may be reviewed by certiorari.

2. Certiorari ⇨21—Determination what newspaper should give notice of election for proposed fire protection district is reviewable by certiorari, being quasi judicial (Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707).

In proceedings for creation of fire protection district under Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707, determination by county board of supervisors that certain newspaper should give notice of the election is quasi judicial in character and subject to review by writ of certiorari.

3. Certiorari ⇨21—Determination by county board of supervisors that proper notice of election for proposed fire protection district was given is reviewable by certiorari; being "judicial" (Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707).

In proceedings for creation of fire protection district under Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707, determination by county board of supervisors that proper notice of election for proposed district was given in the newspaper which had been determined by them to be the one most likely to give notice to the electors, is judicial rather than ministerial, and subject to review by writ of certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial.]

4. Counties ⇨18—Publication of notice of election for proposed fire protection district in newspaper other than one designated held insufficient (Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707).

In proceedings for creation of fire protection district under Hillyer's Consol. Supp. pt. 2, p. 2707, publication of notice of election for proposed district in a newspaper other than the one designated by the board of supervisors for that purpose as the one most likely to give notice to the electors is insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Petition for writ of certiorari by George B. Norman against Prescott F. Cogswell and others to review an order of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County creating the Moneta County Fire Protection District. From a judgment affirming the action of the Board of Supervisors and denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Lorrin Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Asst. County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. A writ of certiorari was issued by the superior court of Los Angeles county, directed to the board of supervisors of that county for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings leading up to the creation of the Moneta county fire protection district of Los Angeles county, under the provisions of "An act to provide for the formation, management, and dissolution of county fire protection districts, and annexations thereto, setting forth the powers of such districts and providing for levying and collecting taxes on property in such districts to defray the expense thereof." Hillyer's Consolidated Supplement, pt. 2, p. 2707. From the return to the writ it appears that a petition was filed for the establishment of the district, and that the board of supervisors determined that it should be formed. Notice of the time and place fixed for "a hearing of the matter of the formation" was published, as required, in the Gardena Reporter, which newspaper was deemed by the board most likely to give notice to the inhabitants of the territory embraced in the resolution, of the proposed formation of the district. Written objections by 59 freeholders were presented and heard, and thereafter the board of supervisors decided to establish the district. The act provides that, where objections are filed by 25 or more freeholders, the board of supervisors must submit its decision to an election called by it for that purpose, and that it must give notice of the "resolution ordering the holding of such election" by publication "in the newspaper of general circulation in said proposed district, deemed by said board to be the most likely to give notice to the electors thereof of such proposed election." In this instance the board determined that the Moneta Observer was the paper most likely to give notice, and ordered the notice to be published accordingly. The notice, however, was not published in this last-named newspaper, but was published in the Gardena Reporter. The election was held, and subsequently the board, in accordance with the provisions of the act did "enter a finding to that effect upon its minutes," in which it declared that 94 votes were cast in favor of, and 85 votes were cast against, the creation of the district. The district was declared established. The judgment of the superior court affirmed the action of the board of supervisors, and this appeal is from that judgment.

[1] The appellant maintains that the board of supervisors was exercising quasi judicial functions in all of the steps taken by it up to and including its final determination that the votes cast were in favor of the creation of the district, that the publication of the notice of election in a newspaper other than the one designated was an insufficient notice, and that due notice is a prerequisite to the exercise of its jurisdiction thereafter. The respondents' answer is that the things done by the board up to the point where, after hearing, it determined that a district should be formed, are judicial in character, and that all of the things done by the board thereafter are only ministerial. It is conceded by both counsel that the writ of certiorari will not lie except to review proceedings of a judicial or quasi judicial character; hence it is unnecessary for us to do more than refer to the case of People v. Board of Supervisors, 122

Cal. 421, 55 P. 131, for a statement of that rule.

[2, 3] The main difficulty in this case is to determine whether or not the giving of the notice involved a quasi judicial act or was a necessary prerequisite to the performance of some quasi judicial act. It can hardly be denied that the determination that the Moneta Observer was the newspaper most likely to give notice to the electors was a quasi judicial finding. We may assume, for the purposes of this case, that the establishment of the boundaries was a legislative act, that the calling of the election and the canvass of the votes were purely ministerial; nevertheless, it remained for the board to do something beyond the mere canvassing of the returns before the board could, in the words of the act, "enter a finding" to the effect that a majority of votes had been cast at the election in favor of the creation of a district; it must, upon proper evidence, such, for example, as the proof of publication by affidavit of the publisher, decide that a proper notice had been given in the newspaper which it had already decided was the most likely to give notice to the electors. This determination cannot be said to be ministerial, but involves a consideration and weighing of testimony. It is judicial.

We find nothing in the case relied upon most strongly by the respondents (Borchard v. Supervisors, 144 Cal. 10, 77 P. 708) to conflict with these views. An examination of the statute involved in that action shows that the notice of election, which it is provided the supervisors "shall" give, must be published in a newspaper published in the boundaries of the proposed corporation, or "shall" be posted in four public places therein. There is no provision in the act there involved that it shall be in the newspaper deemed (italics ours) by the supervisors most likely to give notice to the electors. Perhaps more important than this is the fact that in the Borchard Case the court found that the notice had been properly given. And, aside from this, we also find that the organization of a district such as that in question here differs essentially from the organization of a municipal corporation. A fire protection district compares more logically with an assessment district for a certain definite and particular improvement. The formation of the district constitutes the steps preliminary to the assessment for the improvement, which in this case is fire protection organization and equipment. See Pasadena Park Improvement Co. v. Leland, 175 Cal. 511, 166 P. 341. We may fairly and reasonably assume that assessments will be levied for the purposes of the district by the board of supervisors, and all preliminary steps theretofore are requisite to the jurisdiction of the board to make such levy. This fact, we think, is of extreme importance, for, as was said in Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors,

"It is sufficient if they" (the board) "are invested by the Legislature with power to decide on the property or rights of the citizen. In making their decision they act judicially, whatever may be their public character."

The Imperial Water Co. Case also recites proceedings very similar to those here in these words:

"The proceedings provided for by the act comes clearly within these definitions. Section 1 designates the persons who may initiate the proceeding before the board. Stats. 1911, p. 509. Section 2 provides that such proceeding shall be begun by a petition presented to the board, signed by the required number of persons, representing the majority in value of the land, and setting forth the boundaries of the proposed district and the source of the water supply. Stats. 1911, p. 509. The petition, together with a notice of the time of the meeting at which it will be presented to the board, must then be published for two weeks. At that time supervisors must hear the same. They may change the boundaries as deemed advisable by including or excluding territory therefrom, but they must not exclude land irrigable from the proposed source, or include land which will not be benefited by irrigation therefrom. Any person whose lands may be irrigated from the proposed source may, in the discretion of the board, have such lands included within the district. The board must hear all relevant and competent evidence offered, and thereupon determine whether or not the petition is signed by a majority in number of the holders of lands within the proposed district susceptible of irrigation from the same source or system, and whether or not the lands held by such signers represent a majority in value of such lands within the district. Section 3. They must also determine the genuineness of the signatures to the petition and the sufficiency of the publication made. If all these facts are determined in favor of the petitioners, the board may then make an order fixing the boundaries of the district and calling an election to submit to the voters within the territory thus fixed the question whether the same shall be organized as a district under the law. Section 6. If the election is favorable, the board shall then make an order declaring the territory organized as an irrigation district." (Italics ours.)

And then says:

"This scheme presents all the usual elements of a judicial proceeding, the notice, the hearing, the taking of evidence, and the judgment. The privilege of using a portion of the water from a common source upon a particular tract of land is one which directly and materially affects the value of the land, and is clearly a property right of great value. The right to be excluded from the burdens which the construction and operation of the waterworks will impose upon property within such a district is also a property right. By this act the Legislature has committed to the board of supervisors the power to determine and dispose of these rights. The decision of such a matter, after notice and a hearing, is clearly the exercise of a judicial function. The circumstance that the facts are to be established as a foundation upon which the subsequent legislative act of creating a public corporation is to be based, does not destroy the judicial character of the determination nor take away the fact that it does affect private property injuriously or beneficially as the case may be. It is, therefore, a proceeding subject to be reviewed in certiorari." (Italics ours.)

It will be noted that the judgment mentioned in the last-quoted language of this case refers to the final order entered after election. And so in this case no final judgment could be entered until after the election. In the case of Broyles v. Mahon, 72 Cal. App. 484, 237 P. 763, which involved the creation of a high school district, the court says:

"It may be conceded that the creation of the proposed Chico high school district, as it will be after the annexation of the common school districts, is a legislative act; but it appears to be the law that where the legislature delegates legislative power to a local board and provides that it can be exercised only upon certain conditions and upon the ascertainment of certain facts by such board, after notice and hearing to interested parties, the proceeding thus authorized is of a judicial character which may be reviewed by writ of review. Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780; 4 Cal. Jur. 1074, and citations, note 19."

[4] Having determined that the particular thing complained of in the instant case is subject to be reviewed in a certiorari proceeding, the next and final question is whether the publication of the notice was sufficient? We think it was not. It has been held that the publication of notice in a newspaper other than the one designated is equivalent to no notice at all. Chase v. Treasurer of Los Angeles et al., 122 Cal. 540, 55 P. 414. See, also, Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 P. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350. In this instance it was not only not published in the paper designated, but was not published in the newspaper deemed by the board most likely to give notice to the electors.

Judgment reversed.

BANK OF ITALY v. WETZEL et al.*
(Civ. 5370.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 8, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 6, 1927.

1. Evidence $\S$ 423(6)—In action on note not set out in pleadings, plea that defendants were guarantors did not plead matters which could not be proved without violating parol evidence rule.

In action on note, defendants' plea that they were mere guarantors and exonerated by acts of plaintiff did not plead matters which could not be proved without violating parol evidence rule, where note was not set out in pleadings.

2. Guaranty $\S$ 86—Defense in action on note that defendants were guarantors was not defective for failure to allege they were not indemnified by principal (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2819).

In action on note, plea that defendants were mere guarantors and exonerated by acts of plaintiff was not defective because it failed to allege that guarantors were not indemnified by principal for guaranty, notwithstanding Civ. Code, $\S$ 2819.

3. Bills and notes $\S$ 476(1)—Pleading $\S$ 8(4)—Plea that note was executed without any consideration whatsoever held good and not mere conclusion.

In action on note, defendants' plea that it was given "without any consideration whatsoever" is not mere legal conclusion of pleader, but states good defense.

4. Guaranty $\S$ 25(3)—Evidence held to support finding that note executed by bankers to buyers of bank to guarantee payment of paper was without consideration.

Evidence held to support finding that note signed by sellers of bank, but executed after sale, to guarantee payment of paper held by such bank, was without consideration.

5. Guaranty $\S$ 16(3)—Guaranty of payment of notes, not entered into at same time with original obligation, requires distinct consideration (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2792).

Guaranty of payment of notes, not entered into at same time with original obligation, held to require consideration distinct from that moving to makers of original notes, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 2792.

6. Guaranty $\S$ 21—Payment by guarantors of two notes guaranteed held not conclusive recognition of consideration for note given to guarantee payment of third note.

Where defendants gave note to guarantee payment of three other notes, their payment of amounts represented by two of such notes held not to operate as conclusive recognition of consideration for third guaranty note.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Italy against H. E. Wetzel and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Crosby, Naus & Crosby, Daniel Rygel, and George Naus, all of Oakland, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action on a promissory note given for the sum of $5,600. The case was tried without a jury. The findings in effect determined that the defenses interposed were true, and judgment followed in favor of defendants.

At the opening of the trial plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings. The motion was denied. Appellant here claims, first, that the lower court erred in its denial of the motion, for the reason that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were admitted, and the affirmative defenses relied upon in the answer were legally insufficient to base any judgment in favor of defendants. Appellant's next and main contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. We will discuss the objections in the order stated. The complaint alleges, in substance, that defendants executed and delivered their promissory note for the sum of $5,600, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. The note itself is not set forth in the pleadings. It then recites that no part of said note has been paid except the sum of $3,950.01, and that there is now due, owing, and unpaid, with interest, the sum of $1,812.30 for which sum judgment is prayed. The answer is by way of confession and avoidance. The due execution of the instrument is admitted, but under two affirmative defenses it is prayed that plaintiff take nothing by its action. Under the first defense the claim is made that the makers were mere guarantors and were exonerated by the acts of the plaintiff. Under the second, it is asserted that the instrument sued on was without any consideration whatsoever. The allegations of the answer in support of the first affirmative defense set forth, in substance, that the note was given to guarantee the payment of three other separate promissory notes made by certain principal debtors named Bidart, Wittman, and Castro, and executed by said persons to plaintiff; that the Bidart and Wittman notes were paid by defendants, and demand was made by them in August, 1922, for the surrender of the Castro note, together with an offer by them to pay the same in full, but plaintiff informed defendants that the note was lost; that in truth and in fact it was not lost, but had been extended by the execution of a new note, which prolonged the time of payment thereof for a period of two years, contrary to the consent of defendants and without their knowledge. It is then alleged that, at the time the new note was executed and received by plaintiff, the original note was due and payable and could have been collected. Further allegations are to the effect that the new note was not due and payable at the time of the commencement of this action, that recourse against defendants was not reserved by plaintiff, and that no attempt had been made by it to collect the indebtedness from Castro. The second affirmative defense merely recited that the note sued upon was given without any consideration whatsoever.

[1, 2] It was the contention of plaintiff, in support of its motion for judgment on the pleadings, that the first plea of defendants was an attempt to plead matters which could not be proved without a violation of the so-called parol evidence rule, and that, under the second affirmative defense, the form of denial constituted nothing more than the conclusion of the pleader. We do not consider there is any merit in these contentions. Aside from any question of the doctrines of aider or cure of pleadings by verdict, findings, or judgment, or cure by the right of amendment to conform to proof, whether such right be exercised or not, we are of the opinion that the allegations were sufficient to raise the pleas of exoneration and lack of consideration. The instrument was not set forth in any of the pleadings. The guaranty could have been an intrinsic part of the note. The pleadings did not indicate whether intrinsic or extrinsic evidence would be required as proof. As a matter of fact, as hereafter appears, the guaranty was intrinsic. Nor is there any merit in the further objection to the plea that it fails to allege that the guarantors were not indemnified by the principal for the guaranty. It is true that under section 2819 of the Civil Code, if defendants were indemnified by the principal debtor, the exoneration would be inoperative to the extent of the indemnity. Defendants, however, were only required to plead the facts raising the question of exoneration, which they did; they were not required to anticipate a defense of this character and negative or avoid it. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 433, 51 P. 630.

[3] Equally without merit is the claim that the plea of want of consideration, as set forth in the second affirmative defense, is defective. Defendants alleged that the note was given "without any consideration whatsoever." In some jurisdictions a plea in this form is held to be a mere conclusion of the pleader. This is not the rule, however, in this state. It has here been expressly held that, where an answer states in so many words that the note sued on was executed without any consideration whatever, it states a good defense. Rivera v. Cappa, 29 Cal. App. 496, 156 P. 1016, 1017. In denying a transfer in this case, our Supreme Court reviewed the former decisions upon the subject and held the allegation to be good. It is difficult to imagine why such a plea should be more specific. An allegation that there was no consideration expresses the fact with such clearness and certainty there remains no doubt upon that subject. By the words employed, plaintiff was fully advised of the nature of the plea. We conclude, therefore, that the motion for judgment on the pleadings were properly denied.

[4] This brings us to the next and main contention of appellant, that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. It appears therefrom that in September or October, 1920, a company known as the Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation purchased the First National Bank in King City by acquiring all of its outstanding stock. The negotiations on the part of the buyer were conducted by one Giannini and defendants herein, Wetzel and Ulrey, represented the sellers. Giannini was president of the Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation, and defendant Wetzel was a small stockholder of the selling bank, owning 25 shares therein. He was its cashier, and Ulrey was its president. During the negotiations leading up to the sale, Giannini was assured by Wetzel that the notes held by the bank were all good. Giannini had the notes examined by one Blauer, who made objection to three of them. The notes objected to were separate ones given by persons named Bidart, Wittman, and Castro, and referred to in defendants' answer. Wetzel informed Blauer that he was willing to guarantee them if it was important. After his audit was completed, Blauer made his report to Giannini, and the sale of the bank was thereupon completed. At this time nothing was said by the parties relating to any guaranty, and none was given. During the negotiations, Giannini had remarked to Wetzel that, if he made good, there was plenty of room at the top. After its sale, the First National Bank continued to operate as such for about a year, and Wetzel continued as its cashier. In May, 1921, he was transferred to Oakland to become manager of the College Avenue branch of the Bank of Italy. The Bidart, Wittman, and Castro notes in the meantime remained unpaid, and in January, 1922, and while Wetzel was still manager of the College Avenue Bank one Snyder, an officer of the Bank of Italy, requested Wetzel to guarantee them. In keeping with his oral promise made about a year before, Wetzel executed his guaranty of the three notes involved in the principal sums of $1,506.04, $3,167.90 and $931.93, respectively, covering the amounts of the Castro, Bidart, and Wittman obligations. These notes respectively carry the written memoranda "Re Castro guarantee," "Re Bidart guarantee," and "Re Wittman Bros. guarantee," all of which were written on the face of the respective notes before they were signed. They were made in favor of the Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation, and matured in July, 1922. In the month of August of the same year, the three guaranty notes were renewed by the consolidation into one note for the sum of $5,600 in favor of the Bank of Italy. This renewal note bore on the back thereof the memoranda, "covering guarantee of Bidart, Wittman, and Castro notes," which was written thereon before the note was signed. Nothing was received by either of the defendants from any one for the guaranty notes, nor did either of the defendants receive any of the money loaned to Castro, Bidart, or Wittman. At the time of the consolidation of the notes, Wetzel was no longer connected with the Bank of Italy. In November, 1922, demand was made for payment of the consolidated note. Defendant Wetzel thereupon paid the amount covering the Bidart and Wittman notes, but plaintiff was unable to produce the Castro note; it being claimed by it that it was lost. In December following, Wetzel was informed that the same had been found, and he visited plaintiff bank for the purpose of paying the same. Wetzel discovered that the note was not the one he had guaranteed. The new note was executed in December, 1922, and antedated July 1, 1922, and was payable two years thereafter. The amount was for the principal sum of $1,506.04, the increase over the amount of the original note representing the sum of $128.61 accrued interest.

The findings of fact upon which the judgment for defendants is based include those that there was no consideration whatsoever for the $5,600 note or the other three notes for which said note was substituted by way of renewal, and the finding that plaintiff extended the time of the Castro obligation by accepting in lieu thereof a renewal note in a sum covering the original principal sums, plus interest, and upon different terms as to time of payment, thereby exonerating defendants. It is appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support these findings, as it shows a consideration moving to Wetzel and also a prejudice suffered by Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation; and, further, that the note was not a guaranty, and in addition thereto that the Castro obligation was not renewed, but at best merely physically replaced. In this connection it is claimed that it clearly appears from the evidence that defendants, who were, respectively, president and cashier of the selling bank, were interested in having the transaction consummated, and in furtherance of this object voluntarily gave assurance that the notes were good and would be guaranteed by them; that it further discloses they were stockholders in the selling institution and profited as a result of the sale; that it was understood between Wetzel and the purchasing corporation that, if such sale was consummated, subsequently another bank would become owner of the purchased corporation, and Wetzel would be employed by it in the same capacity he held in the selling bank at an increased salary, and that his promotion would follow; that, in pursuance of such negotiations, the sale was consummated, the shares of stock were sold and employment and promotion followed. The weakness of this argument lies in the fact that there is no evidence that these considerations in any manner controlled the transaction or that they were ever considered by the parties as part of the consideration for the sale. The guaranties were executed about a year after the sale of the bank had been consummated. Giannini, representing the purchasing corporation, had never even mentioned, much less requested, at the time of the sale, that the guaranties be given as part consideration for the transfer, and none were in fact demanded or given at such time. No obligation was incurred by Giannini to employ Wetzel, nor did Wetzel incur any obligation to guarantee the notes. It is true that Wetzel owned some 25 shares of stock in the selling corporation, which had cost him $100 per share, and which he sold by reason of the transaction for $115 per share, but it was never claimed or even intimated at the time of the transaction, nor is there any evidence to show that this fact was an inducing cause of the sale, or that it formed any part of the consideration for the transfer or the assumption by defendants of the obligation by them of the payments of the notes. It must be remembered that the original obligations of Castro, Bidart, and Wittman were incurred in the year 1920, and the original guaranties were entered into in 1922, the latter forming no part of the consideration of the former.

[5, 6] Where a guaranty is entered into at the same time with the original obligation, or with the acceptance of the latter by the guarantee, and forms with that obligation a part of the consideration to him, no other consideration need exist. In all other cases there must be a consideration distinct from that of the original obligation. Civ. Code, § 2792. The guaranties, therefore, required a consideration distinct from that moving to Castro, Wittman, and Bidart. The trial court found that none existed, and the evidence fully supports this finding. The further argument is advanced by appellant that, even conceding this to be true, the payment by defendants of the amounts represented by two of the notes operates as a conclusive recognition of consideration. We do not think so. Plaintiff was in no manner prejudiced, but rather benefited by the payments. No implied promise to pay the amount of the remaining note could possibly arise by such conduct. An implied promise under such circumstances is itself, without consideration, a mere nudum pactum, and unenforceable. Moreover, there never was in fact a part payment of an entire obligation. The note sued upon and upon which payments had been made and applied is really severable. It was a guaranty of three renewal notes. The amount paid was an exact discharge of the Bidart and Wittman items, and upon payment these notes were delivered to defendants, and the receipt given to them bears the indorsement, "Bal. due 1649.99 % Castro."

Counsel for respondent presents, in support of the judgment, the additional argument that any oral guaranty given or made when the sale took place was made to Stockholders' Auxiliary Corporation, the buyer; that it was a special guaranty which would not inure to the benefit of plaintiff bank; that no one but the particular person addressed may act upon a proposal of special guaranty, and the fact that the purchasing corporation may have been either the agent or principal of the Bank of Italy would not alter the situation; that a new party cannot be thus imported into a contract and imposed upon guarantors without their consent, any more than a change can be made in other pre-existing conditions, as one has a right to choose those with whom he may contract—citing Garfield v. Ford, 191 Cal. 69, 214 P. 963. The conclusion that we have reached that the findings of the trial court of lack of consideration of the obligations being fully supported by the evidence, a discussion of the distinction between a general and special guaranty would accomplish no useful purpose. While we are of the further opinion that the evidence supports the finding that defendants were exonerated (even assuming a liability to have existed) by the act of plaintiff in renewing the note, this question, too, becomes unimportant in face of the finding of lack of consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEAVER v. FICKETT et al. (Civ. 3120.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 30, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1927.

1. Contracts §229(2)—Where limit was set to cost of building, excess to be deducted from commission, builders were required to pay claims with or return moneys advanced on incurring greatly excessive cost.

Where contract, allowing builder 10 per cent. upon actual cost of building, provided building was not to exceed specified cost, and that, in case of greater cost, overcharge was to be deducted from commission, builders were required to pay claims with or return all moneys advanced, where total cost of building was greatly in excess of specified amount allowed.

2. Indemnity §13(1)—Owner could recover against contractors amounts he was required to pay on claims for which he had advanced contractors money.

Where contractors were under legal obligation to pay claims for labor and materials from moneys advanced by owner, owner could recover amount of claims he was compelled to pay by reason of legal liability, though payments were made without express request from contractors.

3. Indemnity §13(1)—Contractors, turning over to owner unpaid bills, impliedly requested him to make payment.

Delivery by contractors to owner of unpaid bill held implied request to owner to make payment, in action by owner for moneys advanced for contractors' use.

4. Indemnity §13(1)—Payment under legal liability of money which another must pay implies promise to repay.

Where one is legally compelled to pay money which another is under legal obligation to pay, law implies request and promise to repay; it not being necessary that payment should have been coerced, as existence of legal liability is sufficient.

5. Pleading §328—That bill of particulars set forth greater sum than plaintiff was entitled to recover held immaterial variance.

That bill of particulars, in action for money advanced for defendants' use and benefit, set forth claim for greater sum than plaintiff was actually entitled to recover, held not to create material variance.

6. Indemnity §15(7)—Evidence as to moneys owner owed contractors on other work held immaterial in action by owner for moneys advanced, where no affirmative claim was asserted.

In action against contractors for moneys advanced for their use, testimony as to moneys owed defendants by plaintiff on another job held immaterial, where such indebtedness was not pleaded by counterclaim or cross-complaint or otherwise.

7. Indemnity §15(7)—Contractors, sued for money advanced, could not show expenditures on other work for plaintiff without proving terms of other contract.

In action against contractors for moneys advanced for their use and benefit, evidence of expenditures made by contractors on other work for plaintiff held properly rejected, in absence of showing of terms of other contract to determine question of materiality.

8. Appeal and error §1071(1)—Contractors, sued for money advanced, could not object to findings that they paid excessive amounts for labor and materials, where no deduction was made therefor.

Contractors, sued for moneys advanced for their benefit, could not complain of findings that they paid more than reasonable value for certain labor and materials, where no deductions were made on that account from amounts paid by them.

9. Trial  388(4)—Finding that defendants were copartners held unnecessary, where allegation of partnership in complaint was not denied.

Where complaint alleged defendants were copartners, and allegation was not denied by answer, finding thereon was unnecessary.

10. Indemnity  13(1)—Where contractors were obliged under contract to pay labor and material claims, law implied request and promise to repay owner for claims he was required to pay.

Where owner paid claims of laborers and materialmen which contractors were under legal obligation to pay, law implied request on part of contractors and promise to repay owner to extent of owner's money remaining in their hands, in action by owner for moneys paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by R. D. Weaver against George E. Fickett and V. L. McFadden, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Fickett & McFadden. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges:

That the "plaintiff advanced to and for the use and benefit of said defendants * * * $4,779.35, which said amount defendants agreed to repay to said plaintiff, * * * but said defendants failed and refused to repay the said sum or any part thereof."

The prayer is for judgment in the amount alleged. The answer consists of denials of allegations of the complaint. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $1,743.91 and costs of suits, and the defendants have appealed.

The defendants demanded a bill of particulars, and, in response thereto, plaintiff served on them and filed a list of payments made by the plaintiff to various persons and firms, aggregating $4,779.35, at the end of which appears the following:

"The above and foregoing amounts are moneys advanced by plaintiff to and for the use and benefit of the defendants Fickett & McFadden for labor and materials furnished and used on building contracted to be erected and constructed by Fickett & McFadden for plaintiff, * * * some of which above-named amounts were secured by mechanics' liens filed by creditors in actions to foreclose same."

The court, on stipulation of the parties, appointed a referee "to take and state an account of all dealings and transactions between plaintiff and the defendants, with relation to the matters involved in said cause." The parties appeared before the referee, and produced evidence. The referee, among other things, found that the plaintiff delivered to the defendants the sum of $10,000 to be used in the construction of the building mentioned in the bill of particulars, and referred to in the briefs as the Victoria avenue job, and that the defendants "paid out for and on account of labor performed and materials furnished for said building the sum of $8,256.09." It is undisputed that the plaintiff delivered the sum of $10,000 to the defendants, as found by the referee. The evidence showing the amount paid out by the defendants in the construction of the building, which consists of numerous items, is too long to set out, and it is deemed sufficient to say that it clearly justifies the finding of the referee in relation thereto. The contract between the parties provides:

"For and in consideration of 10 per cent. of the total cost of said work, and including both labor and materials, to be by said owners paid to said builders, said builders will build, superintend, and oversee the building in constructing of said work in accordance with said plans, subject to such changes as may be agreed upon, to use diligence and care in said construction; builders' charge of 10 per cent. to be paid only on the actual cost of building, said cost to be based upon estimate furnished before building is started, said building to not exceed total cost of $10,125, including said 10 per cent. commission. If the total cost is less than $10,125, 1½ per cent. of saving to be paid to Fickett & McFadden in addition to 10 per cent. If building exceeds $10,125, overcharge to be deducted from said 10 per cent. commission, to the extent of the commission only."

[1] The evidence shows without dispute that in addition to the $10,000 advanced to defendants, the plaintiff paid out the sum of $4,779.35 in discharging claims for labor and material contracted for and used by defendants in the construction of the building. Unpaid bills for the greater part of this sum were turned over by defendants to the plaintiff to be paid by the latter. Defendant Fickett testified that the reasonable cost of the building was $14,000. Other witnesses for defendant testified that the reasonable cost of the building was $14,000 or more. Some changes were made in the original plans, at plaintiff's request, which caused an additional expense of a few hundred dollars. If the additional amount so expended be deducted from the total cost of the building, the remainder greatly exceeds the sum of $10,125, and it follows that the defendants, under the terms of the contract, were not entitled to any compensation for superintending and overseeing the construction of the building. It was the duty of the defendants, therefore, to pay claims with or return to the plaintiff the unexpended part of the $10,000 advanced by the plaintiff.

[2-4] Appellants contend that the payments made by the plaintiff in satisfaction of claims for labor and materials were not made for defendants' benefit or at their request, but that they were mere voluntary payments for which no recovery can be had. The delivery by the defendants to the plaintiff of unpaid bills, under the circumstances stated, implied a request that the plaintiff pay them. Without consideration of that fact, however, the plaintiff was under legal obligation, as between him and the claimants, to pay the amounts due them. It was the legal duty of the defendants to pay such claims to the extent of the moneys remaining in their hands which had been advanced by the plaintiff. An action may be maintained—

"by a person who is legally compelled to pay money which another is under legal obligation to pay, or who, to relieve himself from liability or to save himself from damage, pays money, not officiously, which another person ought to have paid; for in such cases the law implies a request on the part of such other person, and a promise to repay." 17 Cal. Jur. 587.

"One who is compelled, by reason of a legal liability therefor, to pay an obligation for which another in equity and good conscience should pay, may recover from that other the money so paid. It is not necessary that the payment should have been coerced by actual legal proceedings; the mere existence of the legal liability is sufficient." 41 C. J. 13.

[5] It is contended that there is a material variance between the "allegations of the complaint and bill of particulars" and the evidence. If it be conceded that the bill of particulars should have set forth the respective amounts advanced to and paid out by the defendants and the balance remaining in their hands, rather than the amounts paid by the plaintiff in satisfaction of unpaid claims, it does not appear that the defendants were in any manner prejudiced by the course pursued. But it cannot be held that there is a material variance. The plaintiff was legally compelled to pay the claims in question which the defendants should have paid to the extent of plaintiff's money which remained in their hands. The fact that the bill of particulars set forth a greater sum than plaintiff was entitled to recover is immaterial.

[6, 7] Appellants contend that the defendants "should have been permitted to testify as to moneys owing defendants by plaintiff on another job," referred to as the Glendale job. The defendants did not plead such indebtedness by counterclaim or cross-complaint or otherwise, and therefore evidence relating thereto would have been immaterial. It is also contended that it was error to exclude evidence of expenditures made by the defendants on the Glendale job. It appears that the Glendale building was commenced during the progress of the work on the Victoria avenue building. In appellants' opening brief it is said:

"It appears by the evidence that $10,000 was paid to defendants by the plaintiff R. D. Weaver on the Victoria avenue job, and $2,000 on the so-called Glendale job."

The plaintiff so testified. Appellants have called attention to no evidence showing the terms of the contract under which the Glendale building was being constructed. In the absence of such showing, it cannot be determined whether or not evidence of the amount expended in such construction was material, and, under such state of the evidence, the ruling complained of was not erroneous.

[8] The referee received evidence and made findings to the effect that for certain labor and materials the defendants paid more than the reasonable value thereof. It does not appear, however, that any deductions were made on account thereof from the total amount paid out by the defendants, and therefore the defendants were not prejudiced by such evidence and findings.

[9, 10] Appellants contend that the findings are insufficient, because it is not found that the defendants are copartners. The complaint alleges that the defendants are copartners, and the answer does not deny the allegation; hence no finding thereon is necessary. It is also contended that—

"There should have been a finding to the effect that plaintiff had paid out the money recovered in said judgment by plaintiff for the benefit of defendants, and under agreement with defendants, or under authority of defendants."

There was no dispute as to the fact that the plaintiff paid the money for labor and materials used in the construction of the building. The referee found the respective amounts advanced to and paid out by the defendants. The contract between the parties shows that the plaintiff was under legal obligation to laborers and materialmen to pay the sums due them, and, having done so, the law implies a request on the part of the defendants and a promise to repay the plaintiff to the extent of plaintiff's money remaining in their hands.

The judgment is affirmed.

Liability of insured for negligence of minor son in driving automobile, imposed under Motor Vehicle Law, § 24, as amended by St. 1919, p. 223, § 14, in force at time insured signed son's application to obtain operator's license, held not "liability of others assumed by the assured under any contract or agreement," exempting insurer under liability insurance policy from payment of judgment recovered against insured for injuries inflicted by minor son.

2. Insurance — 591½—Under provision that injured person obtaining judgment could sue insurer, proof of insured's insolvency was not required (St. 1919, p. 776).

Recovery could be had against liability insurance company under judgment recovered in action against insured without proof of insured's insolvency, under policy containing provision required by St. 1919, p. 776, that insolvency shall not relieve insurer and that action may be brought against it directly by person injured in case judgment is secured.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Robert J. Marple and another against the Automobile Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sloss & Ackerman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Marcel E. Cerf and M. P. Bruton, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Respondents first recovered judgment against Jay H. Merrill for the death of their son, Robert, Jr., caused by the negligent operation of an automobile in which he was riding while driven by the son of said Merrill. An execution on said judgment having been returned unsatisfied, respondents next commenced this action against appellant, the insurance carrier for said Merrill. Judgment was for respondents against the appellant insurance company.

Appellant claims first that the record in the first suit against Merrill shows that the judgment against him was not given upon the theory of respondeat superior, but because of a liability assumed by Merrill by contract in and by his signing the application of his minor son to obtain an operator's license to drive the automobile. We shall treat the point as though the judgment was not based upon the doctrine of respondeat superior.

The policy of insurance insured said Merrill (section II) "against direct loss and expense arising or resulting from claims upon the assured for damages by reason of the ownership, maintenance, manipulation, or use of (the automobile in question), * * * if such claims are made on account of [clause A] bodily injuries or death accidentally suffered by any person or persons * * * as the result of an accident occurring while this policy is in force. * * *

[1] One of the limitations (No. 20) of this policy provided that such insurance " * * * does not cover against claims arising under any workmen's compensation agreement plan or law; * * * nor for the liability of others assumed by the assured under any contract or agreement." Jay H. Merrill signed the application of his son for an operator's license as required by section 24, c. 147, Statutes 1919, at page 223, then in force. The statute does not prescribe any particular form for the applicant for a license to sign. It does not prescribe any contract nor formula of words for the parent of a minor to sign. But it is declared unlawful for a parent to knowingly permit his child to drive a motor vehicle without having obtained a license. It is provided that no license shall be granted to a minor unless the parent shall have joined in the application by signing the same, and, finally, that the negligence of the minor shall be imputed to the one so joining, who is declared to be jointly and severally liable with the minor for the latter's negligence.

Since this appeal was perfected the case of Lackey v. Olds & Stoller Interexchange (Cal. App.) 252 P. 672, has been decided. There the precise point was determined adversely to appellant's contention here. It was there held that the liability of an uncle for the negligent driving of an automobile by his nephew was created by law, and that the uncle in signing his minor nephew's application for a chauffeur's license did not breach the condition of the policy against assuming a liability. In Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42, the Supreme Court fully considered and upheld the constitutionality of the act which imputes the negligence of the minor to the person who shall have signed his application for a license. If the liability was created by contract instead of by statute there would have been no constitutional question to consider. In Idemoto v. Scheidecker, 193 Cal. 653, 658, 226 P. 922, the fact of a license having been issued to a minor upon the application of his father under this statute was said to have had the effect of charging the father (in the language of the statute) with joint and several liability, citing Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42.

We therefore hold that the appellant is liable under the terms of its policy even though the policy contained the provision that it should not cover liability assumed by the assured under any contract or agreement.

[2] Appellant also claims the complaint in this action is insufficient for failure to allege the insolvency of the insured. It claims the right of the injured person to sue the insurance company directly is limited to a case where he can allege and prove the insolvency of the insured. This question requires an interpretation of the rider to the policy attached in compliance with chapter 387, Statutes of 1919, p. 776, which requires such an insurance policy to contain "a provision that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the person insured shall not release the insurance carrier from the payment of damages for injury sustained or loss occasioned during the life of such policy, and stating that in case judgment shall be secured against the insured in an action brought by the injured person or his heirs or personal representatives, in case death resulted from the accident, then an action may be brought against the company, on the policy and subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person," etc. The policy rider followed substantially the same wording as the part of the statute quoted.

We are unable to agree with appellant. The statute and the rider state two independent propositions connected by a conjunction (which we have italicized above), both of which are required. The statute requiring the policy to contain "a provision that insolvency * * * shall not release, * * * and stating that in case judgment shall be secured * * * then an action may be brought, * * *" would not be satisfied by a rider stating "that an action may be commenced in case a judgment shall be secured but only in case the insured is insolvent." The rider does not attempt to do so. It is as broad as the statute.

Appellant refers to some language used in Lackey v. Olds & Stoller Interexchange, supra, which implies that the action by an injured party against the insurance company directly is limited to cases of insolvency of the insured. As indicated by the opinion itself, we find upon examination that clause H of the policy there was quite different from the clause here under consideration. It stated, "Except, that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the subscriber (insured) shall not relieve the Exchange from the payment of indemnity provided by the policy, but shall entitle the claimant to maintain an action against the Exchange. * * *" The court does not hold this language to be a compliance with the statute, but was merely explaining how the action came to be brought directly against the insurance carrier. The clause there stated that insolvency shall entitle the injured one to maintain a direct action, while here the clause states, "and in case judgment shall be secured * * * then an action may be brought."

It is ordered that the judgment appealed from be and the same is hereby affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MCGILL. (Cr. 1455.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One, California. March 30, 1927.

1. Burglary $\S$ 45—Larceny $\S$ 68(1)—Evidence held sufficient for jury on identity of stolen garments, in prosecution for grand larceny and burglary.

In prosecution for burglary and grand larceny, testimony of night watchman, who recovered garments stolen, and of employes of store from which garments were stolen, was sufficient to identify stolen garments for consideration by jury with other evidence.

2. Larceny $\S$ 23—Computation of value of goods stolen by wholesale or retail price held immaterial, where either value exceeded \$200 and supported charge of grand larceny.

Where value of goods stolen was over $200, whether wholesale or retail price was used in computation, it was immaterial, since in either case value was sufficient to support charge of grand larceny.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 371(2, 6)—Other acts of larceny and burglary, committed under same plan, time, and place, held admissible to show intent in grand larceny and burglary prosecution.

Evidence showing six different acts of larceny and burglary committed by same defendant and codefendant under same plan, at same place, and about same time, in pursuance of scheme to steal goods from stores and dispose of same, was admissible to show intent.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 365(1), 371(1)—Other crimes are admissible to show intent or plan embracing several related crimes, when they connect defendant with crime charged or are part of res gestæ.

Evidence of other crimes is admissible when it tends to establish intent, guilty knowledge, motive, common scheme or plan embracing commission of two or more crimes, so related to each other that proof of one tends to establish the other, when it tends to connect defendant with crime charged, or when other crimes are part of res gestæ.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 371(12)—Crimes of same character are admissible to show motive and that particular crime was part of common scheme.

Where several crimes of same general character are committed as part of one plan, they are admissible to show motive leading up to particular crime for which defendant is being tried, to show that crime in question was part of common scheme.

6. Criminal law §427(1) — Larceny §43 — Evidence of conspiracy between codefendants to steal from stores and dispose of loot was admissible in prosecution for burglary and grand larceny.

In prosecution for burglary and grand larceny, evidence of conspiracy between defendant and codefendant to steal from department stores and dispose of loot for small sum of money was admissible.

7. Criminal law §636(7) — Instruction in response to request of jury, given in presence of defendant but in absence of defendant's counsel, without ordering exception thereto, held not error (Pen. Code, § 1176).

Instruction in response to request by jury, in absence of defendant's counsel, but while defendant was present, defining degrees of burglary and leaving determination of degree to jury, was not error, though no exception was ordered by court to be entered to instruction, since exception was preserved by Pen. Code, § 1176.

8. Criminal law §763, 764(8) — Instruction stating there was no testimony of assault in entering building, if defendant entered it, held not erroneous as commenting on facts (Const. art. 6, § 19).

Instruction defining degrees of burglary and authorizing jury to fix degree if they believed beyond reasonable doubt that defendant committed crime, and that there was no testimony that defendant made an assault in entering building, if he did enter it, held not erroneous, under Const. art. 6, § 19, as commenting on facts.

9. Burglary §45 — Court must instruct jury as matter of law not to return verdict of first degree burglary, where evidence would not support it (Pen. Code, § 1118).

Under Pen. Code, § 1118, trial court is under duty to instruct jury as matter of law not to return verdict of burglary in first degree where evidence would not support such verdict.

10. Criminal law §763, 764(9) — Instruction that jury should fix degrees of burglary, and stating there was no evidence justifying first degree burglary, was not erroneous as inferring jury should return verdict in second degree.

Instruction defining degrees of burglary, authorizing jury to fix degree if it believed beyond reasonable doubt that defendant committed crime, and stating that there was no testimony justifying verdict of burglary in first degree, was not erroneous as inferring jury should return verdict of burglary in second degree.

11. Criminal law §1119(1) — Consultation between counsel and court, not in record, cannot be considered on appeal.

In prosecution for burglary and grand larceny, consultation between defendant's counsel and court, relative to defendant's being wounded in war, not appearing in record, cannot be considered on appeal.

12. Criminal law §338(7) — Testimony of military service of defendant prosecuted for burglary and grand larceny held immaterial.

In prosecution for burglary and grand larceny, testimony as to defendant's military service, was immaterial.

13. Criminal law §385 — Offer to show that defendant was wounded in war held insufficient as offer to show present physical condition.

In prosecution for burglary and grand larceny, offer to show that defendant was wounded several times during World War, and that his physical condition was affected thereby, was insufficient as offer to show defendant's present physical condition.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Spencer M. Marsh, Judge.

James J. McGill was convicted of second degree burglary and grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Light & Lane, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. In this case the information charges the defendant McGill and one Frank McGettigan in count 1 with the crime of burglary and in count 2 with the crime of grand larceny.

Defendant McGettigan entered a plea of guilty. Defendant McGill stood trial and was found guilty of the crime of second degree burglary and of the crime of grand larceny. He appeals from the judgment pronouncing sentence and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendants were employed as window washers of the outside windows on the first floor of Blackstone's store in Los Angeles. On June 30, 1926, they left their apartments about midnight, drove downtown, and parked outside the store of the Blackstone Company. Defendant McGettigan testified that both defendants entered the store building on the third floor by way of the fire escape, went to the fourth floor and there filled some window buckets with silk dresses and lingerie, that he was leaving the building by the fire escape when he was shot by the night watchman, and that his codefendant, the appellant, McGill, escaped. The night watchman testified that he saw McGettigan and another man enter the building and go into the third floor, that he shot McGettigan, but that the other man escaped before he could identify him. Officer Bain testified that defendant McGill admitted that he had some garments under his arm which he could not get away with, and dropped them on the roof near the rear fire escape. The appellant denies entering the store, and denies taking any property. He admits his presence outside the store on the same night the crime was committed, but claims he left before the store was entered.

[1] Appellant's first point is that there was not sufficient identification of the garments admitted in evidence as being the same garments taken from Blackstone's store on the morning of July 1, 1926. The night watchman identified one of the buckets containing the garments by a mark which he had placed thereon, and stated that the buckets were similar to those taken by him from defendant McGettigan at the time of the burglary. The night watchman also identified a mark which he had placed on one of the garments admitted in evidence. The witness Bals, who was the building superintendent, testified that he found 28 silk garments near the rear fire escape. While he could not say that the garments admitted in evidence were the identical garments found by him, yet he stated they were "similar" garments and "looked like" those taken from the store. The assistant buyer for the Blackstone Company testified that she assisted in buying this merchandise and had handled it every day; that she had examined these garments, first at the police station, afterwards at the preliminary hearing, and that the merchandise which she examined on these occasions was the same as that introduced at the trial.

We believe the testimony of these witnesses was sufficient identification of the stolen garments to be taken into consideration by the jury along with the other evidence in the case, including the testimony of appellant's codefendant that both defendants committed the burglary.

[2] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the measure of value of the goods in question. The buyer was the only witness who testified as to value, and she stated the retail price under objections of counsel for the defendant. On cross-examination the witness testified that the wholesale price was less 40 per cent. discount from the retail price. The total value of the goods was in excess of $200, whether the wholesale or retail price be used in the computation. It thus becomes immaterial which figure is used in determining the value; in either case the value was sufficient to support the charge of grand larceny.

[3] Appellant urges that the trial court should have sustained his objection to the introduction of testimony as to other offenses than the one under which he was placed on trial. It was stated by the trial court that this testimony was admitted to show intent. It consisted of testimony by the codefendant that the defendants had six times previously entered the Blackstone store and taken goods therefrom. It further consisted of defendant's own admissions of three such entries which he made to the police officers prior to the trial. In support of his position, the defendant argues that, where defendant denies the commission of the crime charged, then the question of intent becomes immaterial. However, upon examination of the record, we find that some of this testimony was given without objection and that no motion to strike such testimony was made by the defendant. Appellant's codefendant testified that the defendants had entered Blackstone's store six times previously and taken merchandise therefrom. No objection was made until the district attorney inquired how many pieces of merchandise were taken. Officer Bain testified, over objection, that the appellant admitted that the defendants entered Blackstone's store on three other occasions and took 30 or 40 pieces of merchandise on each occasion, having already made arrangements to dispose of these garments at $1 apiece. Counsel for defendant on voir dire elicited from the witness Bain the testimony that appellant said he could produce dresses in excess of the value of $10,000.

[4-6] The general rule against the admission of evidence of other crimes is well settled, but certain exceptions to the rule are also well recognized. Generally speaking, such evidence is admissible when it tends to establish intent, or guilty knowledge, motive, a common scheme or plan embracing the commission of two or more crimes so related to each other that proof of one tends to establish the other, when it tends to connect the defendant with the crime charged, or when the other crimes are a part of the res gestæ. In the present case the evidence shows that six different acts of larceny and burglary were committed by the same defendants, under the same plan, at the same place and at about the same time, all in pursuance of a plan, system, or scheme to steal from the Blackstone Company and other stores and dispose of the goods at $1 per garment. Where several crimes are committed as part of one scheme or plan, all of the same general character and tending to the same common end, they may be given in evidence to show the process or motive and design leading up to the particular crime for which the prisoner is being tried, and thus directly tend to show logically that the crime in question was a part of such common scheme. 8 Cal. Jur. 69. Evidence of a general scheme or plan to steal horses was held properly admitted in People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 255, 259, 29 P. 504. In People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 P. 390, evidence of a plan to commit robbery was held admissible for the reason that such evidence had a direct tendency to connect the defendant with the robbery as charged, although such evidence had a tendency to show an attempt to commit another offense. In the present case the evidence clearly shows that a plan or conspiracy was formed between the defendants to steal from department stores and dispose of the loot for a small sum of money. Evidence of such conspiracy was clearly admissible. In People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, the court said (page 601 [114 P. 48, 54]):

"The rule is that where several crimes are connected as part of one scheme or plan, all of the same general character, and tending to the same common end, they may be given in evidence to show the process or motive and design leading up to the particular crime for which the prisoner is being tried, and thus directly tending to show logically that the crime in question was a part of such common scheme. If the several crimes are part of a chain of cause and consequence so linked as to be necessarily connected with the system or general plan, they are admissible. In a case cited by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Witley, 2 Lea, 985, 1 New Rep. 92, where a man had committed three burglaries in one night, and stole a shirt at one place and left it at another, they were all so connected that the court heard testimony of all three burglaries, Lord Ellenborough remarked: 'If crimes did so intermix, the court must go through the detail.'"

In People v. Tomalty, 14 Cal. App. 224, 111 P. 513, defendant was charged with falsification of public records, and evidence of other falsifications were held admissible as part of a scheme to conceal shortages in the treasury. People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 229 P. 341, was a case in which it was held, in a prosecution for homicide committed in carrying out a conspiracy to commit robbery, that proof of the robbery after the killing was admissible in evidence as a part of the general conspiracy to commit robbery. The court said (page 562 [229 P. 343]):

"The fact that in carrying out the conspiracy to commit robbery a crime of greater magnitude was also committed does not affect the principle that acts of each of the conspirators which are performed during the life of the conspiracy, and which acts are within the scope and in furtherance of the conspiracy, are admissible in evidence. If no murder had been committed and the defendants had been tried on a charge of robbery affecting the victims of any one of the several robberies on the night in question, it could not be doubted that evidence as to the commission of either or both the other robberies would have been admissible."

In People v. Jo Fong, 59 Cal. App. 259, 210 P. 548, evidence was held properly received showing that almost simultaneously with the shooting of the deceased another member of the tong of which deceased was a member was shot at and wounded, as tending to show a preconceived and prearranged design on the part of defendants to act in concert in the destruction of the life of the deceased. In People v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 245 P. 781, it was held that, where the offense of which defendant stands accused was perpetrated in furtherance of a general conspiracy to commit crime, the character and purpose of the conspiracy may have a tendency to shed light upon the particular offense charged. Examination of cases in other jurisdictions discloses a similar rule as to admitting evidence of other crimes. In State v. Morgan, 129 La. 154, 55 So. 747, it was held that evidence of other burglaries committed at about the same time as the one under investigation was admissible, for the reason that such evidence bore directly upon the crime charged, by showing the same method and system were employed by defendants under similar conditions only a few days before as were employed in connection with the crime under investigation. In State v. Othick (Mo.) 184 S. W. 107, it was held that evidence of other thefts by the defendants was admissible as part of the common scheme or plan embracing the commission of two or more crimes so related to each other that proof of one tended to establish the other. In Mason v. State, 42 Ala. 532, proof was admitted of a series of other burglaries committed by the defendant under similar conditions during the same week and in the same region. In Ford v. State, 34 Ark. 649, where the charge was murder committed during the robbery of one person, proof was received of a general plan to rob the store of the same and other persons. In Commonwealth v. Scott, 123 Mass. 225, 25 Am. Rep. 81, proof was received of various criminal doings showing a plan to rob banks, and particularly the one in question. In the present case the evidence was clear that the defendants had formed a conspiracy to burglarize stores and dispose of the merchandise thus obtained. We therefore conclude that evidence of offenses other than that charged against the defendant was properly admitted under the facts as shown in this case.

Appellant assigns as error the giving of an additional instruction in the absence of defendant's counsel, but while defendant was present. During the deliberations of the jury the following proceedings occurred. We quote from the transcript, pages 122, 123, and 124:

"The Court: In the case of People v. James J. McGill the defendant is present. The people are represented here by counsel, but the attorney for the defendant cannot be found about the building anywhere. We have waited some little time now for him, and we are unable to find him. As I understand it, the jury wish some further instructions in regard to the matter. If the foreman will state—

"The Foreman: If your honor please, in regard to the first and second degree of the charge of burglary, we don't seem to come to any agreement on that, whether we can bring in on second degree or not.

"The Court: Does the district attorney wish to make any concession in the matter?"

"Mr. Scheinman: I don't know exactly how to state that—I will stipulate, if the court please, if there is a question of degree on the charge of burglary, that it is second degree burglary. In other words, if the jury believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty of the crime of burglary, the district attorney will stipulate that it is burglary of the second degree, if that is satisfactory to your honor.

"The Court: In other words, you are willing to stipulate that there is no testimony here which would sustain a verdict of burglary in the first degree?"

"Mr. Scheinman: Yes.

"The Court: I might give the instruction on that subject as bearing upon the question of the degree of burglary of which the defendant is guilty, if any. I will give the instruction, as I did before, that you are instructed that every burglary of an inhabited dwelling house or building, committed in the nighttime, and every burglary, whether in the daytime or nighttime, committed by a person armed with a deadly weapon, or who, while in the commission of said burglary, assaults any person, is burglary in the first degree. All other kinds of burglary are of the second degree. The phrase 'night-time,' as herein used, means the period between sunset and sunrise. If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did commit the crime of burglary as charged in the information, it shall be your duty, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, to determine the degree of the offense in this case, and to indicate the same in your verdict. I might say that I think there is no proof here whatever that this building which is alleged to have been entered—I think there is no testimony to the effect that it was an inhabited dwelling house. I think there is no testimony here that the defendant was armed with a deadly weapon. I think there is no testimony here that he made any assault upon any person in entering this building, if he did enter it. So I may add, in my judgment, that there is no testimony here which would justify a verdict of burglary in the first degree."

In People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 627, 45 P. 860, 863, the court said:

"No error was committed by recalling the jury, and giving an additional instruction in the absence of the defendant's counsel. The defendant was himself present, and the court directed that an exception be entered in his behalf to the instruction thus given. It is stated in the bill of exceptions that before giving the instruction the court caused his attorneys to be called and searched for in the courthouse, and also sent officers to look for them, but that they were not found."

[7] In the present case no exception was ordered by the court to be entered, but such entry was unnecessary, since the exception was preserved under the provisions of section 1176 of the Penal Code. It therefore appears that no error was committed by the trial court in the giving of this instruction during the absence of counsel.

[8-10] Appellant complains that in giving the above instruction the trial court erred in charging the jury as to matters of fact in violation of the provisions of article 6, § 19, of the Constitution of the state of California. No authorities are cited by appellant in support of his contention that this instruction violated the constitutional inhibition against commenting on the facts. We find no error in this instruction. It was the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury as a matter of law not to return a verdict of burglary in the first degree where the evidence would not support such verdict. Penal Code, § 1118; People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174; People v. King, 27 Cal. 507, 87 Am. Dec. 95. On the other hand, the court in no way indicated its opinion as to whether the jury should return a verdict of second degree burglary. The court defined burglary in the first degree, and stated that all other kinds of burglary were burglary of the second degree. The jury was instructed that, "if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did commit the crime of burglary," then it will be your duty to fix the degree. The jury was told that the building was "alleged to have been entered"; that there was no testimony that defendant made an assault "in entering the building, if he did enter it." There was nothing in this instruction to indicate any opinion of the court on the facts of the case, or to infer that the jury should return a verdict of burglary in the second degree.

[11-13] Finally, appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing the defendant's offer to prove his military service. The defendant's counsel alleges that, on consultation with the court at the bench, he stated to the court that the defendant was wounded seven times during the World War and was rated by the United States Veteran Bureau as being 43 per cent. disabled. This consultation does not appear in the record, and for that reason could not be considered on appeal. No offer of proof followed the consultation with the court. It does, however, appear in the record that counsel for the defendant wished to show that defendant was wounded several times and that his physical condition was affected thereby. Defendant argues that this testimony was admissible because defendant offered evidence of an alibi showing defendant was at home within a few minutes of the time the shooting occurred, and that therefore it was a physical impossibility for him to have come from the scene of the crime to his home within this short space of time. The testimony as to military service was immaterial. There was no other offer made to show defendant's physical condition. The fact that he had been wounded would not aid the jury unless defendant's present physical condition was shown. A 43 per cent. physical disability means nothing unless the nature of the disability is shown.

It is ordered that the judgment and order denying motion for a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

82 Cal. App. 233

NUNEMACHER v. WESTERN MOTOR TRANSPORT CO. (Civ. 3185.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 7, 1927.

1. Fraud ⚡64(1)—What amounts to mere expression of opinion is question for trial court.

What amounts to expression of opinion, as compared with positive statement of facts, depends on all circumstances of case, and is question for trial court.

2. Fraud ⚡23—Stock seller's statement of opinion, based on facts in buyer's possession, that corporation's business was profitable, held not actionable.

Where seller of corporation stock told purchaser, "We are making money as you can see from this statement," referring to report of receipts and expenses until certain date, and truthfully said that volume of business was steadily increasing, but that no statement of condition had been prepared since such report, his statement of opinion that business was profitable was insufficient basis for charge of fraudulent misrepresentation.

3. Fraud ⚡13(2)—Fraud will not be imputed to one making false representation in reasonable belief that it is true; "actual fraud" (Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2).

While positive assertion of that which is not true in manner not warranted by information of person making it constitutes "actual fraud," under Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2, though he believes it to be true, fraud will not be imputed to one making representation in reasonable belief that it is true because afterward shown to be untrue.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Actual Fraud.]

4. Fraud ⚡58(2)—Evidence held to support finding false representations in selling stock were made in belief that they were true.

In action for damages by false representations inducing plaintiff to purchase stock in corporation, evidence held to support court's finding that such representations were made in belief, justified by existing facts and circumstances known to defendant, that they were true.

5. Fraud ⚡58(1)—Finding and testimony held to preclude recovery for fraud, as showing no difference between value of stock and sum paid therefor.

In action for damages by false representations inducing purchase of 100 shares of stock at $100 a share, court's finding that "it is not true that * * * said stock * * * was not worth * * * $10,000, or any sum in excess of * * * $2,500," as alleged in complaint, and testimony of defendant's witness that stock was worth at least $100 a share, precluded recovery under complaint alleging damages to be difference between value of stock and sum paid therefor.

6. Fraud ⚡25—Detriment by fraud is essential to cause of action.

Plaintiff has no cause of action for fraud or deceit of whatever nature, unless detriment has been occasioned thereby.

7. Evidence ⚡113(4)—That stock purchased at par in reliance on alleged fraudulent representations was worth less than par when sold by purchaser held not to show such fact when purchased.

That stock was worth less than par when sold by plaintiff held not to show that it was worth less than par nearly a year before, when purchased by him at par, so as to warrant recovery of damages for fraudulent representations inducing purchase.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Judgment on finding, on conflicting evidence, cannot be disturbed.

Judgment on finding, supported by evidence, though conflicting, cannot be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by A. H. Nunemacher against the Western Motor Transport Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John L. McNab and Byron Coleman, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

De Lancey C. Smith, C. J. Goodell, and Sanborn & Roehl, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Two causes of action are stated in the complaint. In the first it is alleged that the plaintiff was induced by false and fraudulent representations made by defendant to purchase 100 shares of its treasury stock at $100 a share, to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $5,629. In the second it is alleged that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff for services performed in the sum of $527.50. The court entered judgment in favor of the defendant on the first cause of action and in favor of the plaintiff on the second. The defendant has appealed from the part of the judgment which is against it, but has presented no argument in support of its appeal. It is deemed, therefore, that such appeal has been abandoned. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment in favor of defendant on the first cause of action. It is conceded that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence bearing upon some of the alleged false representations, but the plaintiff contends that the evidence shows without dispute that the stock salesman of the defendant falsely "represented to the plaintiff that the business of the defendant was a good and profitable business and * * * was making a profit at the time" the representations were made.

The defendant operated certain passenger stage lines from about December 1, 1919, to November, 1921. During that period it acquired other stage lines, which it operated until the latter date. Its property was then taken over by the California Transit Company. In the month of June, 1920, a certified public accountant, employed by a person who thereafter purchased a large number of shares of the defendant's capital stock, audited the books of the corporation and made a written report thereof, dated June 20, 1920. The report covers the period from December 1, 1919, to May 31, 1920. It appears therefrom that up to the latter date the defendant had issued 1,201 shares of stock and that the net worth of the corporation was $121,899.95; that for the six months covered by the report the respective monthly receipts, almost entirely from the sale of tickets, were $2,336.75, $2,235.90, $2,662.28, $5,246.74, $5,525.70, and $10,272.47; and that the corresponding monthly expenses were $3,148.77, $2,890.17, $3,207.22, $5,095.74, $5,321.26, and $6,776.76. From these figures it appears that the business was conducted at a loss during the first half of the period and at a profit during the succeeding three months. The evidence shows and the court found that the report correctly sets forth the business of the defendant up to May 31, 1920. The defendant employed the same accountant to audit its books for the remaining seven months of the year 1920. Neither party questions the accuracy of the report of that audit, dated January 31, 1921. It appears therefrom that up to December 31, 1920, the corporation had issued a total of 1,935 shares of stock and that the net worth of the corporation was then $170,287.53. The monthly receipts and expenses are not stated, but the total amount received from the sale of tickets during the seven months was $112,363.17, and the amount of the expenses was $135,621.66. The accountant included in the expenses a charge of $15,666.52 for depreciation of automobiles, equipment, furniture, and fixtures. During the year 1920 A. J. Hanford was president of the corporation and Oscar H. Klatt was secretary. John M. Jackson was its stock sales agent.

During the months of October, November, and December, 1920, Jackson and the plaintiff frequently discussed the defendant's business prospects and the value of its stock. They carefully went over the report of June 20, 1920. Plaintiff testified:

"He (Jackson) said, 'You can see from the beginning of the year where we operated at a loss, and how we crept up. * * * You see in the month of May we made a profit of $3,495.71.' And I asked him whether the same proportionate profit had been made for the balance of the year, and he said: 'Yes; it has increased in proportion.' He told me that the last half of the year, from June to December, had shown an increased proportionate profit as shown on this statement. * * *

"Q. Didn't you learn, Mr. Nunemacher, just about the time when you were negotiating for this stock that this company was taking over the Bay Shore line at a valuation of approximately $40,000? A. I think * * * it had been taken over. * * *

"Q. You said a minute ago Mr. Jackson told you that the company was taking over new lines from which they were expecting increased profits, didn't you? A. Increased in proportion to what the statement shows. * * * He told me that the new acquisitions would increase the profits in proportion—not as far as the statement shows. * * * He says, 'The existing business is showing this profit, * * * and without anything further you can see what the business is making.' * * * He said that with respect to the holdings at the time the statement was made out. * * *

"Q. Didn't you say just now that Mr. Jackson told you that the company was acquiring these new lines, and from them they expected the profits would increase proportionately, as they had increased in the May statement? A. I think so. * * * In going up to Mr. Jackson's office he would look at the statement, and I would go over the statement with him, showing the percentage of profits made at that time of the year, which was in around October, and * * * he told me about acquiring the lines, and he says: 'We are making money as you can see from this statement, and our proportionate profits are going right ahead up until now; we are increasing our profits every month.' Now, whether everything else was taken into consideration, I don't know, but he understood the business, and he understood that statement, and the increased profits were going ahead all the time, is the way I took it. * * * I asked Mr. Jackson whether there had been any statement made out. He said no; they were about making out a statement.

"Q. So they were going to make out a statement at the end of the year? A. Yes.

"Q. You bought this stock on the 31st of December, 1920? A. I did.

"Q. You did not wait until the annual statement was made out? A. No. * * *

"Q. In the month of December you did ask Mr. Jackson for a statement showing you the amount and character of the business prior to December? A. Yes, sir. * * * He said they were working on the statement. * * *

"Q. When did you first find out what the business had been in money for the seven months from May until December, 1920? * * * A. In January. * * * It may have been around about the middle part. * * *

"Q. You made no demand (at that time) * * * for the return of your money, did you? A. No.

"Q. You went on from month to month taking money from them as a salary, didn't you? A. I did.

"Q. And then along toward the middle of the year, you demanded an increase in salary, didn't you? A. According to the agreement that I had, yes. * * * I have owned a garage for a year and a half; had charge of a fleet of automobile trucks * * * for approximately a year; been buying machines and selling the same."

Plaintiff further testified that one of the conditions of his purchase of the stock was that he was to be given employment by the defendant at $150 a month for the first six months, $200 a month for the next six months, and $250 a month thereafter.

Jackson testified:

"I went into this statement with Mr. Nunemacher in a rather thoroughgoing way from the angle of profit and loss, and I endeavored to show him, as I believed, that this business was a good profitable business in general, and in particular that certain lines that the company was operating were very good lines. * * * The company was operating stage lines between Oakland and Vallejo, at the time, and Oakland and Sacramento, and there were also other lines that were in their inception, and I endeavored to show Mr. Nunemacher that those lines, * * * and probably other lines, represented the foundation of a good business in my judgment. * * * I endeavored to convince Mr. Nunemacher inferentially that this was a profitable business as it operated following this report and the information that I had gathered by word of mouth from Mr. Klatt and Mr. Hanford. * * * I gained from this statement and from what I had observed of the business as it was being conducted and from what Mr. Klatt and Mr. Hanford had told me I reasoned with Mr. Nunemacher that it was a good profitable business and one that Mr. Nunemacher would be justified in putting his money in. I tried to sell him the stock. * * *

"Q. Did you at any time state to Mr. Nunemacher substantially that the profits of this company had increased proportionately to the profits shown on that statement of May 31, 1920? A. I used no such language to Mr. Nunemacher. * * * I stated things exactly in that first statement, that the volume of business had increased, as I understood it, steadily from the beginning and as represented in this exhibit here, and after that period represented in here.

"Q. You did not use the word 'profit'? A. No; but that the business was profitable.

"Q. You told him that? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You believed that to be a fact? A. Yes; I did."

[1, 2] Excepting statements clearly shown to be true, the only representation proved without substantial conflict is Jackson's statement that "the business was profitable." Plaintiff's testimony shows that he was qualified by experience to make a reasonable estimate of the value of the defendant's business and property, and he had three months in which to investigate its affairs. He knew that the only statement of defendant's receipts and expenses was that of June 20th and that a later statement, covering the period from June 1 to December 31, 1920, was being prepared. When, according to the plaintiff's testimony, Jackson said, "We are making money as you can see from this statement," referring to the report of June 20th, and truthfully said that the volume of business was steadily increasing, but that no statement of the condition of the business had been prepared since the date of that report, it is a fair inference that the plaintiff understood the further statement that the business was profitable to be a mere estimate or opinion, based on the facts stated to him by Jackson.

"What amounts to an expression of opinion as compared with a positive statement of fact depends upon all the circumstances of the case, and is a question for the trial court." French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 585, 217 P. 515, 517.

Since plaintiff was put in possession of the facts upon which Jackson "endeavored to convince Mr. Nunemacher inferentially that this was a profitable business" and upon which Jackson based the opinion that the business was profitable, the statement of such opinion "is not a sufficient basis to support a charge of fraudulent misrepresentation." Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 365, 119 P. 494, 496 (Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140).

[3, 4] It does not appear that the representation that the business was profitable was made in bad faith, but rather that Jackson and the defendant's officers did not know that it was being conducted at a loss until the completion of the audit made in January, 1921. It is improbable that the books of any large business concern at all times immediately reflect, without an audit thereof, its current profits or losses, but such matters are ascertained by occasional or regular comprehensive audits into which factors other than mere receipts and expenditures enter. During a particular time or season there may be unusually large receipts or expenses which must be distributed over a longer period in order to determine whether or not a profit has been made. A statement that a particular business is profitable, even though untrue, is not necessarily fraudulent. It is true that "the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true," constitutes actual fraud. Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2. But in this case it reasonably appears that the representation in question was warranted by the information contained in the report of June 20th and the fact that the volume of business was steadily increasing.

"Where a man makes a representation in the reasonable belief that it is true, fraud will not be imputed to him if it afterward be shown to be untrue, but there must be reasonable grounds for his belief." Maxson v. Llewellyn, 122 Cal. 195, 198, 54 P. 732, 734; Otis v. Zeiss, 175 Cal. 192, 194, 165 P. 524; Nash v. Rosesteel, 7 Cal. App. 504, 509, 94 P. 850; Hodgkins v. Dunham, 10 Cal. App. 690, 706, 103 P. 351; Meeker v. Cross, 59 Cal. App. 512, 516, 211 P. 229.

The court found that—

"Any and all representations or statements made by defendant to plaintiff at said time were made in the belief by defendant that same were true in each and every particular, and said belief that same were true in each and every particular was fully justified by the facts and circumstances as they existed and were known to defendant at the time such representations or statements were made."

This finding is fully supported by the evidence.

[5-7] The first cause of action is for damages in the difference between the amount which plaintiff paid for the stock and its value at the time of the purchase thereof. The complaint alleges that at that time the stock "was not worth the sum of $10,000, or any sum in excess of $2,500." The answer denies this allegation. The court found that—

"It is not true that at the time of purchase by the plaintiff of said stock that same was not worth the sum of $10,000 or any sum in excess of $2,500."

If it is not true that the stock was not worth $10,000, then it is true that it was worth $10,000. A witness for defendant testified that the stock was worth "not less than $100 a share" December 31, 1920. Since the amount of plaintiff's damages is alleged to be the difference between the value of the stock and the sum paid therefor, it follows that if there is no such difference there is no right of recovery.

"It is fundamental, of course, that no matter what the nature of the fraud or deceit, unless detriment has been occasioned thereby, plaintiff has no cause of action." Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 571, 126 P. 351, 355 (42 L. R. A. [N. S.] 125).

The court found that the plaintiff sold the stock December 12, 1921, for $4,371, "which was the highest price obtainable at that time." The fact that the stock was worth less than par at that time does not show, under the circumstances of this case, that it was worth less than par nearly a year prior thereto. Wegerer v. Jordan, 10 Cal. App. 362, 365, 101 P. 1066.

[8] While the evidence is conflicting in many respects, it is clearly sufficient to support the findings, and therefore the judgment cannot be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed in its entirety.

GAMBLE v. FIERMAN et al. (Civ. 3123.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 4, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 2, 1927.

1. Covenants ☞69(2), 79(3)—There is no privity between lot owners deraining title from common grantor, but right to enforce restriction is in nature of equitable easement.

As between adjoining lot owners deraining title by separate chain from a common grantor, there is no privity either of contract or estate, and claimed right of one to enforce a building restriction is in the nature of an equitable easement.

2. Covenants ☞69(2)—Basis of equitable easement to enforce building restriction must be found in common grantor's deed, construed in light of surrounding circumstances.

As between lot owners deraining title from common grantor, basis of equitable easement of one owner to enforce building restriction must be found in deed from common grantor, which must be construed in light of circumstance at time of making thereof.

3. Evidence ☞460(9)—Reference in deed to map of subdivided tract held to authorize admission of evidence that tract was subdivided under general building scheme.

In suit by lot owner to enforce building restrictions, reference to map of subdivided tract in deed to defendant's grantor held to authorize admission of extrinsic evidence that defendant's lot was part of property, subdivided for building purposes under general scheme of building improvement.

4. Covenants ☞79(3)—Covenant that building restrictions should run with land and be enforceable by any other lot owner held not personal to grantor, but for benefit of balance of tract.

Covenant in deed to lot in subdivision referring to grantor as seller, and providing that building restrictions should be covenants running with the land to operate for benefit of and enforceable by any other lot owner, held to indicate covenant was not personal to grantor, but for benefit of balance of property in subdivision.

5. Covenants ☞69(2)—Defendant lot owners held chargeable with notice of building restrictions, though deed from their immediate grantor did not contain them.

Where original deed to defendant's grantors from owner of subdivision containing building restrictions was recorded, and about 1,500 other lots were sold by common grantor with same restrictions, and residence erected on subdivision conformed thereto, defendants held chargeable with notice of right of adjoining lot owner to enforce restriction, though deed from defendants' immediate grantor did not contain them.

6. Injunction ☞62(3)—Lot owner in subdivision held entitled to injunction, where defendants lot owners were constructing building in violation of restriction after notice.

Where lot owner in subdivision had notice of building restriction and against protest of adjoining lot owner was constructing building in violation thereof, adjoining lot owner was entitled to injunctive relief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Ida B. Gamble against Richard Fierman and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Smith & Lucas, of San Pedro, for appellants.

Clement L. Shinn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BUCK, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment enjoining defendants from violating a building restriction in a residence district. Plaintiff and defendants are the owners, respectively, of adjoining lots, each deraigning title by a separate chain of title from a common grantor. Consequently, as between plaintiff and defendants, there is no privity either of contract or estate, and the right claimed by plaintiff is in the nature of an equitable easement, as defined and exemplified in the cases of Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945, McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 215 P. 678, Martin v. Holm, 197 Cal. 733, 242 P. 718, and Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 504, 126 P. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1.

[2] Under the foregoing authorities, the basis of plaintiff's equitable easement as against the defendants must be found in the deed from the common grantor to the defendants' grantor. Furthermore, the language of this deed must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances existing at the time of the making of the deed. In other words, from this deed, and this deed alone, as so construed, must appear the intent of the parties to create mutual or reciprocal rights of restriction between the grantees of the original grantor. In the case at bar, at the time of the deed to defendants' grantor in January, 1923, the Averill-Weymouth Company, Inc., was the owner of a tract of land known as Vista Del Oro. This tract had been subdivided into residence lots and blocks, and the map thereof recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county. In each deed the lot sold was referred to as lot in "Vista Del Oro, as per map recorded in Book 37, page 96 of Maps, in the office of the county recorder of said county." Following the foregoing form of description each deed, including the deed to defendants' grantor, and the later deed to plaintiff, contained the following stipulations:

"Said land shall be used for residence purposes only, and any residence thereon shall cost and be fairly worth not less than $2,500, and every part and appurtenance thereof, except eaves and steps, shall be at least 20 feet from the front line, and, in case of corner lots, at least 20 feet from the side lot line on the side adjacent to a street, except if said land is located in that part of block 4, 5, or 6, facing Meyler street, it may be used for business purposes and any building thereon shall cost and be fairly worth not less than $1,000, and any building thereon and every part and appurtenance thereof shall, in case of corner lots, be at least 20 feet from a side lot line adjacent to a street, and the foregoing restrictions shall terminate on January 1, 1940. Said land shall never be rented to any person of African or Oriental descent, and no intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured or sold thereon. The restrictions and conditions contained in this deed shall be covenants running with the land, and shall operate for the benefit of and may be enforced by the seller or the owner of any lot in said tract 'Vista Del Oro.'"

As already noted, the first question to be considered is whether or not the foregoing language in the deed to defendants' grantor, construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, contains expressions from which may be inferred any intent on the part of the parties thereto to create the equitable easement sought to be invoked in this action.

In the Werner and McBride Cases cited above, and in the case of Berryman v. Hotel Savoy, 160 Cal. 559, 117 P. 677, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5, and in Bresee v. Dunn, 178 Cal. 96, 172 P. 387, the deed relied upon contained no language, express or implied, referring to any general plan or scheme of building improvement, and contained no language showing that it was the intent of the parties to the deed that the restrictions in the deed should be for the benefit of the subsequent owners or holders of all the lots in a defined or designated tract of land subdivided into residence lots.

For instance, it will be noted in the Werner Case—strongly affirmed and upheld in the McBride Case as fully stating the rule and its proper application—that the deed relied upon contains no language showing that the lot conveyed is a part of a residence tract or subdivision of land of which the grantor is the seller, nor is there any language in the deed from which it can be inferred that the owners or holders of the balance of the tract shall be the beneficiaries of the restrictions imposed upon the covenantor by the deed in question. See pages 177 and 178 of the Werner Case (183 P. 946).

Also, in the McBride Case, though the complaint alleges that "in accordance with a general plan or scheme for the improvement of said tract, the said owner inserted in each and every deed conveying said lots" certain restrictions, and further alleges that these restrictions "were imposed and said general plan or scheme adopted for the general benefit of all lots in said tract," it fails to appear that the pleader has, as in the case at bar, set out the language of the deed from which, by proper construction, any such intent as alleged can be inferred, or that the intent, even as alleged, was the intent of both parties to the deed.

Likewise, in the case of Bresee v. Dunn, as appears from page 99 of the opinion (172 P. 388), the deed fails to contain any language from which, in the light of attending circumstances, the requisite intent can be inferred.

See, also, the Berryman Case, at page 562 of the opinion (117 P. 677).

But the Berryman Case does lay down the rule of construction later adopted in the Mc-

"The intention of the parties should be determined by a fair interpretation of the grant or reserve creating the easement" [citing cases]. "It seems to us that in all these cases it is better to get at the intention of the grantor from the language of the deed, interpreted in the light of the attending circumstances, than to conjecture the intent from the circumstances and then to make the language of the deed bend to that."

The court in the McBride Case then continues as follows:

"Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 503 (126 P. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1), involved a case of uniform building restrictions wherein 'each of said deeds declared that the conditions stated should, as to each owner of any other lot in the tract, his heirs, successors or assigns, operate as covenants running with the land for the benefit of said other lots or their owners.' These restrictions were held to create an equitable easement so as to be enforceable by one grantee as against another."

In other words, the court fully recognized the rule that by the light of surrounding circumstances we may explain what was doubtful, but may not contradict what is plain, or supply what is absent. In the McBride Case the court emphasized by its own italics the language in the Alderson Case as above italicized.

Also, in the case of Currie v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 60 Cal. App. 192 at page 196, 212 P. 409, 411, the court emphasizes the distinction made in Werner v. Graham between the language in the Alderson Case and in the Werner Case, in the following language, where it was clearly indicated that, in the opinion of the court, the language in the Alderson Case was sufficient to express the mutual intent of the parties to create the equitable servitude relied upon, the following being the language used in the opinion:

"These matters may all have been in the mind of the grantor and yet be of no avail to impose a servitude on the lots conveyed unless the grantee also joined in the plan and gave his consent to the interchange of servitudes involved. This very point is the one which was controlling in the determination of Werner v. Graham. What was there said was not obiter dicta. The Supreme Court stamped it as 'the crux of the present case.' In distinguishing Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 504, 126 P. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1, from the one then under consideration, it said, 'The difference between such a case and the one at bar is that here there is no language in the instruments between the parties, that is, the deeds, which refers to a common plan of restrictions or which expresses or in any way indicates any agreement between grantor and grantee that the lot conveyed is taken subject to any such plan.'"

[3] Therefore, comparing the language of the deed in the case at bar with the language of the deed in the Alderson Case, it would seem that the deed in the case at bar, by virtue of its reference to the map of the subdivided tract, would and did permit it to be shown by extrinsic evidence that the lot of the defendants was part and parcel of a piece of property so subdivided as to be used for a common building purpose. And, furthermore, it will be noted that the deed contained language referring not only to the land conveyed, but also went on to provide as follows:

"And in case of corner lots, at least 20 feet from the side lot line on the side adjacent to a street, except if said land is located in that part of block 4, 5, or 6, facing Meyler street," etc.

The foregoing language would enable the court to avail itself of extrinsic evidence to show that there was a general scheme of building improvement in the tract.

[4] Also, the following language would indicate that the covenant was not a mere personal covenant so far as the grantor, as grantor, was concerned, for the grantor is referred to by the broader term of "seller" with reference to the tract as a whole, by fair construction. And, also, the following language would indicate that the covenant is imposed not simply for the personal benefit of the grantor, but for the benefit of the balance of the property in the tract, the language in question being as follows:

"The restrictions and conditions contained in this deed shall be covenants running with the land, and shall operate for the benefit of, and may be enforced by the seller or the owner of any lot in said tract 'Vista Del Oro.'"

Therefore, treating the construction placed by the courts upon the Alderson Case as a definitely approved rule of property in this state, it would appear that the language in the case at bar, construed in the light of the existing and surrounding circumstances, is just as potent for the expression of a mutual and reciprocal intent to bind defendants' property by an equitable easement as was the language in the Alderson Case.

[5] Defendants contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that defendants took with notice of plaintiff's equity for the reason that the deed by which defendants took title from their immediate grantor did not contain any of the restrictions in question. But it does appear that the original deed containing all these restrictions and provisions, by which defendants' grantor took from the common grantor of plaintiff and defendants, was duly recorded at the time in the office of the county recorder, and it also appears, as already noted, that about 1,500 other lots were sold by the common grantor containing the restrictions in question, and that the residences erected upon the property so sold conformed to the restrictions set forth in the deeds.

The defendants were therefore affected with constructive notice of plaintiff's equities as they appeared from the terms of the common grantor's deed, construed, as aforesaid, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and the law as applied in the case of Alderson v. Cutting, supra.

Since defendants took with notice of plaintiff's equitable easement, they took subject thereto. Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 548, 187 P. 167; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (4th Ed.) § 1704, and cases cited; Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 P. 855; Allen v. Mass. Bonding & Ins. Co., 248 Mass. 378, 143 N. E. 499, 33 A. L. R. 669; Johnson v. Mt. Baker Presbyterian Church, 113 Wash. 458, 194 P. 536.

[6] It further appeared from the evidence and findings, that the defendants, in violation of the restrictions of which they had notice and against the protests of the plaintiff, were constructing a portion of their residence within 20 feet of the front line of their lot. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to injunctive relief. Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (4th Ed.) §§ 1693 and 1705; Taft v. Washington, 29 Cal. App. 197, 154 P. 1073; Attorney General v. Algonquin Club, 153 Mass. 447, 27 N. E. 2, 11 L. R. A. 500.

Judgment is therefore affirmed.

DONNER v. SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY
et al. (Civ. 5534.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. April 1, 1927.

1. Justices of the peace ⇨166(2)—Superior court had no jurisdiction except to dismiss appeal from justice brought to trial after expiration of year, notwithstanding stipulation for extension entered into after year expired (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

Superior court had no jurisdiction on appeal from justice's court except to dismiss appeal, where more than one year had elapsed from time of filing appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, notwithstanding parties, after expiration of year's period had stipulated for extension of time; statute being mandatory and analogous to sections 581a, 581b, and distinguishable from section 583.

2. Courts ⇨23—Jurisdiction which has been lost cannot be restored by stipulation.

Where jurisdiction has been lost, authority of court cannot be restored by stipulation of parties.

3. Courts ⇨1—"Jurisdiction" is right to adjudicate subject-matter of case.

"Jurisdiction" constitutes right to adjudicate concerning subject-matter of given litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Jurisdiction (Of Courts).]

4. Courts ⇨30—Statute withdrawing power to act after fixed period deprives court of jurisdiction.

Where statute expressly withdraws power to do an act after fixed period, such statute is mandatory, depriving court of jurisdiction to act against statutory inhibition.

Application by J. H. Donner for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the county of Los Angeles, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, to compel vacation of an order of the court dismissing appeals from justice's court in two cases wherein petitioner was defendant. Writ denied.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Homer I. Mitchell, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, and J. R. Pollock, and A. D. Mitchell, both of Ontario, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. [1] Two cases, entitled Upland Realty & Insurance Company v. J. H. Donner, and Montrose McCann and E. O. Bowden v. J. H. Donner, were appealed from the justice's court to the superior court of Los Angeles county, but were not brought to trial within the year following the date upon which the appeals were filed. For 13 days after the one year expired no steps were taken to have the appeals dismissed, and no attempt was made by the parties to comply with the requirements of section 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure with regard to preserving the jurisdiction of the superior court to hear them. At the end of that time, however, the parties to both actions entered into and filed stipulations which provided:

"That the time of trial on appeal in the superior court of the above-entitled actions, and each of them, may be, and the same is hereby, extended so that the trial of said actions, and each of them, may take place after the period of one year has elapsed from the time of taking the appeals in said actions, and that said actions, nor either of them, shall not be dismissed for failure to bring same to trial within the period of one year after the taking of said appeals."

Thereafter the respondent court dismissed both appeals upon the ground that it had lost jurisdiction to try them, and that jurisdiction could not be conferred by the stipulations. It is sought by this proceeding to have the dismissals set aside. The superior court merely performed its plain duty in dismissing these appeals, for it was without discretion.

Section 981a provides:

"No action * * * appealed from the justice court * * * shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all such actions * * * must be dismissed by the court to which the same shall have been appealed, on its own motion, or on motion of any party interested therein, * * * where the appealing party fails to bring such appeal to trial within one year from the date of filing such appeal * * * unless such time be otherwise extended by a written stipulation by the parties to the action. * * *

[2] Construing this provision, we recently held in Napolitano v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 254 P. 647, that the prohibition against further prosecution contained in the above section deprives the court of authority to take any other action except to dismiss the appeal, that the direction requiring a dismissal is mandatory, and that, where the appeal is not brought to trial within one year from the date of its filing, the jurisdiction of the superior court is lost in so far as taking any action other than dismissing the appeal is concerned. We also concluded that the jurisdiction of the superior court to try the case could be preserved only by a written stipulation on the parties, extending the time for trial; that, although the appeal therein considered was actually tried, the superior court's action in dismissing it before rendering judgment was proper, since, with the expiration of the period of one year from the date of the filing of the appeal, all authority to do any act except to direct a dismissal had been lost, and the steps which the court had taken were void. A jurisdiction which has been lost cannot be restored by stipulation. Sauer v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 241 P. 570.

[3, 4] The question is undoubtedly one of jurisdiction. In the instant case the authority of the superior court to try these appeals entirely passed away. Its jurisdiction died, and remained dead for 13 days before the parties attempted to bring it to life through the futile gesture of then stipulating that the court might do that which the law prohibited. The language which the Legislature has employed in section 981a is mandatory; its meaning is unmistakable. It not only directs the dismissal, but it expressly prohibits any other steps to be taken. Jurisdiction is a right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter of a given case. Harrington v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 185, 228 P. 15. Section 981a prohibits the court from making such adjudication after the statutory period has elapsed, unless the parties have stipulated in writing to extend the time for trial of the appeal. When, as in said section, the statute expressly withdraws the power to do an act after a fixed period, it is mandatory, and the court is without jurisdiction to act against this inhibition. Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 130 P. 723. That the jurisdiction of the court is terminated with the expiration of the period after which further action is prohibited has been decided in a number of California cases interpreting sections of the Code worded practically the same as 981a. Section 581a provides:

"No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced must be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced, on its own motion, or on motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, unless summons shall have issued within one year, and all such actions must be in like manner dismissed, unless the summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action. * * *

In Sauer v. Superior Court, supra, referring to the contention of the respondent that the stipulation signed by the petitioner waiving the latter's right to ask for a dismissal, it is said:

"To adopt this view of the matter would be, in effect, to deny that, at the time when said stipulation was made, the court had lost jurisdiction of the case, or to hold that, by stipulation of the parties, a jurisdiction which has been lost can be resumed. Neither of these alternatives can be accepted."

Language similar in all material respects to that contained in sections 581a and 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure is also to be found in section 581b. This provision was held to be mandatory in its requirement that no further proceedings shall be had in an action transferred as provided therein from one county to another where certain fees and costs have not been paid by the plaintiff for one year "after the time when such pleadings or papers shall have arrived in the custody of such clerk or justice." It was there said that the superior court should have dismissed the action because of the plaintiff's failure to pay the costs as required, and that the court "had no power to do anything else." The same principle is announced and made the basis of decision in Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 P. 390; Beal v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 247 P. 922; Swortfiguer v. White, 141 Cal. 576, 75 P. 172; Siskiyou County Bank v. Hoyt, 132 Cal. 81, 64 P. 118; Modoc Land & Livestock Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 P. 848; White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 245, 58 P. 450; and Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 P. 470.

The foregoing decisions all recognize the mandatory character of the section now before us or others almost identically worded. These authorities govern and determine the present proceeding, for they establish the principle beyond dispute that, when the year allowed by section 981a has expired, and no written stipulation is before the court extending the time, jurisdiction to take any other step except to dismiss the appeal is lost, and it is elementary that such jurisdiction, when once lost, cannot be conferred or revived by stipulation.

Petitioner relies upon Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 200 P. 616, in which it was determined that the written stipulation made after the expiration of the five-year period limited in section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure had the effect of tolling the operation of the statute. We think the provision of that section is plainly distinguishable from that contained in section 981a. Section 583 contains no inhibition against steps being taken other than the ordering of a dismissal, as does section 981a. The decision itself clearly recognizes this distinction. Referring to section 583, it is said:

"There is, moreover, nothing in the wording of the statute in question to deprive the court of jurisdiction upon the mere lapse of five years. It is only after due notice to plaintiff that it may be dismissed on motion of the defendant, and until the actual dismissal, there appears no reason why the matter of going to trial should not remain subject to the stipulation of the parties. Unlike the preceding sections, 581a and 581b, directing dismissals upon failure to issue and return summons within a specified period, or upon failure to pay fees on transfer of actions, section 583 does not require that such actions shall not be 'further prosecuted and no further proceedings shall be had therein,' after the limited time has expired. The provision of section 583 for an extension of time for trial by stipulation of the parties, and directing notice, before dismissal on motion of the plaintiff, would suggest that even a dismissal on the court's own motion would contemplate some previous determination as to whether or not such stipulation between the parties existed. Under sections 581a and 581b the writ of prohibition has been upheld to prevent further exercise of jurisdiction in actions coming under those provisions (Modoc Land Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 P. 848; White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 265 [245], 58 P. 450), and such dismissal can be had without notice to either of the parties (Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Wood, 40 Cal. App. 355, 180 P. 951). The only relief granted under section 583 by our decisions has been to require, on proper showing, that an order of dismissal be entered, upon the apparent assumption that until such dismissal is made or demanded the parties are at liberty to treat the action as pending and within the jurisdiction of the court."

It is true that in another part of the opinion it is said that, if the parties had actually tried the case, it would not be disputed that a judgment following such trial would be valid; and further that, if the parties could waive the right to object, under such circumstances they could confer jurisdiction by stipulation. Of course this statement must be considered in connection with the interpretation of section 583, above quoted. It cannot be said that the opinion goes further and holds that under a statutory prohibition against the prosecution of an action, such as those contained in sections 581a, 581b, and 981a, the parties may by stipulation set at naught the mandate of the law. It should be observed also that none of the cases cited in Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, supra, to the effect that, "where a cause of action is within the general jurisdiction of a court, the voluntary appearance of the parties and submission of the cause on its merits confers jurisdiction to try the issues presented," in any way touch upon the question of the right to confer jurisdiction by stipulation where the statute declares that it shall not exist. For example, Allen v. Allen, 159 Cal. 197, 113 P. 160, held that, since the superior court has general jurisdiction to determine title to real property, that matter might be litigated in a divorce proceeding where the parties have submitted that issue, although as a general rule the superior court in such a proceeding has no jurisdiction to pass upon the question of the separate property of the spouses. This proposition is easily differentiated from the one here under consideration. There the superior court had general jurisdiction to determine title to real property. Were the law, organic and statutory, to be so altered as to provide that after a certain time no further steps should be taken in any action involving title to real property, the situation would be rendered similar to that presented under section 981a in the instant case. Under this section, after the year has expired within which the appeal may be heard by the superior court, it has no jurisdiction, general or otherwise, to pass upon any issue presented therein.

The writ of mandate must therefore be denied, and it is so ordered.

I concur: THOMPSON, J.

WORKS, P. J. I concur in the judgment and in everything that it said in the foregoing opinion, with the exception that I am not in accord with the comments upon Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 200 P. 616. I think the opinion in that case is out of harmony with other decisions of the Supreme Court upon kindred subjects. The only material differences between section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is dealt with in the case cited, and section 981a, are two. First, section 583 provides for notice of the motion for dismissal to be made by a party, while section 981a does not; but this difference in the letter seems not to effect a difference in the spirit of the sections.

"It is, of course, beyond question that where a motion is required to be made for an order in a cause whereby the right of an adverse litigant may be affected, it must be upon notice to such party." Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 129 P. 981.

If it be said that a motion is not "required," within the meaning of this language of the Supreme Court, under either section 583 or 981a, because a dismissal may occur of the court's own motion, there seems to arise another and totally different reason for seeing no actual inharmony between the two sections in respect of the matter of notice. Beyond a doubt the court could of its own motion order a dismissal under section 583 after notice of motion given by a party and before the arrival of the day upon which, according to the notice, the motion of the party was to be made. This would appear to render nugatory the provision for notice in section 583 and place that section in the same condition with section 981a, for it was directly decided in Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court that the requirement of section 583 is mandatory where no stipulation has been made. It would appear, indeed, that the only office that a motion under either section can perform is to apprise the court of a situation under which it must act. There is therefore no legal difference between the sections as to the matter of notice. The second apparent difference between sections 583 and 981a lies in this: The latter section provides that, after the expiration of the year following the perfecting of an appeal, no action "shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein." Section 583 contains no such language, but, as the express requirement of the enactment is mandatory, it would seem that the legislative intent was that no further proceedings should be had in actions coming within its inhibition. Its mandate operates directly upon the court, and would seem to impose as insuperable a bar to the exercise of jurisdiction as the language in section 981a to the effect that no action "shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein," unless a stipulation be entered into between the parties "extending" the time which would otherwise end with the passage of a year following the perfecting of an appeal.

WHEELER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 5844.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 6, 1927.

1. Injunction §164—Equity courts may modify or suspend their injunctions, at least where right is reserved in injunction order.

Courts of equity have right and power to retain control over their own injunctions so that they may modify or suspend them as equity requires, at least where such right is reserved in order granting injunction.

2. Mandamus §48—Petitioners claiming danger of total loss of valuable crops held entitled to peremptory mandamus to compel determination of motion to dissolve injunction against selling them.

Petitioners claiming that their crops, worth $10,000, are in great danger of total loss through moulding, if not disposed of promptly, held entitled to peremptory writ of mandamus to compel hearing and determination of their motion to vacate preliminary injunction against sale thereof, where injunction order contained reservation that it was made without prejudice to defendants' right to move to vacate injunction.

3. Injunction §157—Injunction held based on written order granting it without prejudice to right to move to vacate it, not on minute entry of oral announcement that it would be granted.

Written order granting temporary injunction against sale of crops without prejudice to right to move to vacate injunction, not clerk's minute entry of court's oral announcement that it would grant injunction, held order on which injunction was based.

4. Judgment §278—Judgments in many actions, especially equitable, as for injunctions, must be formulated by judge, and cannot rest on clerk's minutes.

While orders, in some instances, may rest on clerk's minutes, as where mere clerical or ministerial duties are involved, form of judgment and character of relief are subjects for exercise of judicial power in many actions, especially of equitable nature, such as suits for injunctions.

5. Injunction §157—Injunction should contain sufficient information on face to apprise party served of what he cannot do.

Injunction should contain sufficient information on its face to apprise party on whom it is served of what he is restrained from doing.

6. Judgment §282—Decrees in equity should be signed by judge.

In ordinary actions at law, judge's signature is not necessary to validity of judgment, but decrees in equity should be so signed.

Original petition by Harold Wheeler and another, individually and as partners doing business under the firm name and style of Sycamore Ranch, and another, for an alternative writ of mandamus to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Hon. G. H. Cabaniss, Judge, to hear and determine a motion to vacate a preliminary injunction. Alternative writ made peremptory.

Walter E. Hettman, of San Francisco (Harold Wheeler, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners.

Sapiro & Hayes, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for alternative writ of mandamus. It is alleged therein, in substance, that on the 21st day of September, 1926, the California Prune & Apricot Growers' Association, a corporation, as plaintiff, filed in the superior court of Tehama county a verified bill in equity against petitioners wherein said plaintiff claimed that, under and by virtue of a certain written agreement dated April 28, 1921, said plaintiff was entitled to have and receive from said defendants, petitioners herein, all of the crops of dried prunes which defendants should harvest and dry on their property, known as the Sycamore Ranch, in Tehama county, during the years 1922 to 1928, inclusive; the complaint further alleges that said defendants had failed and refused to deliver to plaintiff their dried prunes of the crops of 1924 and 1925, and had sold the same to persons other than plaintiff, in violation of said written agreement, and that, unless restrained by order of said superior court, defendants would sell their crops of 1926, 1927, and 1928 to persons other than plaintiff; that such sales would cause the plaintiff great and irreparable injury unless the superior court should grant to plaintiff the specific performance of the written agreement, together with an injunction to prevent the sale of the prunes, for the years stated, to any person other than plaintiff. In the complaint, judgment was prayed for, requiring and ordering defendants to perform and carry out their agreement.

That upon the filing of the complaint the plaintiff in said cause obtained from the superior court an order to show cause and temporary restraining order dated September 21, 1926, requiring the defendants to show cause, on the 28th day of September, why a preliminary injunction should not be issued against defendants as prayed for, and meanwhile enjoining and restraining them from selling the crops. This order was never served on either of the defendants, nor were they served with summons in the action until after the time fixed in the order to show cause. That at the time fixed, on September 28, 1926, the matter came on regularly for hearing, and it was continued until October 11, 1926. No further proceedings upon said order of September 21, 1926, and no hearing thereon was ever thereafter had or taken in said cause. Subsequently, on October 2, 1926, upon an ex parte application made by said plaintiff, the superior court made and issued a second order of the same character, which second order was addressed to petitioners as defendants in said suit, and was based solely upon the complaint hereinabove referred to. That said suit was thereafter duly transferred to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and it is still pending in that court. No answer has as yet been filed by the defendants, petitioners herein. The second order to show cause came on regularly for hearing on November 6, 1926, the plaintiff and defendants being represented by their respective attorneys. The matter was thereupon heard by the court and submitted for determination. The court then orally announced from the bench that, as it saw no reason why the suit could not be brought to issue and tried on its merits within the following two or three weeks, it would pro forma grant a preliminary injunction against the defendants and would later on, after the trial of the cause upon its merits, consider the various points and authorities that had been submitted at the hearing in support of or against the granting of such preliminary injunction. Thereafter, on November 16, 1926, pursuant to said oral announcement of November 6, 1926, the court signed a written order of preliminary injunction in the matter, said order having been prepared by the attorneys for plaintiff. This order was duly filed and served upon the defendants therein. The order of preliminary injunction carried with it the reservation that:

"This order is made without prejudice to the right of the defendants, at any time hereafter, to move to vacate the injunction hereby granted whenever so advised."

This reservation, so it is alleged, had been inserted in the order upon the express direction of the trial court, and was made with the intention and for the purpose of expressly reserving to said court the rights to vacate the injunction, if it should thereafter be shown that its continuation would be inequitable or improper. Thereafter petitioners herein, as defendants in said suit, duly served and filed a notice of motion to dissolve and vacate the preliminary injunction. The matter came on regularly for hearing, whereupon, and before said motion could be heard, counsel for plaintiff objected to any hearing of the motion on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the motion or to vacate or dissolve the preliminary injunction theretofore issued. The objection of plaintiff's counsel was argued and submitted to the court for determination, and the judge thereof delivered his oral opinion, in which he sustained the objection of plaintiff's counsel and declared that he would refuse to hear or consider the motion to vacate, solely for the reason that said superior court had no power of jurisdiction so to do. That the facts and grounds upon which petitioners, as defendants in said suit, moved the court to vacate the preliminary injunction are fully set forth in an affidavit of Harold Wheeler, one of the defendants, from which it clearly appears, so it is alleged, that if the motion should be heard and considered, there are good and sufficient reasons, in equity and good faith, why said motion should be granted and the injunction dissolved; that the refusal of said court to hear and consider the motion was an abuse of discretion which constituted error at law, and that unless said motion is heard petitioners will be irreparably injured, and will have no speedy or adequate equitable remedy. It is accordingly contended that the court erred in holding that it was without power to hear or consider defendants' motion to vacate the preliminary injunction. It is further contended that the superior court of Tehama county likewise had no jurisdiction or power to issue the second order to show cause, having exhausted its power and jurisdiction in this regard by its issuance of the first order, and that inasmuch as the preliminary injunction of November 16, 1926, rested wholly upon said second order to show cause, said preliminary injunction was, therefore, not within the power or jurisdiction of the court and should therefore be vacated and set aside.

Petitioners, in support of their application for the writ, claim that the superior court's ruling was based essentially on the decisions of our Supreme Court in the case of United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 P. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199, and subsequent cases to the effect that when a provisional injunction has been granted on notice, and opportunity to be heard, it may not be subsequently vacated or modified, pending trial on the merits, as the decision having been once made the power of the court is exhausted and the sole remedy is by appeal. See, also, Eisenberg v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 575, 226 P. 617, Ots v. Superior Court, 10 Cal. App. 168, 101 P. 431, and Humphrey v. Buena Vista Water Co., 2 Cal. App. 540, 84 P. 296. In no one of the cases, however, did the injunctive order of the lower court contain any clause by which the court reserved to itself, as here, the right to vacate or modify the order. It is, accordingly, contended by petitioner that the authorities cited and relied on by respondent is as far as the decisions can go without giving to section 527 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure a meaning that would make that section unconstitutional as divesting the court by an act of the Legislature of the equity jurisdiction conferred on it by the state Constitution. Respondents herein contend that the granting of the provisional injunction, with the reservation that "the order is made without prejudice to the right of the defendants, at any time hereafter to move to vacate the injunction whenever so advised," did not constitute a reservation in the court of a power to vacate, modify, or otherwise disturb the temporary injunction theretofore granted upon notice, and the provision inserted did not waive any effect of the statutory provisions denying such a right to the petitioners. They also contend that the temporary injunction having been granted upon notice, the court was without any authority whatsoever or jurisdiction to entertain a motion to vacate, modify, or disturb the same, and could not under our practice make any reservation in its order so as to grant the right to make such a motion. Counsel for respondents further urge the contention that, assuming for the purpose of argument that the clause did constitute an attempted reservation of a right to modify the injunction, such attempted reservation was void, as the court had no authority to modify the order granting the temporary injunction as evidenced by a minute order made by the court room clerk under date of November 6, 1926, after the court had orally announced that it would grant an injunction. In support of the first two contentions that, under the law in California, the court had no power to include the "without prejudice" clause in the order as the statute does not confer any right upon them to move to dissolve, for the reason that it was granted upon notice, and that the clause, therefore, has no operative effect even though it be assumed that there was an attempted reservation, we are cited to United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 P. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199, and the other cases hereinabove referred to as supporting this rule. As above indicated, in none of these cases was there any attempted reservation. An exhaustive discussion of the inherent powers of the English chancery courts to suspend or stay injunctions is contained in Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 242 P. 725. It is unnecessary, however, for us to advert to such powers. Mr. Justice Shenk, the author of that opinion, in discussing the effect of United Railroads v. Superior Court, distinctly points out that there is a strong intimation contained therein that, if the order of preliminary injunction there granted had contained a provision reserving to the court the rights to revoke or modify the preliminary injunction which it was then ordering, such power could have been reserved. While refusing to pass upon the exact question here presented, the learned author states that the intimation fortifies the conclusion that the only theory upon which that case was decided was that in view of our statutory provisions regulating and providing a full and complete system of law and procedure as to the granting, refusing, modifying, and dissolving temporary injunctions, without reserving to itself the right to revoke or modify such an injunction, the court's power in the premises had spent its force and been exhausted, but that this result does not follow when the right of modification is reserved. The same intimation is contained in American Trading Co. v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 770, 222 P. 142. Text-writers on this subject make the same distinction that was made in the cases above cited between injunctions that reserve the right to vacate the same and those that contain no such reservation. 14 Cal. Jur. 282.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that as an es-essential part of their equity jurisdiction courts of equity have the right and power to retain control over their own injunctions, so that they may modify or suspend them as equity should require, at least where the right is reserved in the order granting the same. Without such power, it is clearly evident that great injustice might result. The granting and keeping in effect an injunction might cause as great an injury to a defendant as its denial might cause to the plaintiff. Here it is claimed that the crops belonging to petitioners, and amounting in value to the sum of $10,000, are in great danger of becoming a total loss through moulding, if not disposed of promptly. Nor do we consider that there is any merit in the remaining contention of respondent.

[3] Counsel attempts to avoid the effect of the reservation clause of the court's order of November 16, 1926, by claiming that such order was not the order for the injunction, but that the order upon which it was based was the minute entry made by the clerk under date of November 6th, when the court orally announced from the bench that it would grant injunction. This minute entry, it is true, makes no reservation of a right to the defendant to move later for the dissolution of the injunction, but it is plainly manifest that the provisional injunction was not based upon the minute entry. The order as entered by the clerk reads as follows:

"Ordered, application for temporary injunction granted. Bond fixed in the sum of $10,000."

This entry by the clerk was but a memorandum of the court's intention to sign a written order for an injunction when the same was properly prepared and presented. The minute entry lacked the essential elements of an order since it left the terms and extent to be determined later by a written order. A written order was, in fact, prepared and presented, whereupon the court amended it by inserting the provision in question. The written order as signed was clear and definite as to its terms. The minute order was incomplete, and it would have been impossible to have procured a writ of injunction pendente lite thereon in the terms prayed for or by the order to show cause. Then, again, there was no attempted service of the minute order, and none was made until after the written order was prepared and signed. When so prepared and signed, the order enjoined the defendants, naming them, from selling the prunes, and then followed the "without prejudice clause," after which it read "Let an injunction issue." It is clearly apparent that the written order was the order upon which the injunction was based, and was so considered by all the parties.

[4-6] It is true that in some instances orders may rest upon the clerk's minutes, but it is also true that others require some formulation by the judge. This is particularly so in the case of injunctions. An injunction should contain sufficient information on its face to apprise the party upon whom it is served of what he is restrained from doing. In ordinary actions at law, it is the rule that the signature of the judge is not necessary to the validity of the judgment, but it has been the almost invariable rule in this state for decrees in equity to be so signed. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, supra. There are many judgments whose entry involves nothing more than clerical or ministerial duties, such as a judgment for the recovery of specific real or personal property, or a fixed amount of damages, or one which is rendered generally that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover from the defendant. In such cases, the mere order for judgment is all that is needed for the clerk, but in many other actions, and especially those of an equitable nature, the form of the judgment and the character of relief that is to be granted are as much a subject for the exercise of judicial power as is the determination of the party in whose favor judgment is to be rendered. Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 360, 33 P. 211. The distinction between oral orders that are full and sufficient in themselves and those that have to be followed up by fuller written orders to dispose completely of the matter is discussed in Barbee v. Young (Cal. App.) 249 P. 15, and Brown v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 732, 234 P. 409.

Upon this subject we are of the opinion that the written order is the order upon which the injunction was based. That order containing a reservation of modification, the lower court has full power and it is its duty to entertain the motion in question. It is therefore ordered that the alternative writ heretofore issued be made peremptory, requiring respondent to hear and determine defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

SENEY v. PICKWICK STAGES NORTHERN DIVISION, Inc., et al. (Civ. 4664).★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 7, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 6, 1927.

1. Carriers ⇨316(1)—Res ipsa loquitur doctrine is applicable, where vehicle operated by common carrier overturns, unless allegations of negligence are specific only, and proof is insufficient.

Overturning of vehicle operated by common carrier raises inference of negligence under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, even though there be specific as well as general allegations of negligence in complaint, but, where such allegations are specific only, and proof is insufficient, doctrine does not apply.

2. Carriers ⇨316(1)—In death action, allegation of defendant's careless and negligent operation of automobile stage and testimony as to how overturning occurred held not to make res ipsa loquitur doctrine inapplicable.

In death action against automobile stage company, plaintiff's allegations that defendant operated stage in such careless, reckless, wanton, and negligent manner that it was overturned, followed by some testimony as to how overturning occurred, held not to deprive plaintiff of benefit of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where precise cause of overturning was not shown.

3. Carriers ⇨316(1)—Res ipsa loquitur doctrine does not shift burden of proof from plaintiff in death action against carrier.

Burden of proof, which is on plaintiff in death action against automobile stage company, is not shifted by doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, invoked by overturning of stage, since such doctrine merely establishes prima facie case of negligence, which defendant is bound to meet.

4. Carriers ⇨318(4)—Evidence held to establish defendant's negligence in action for death caused by overturning of automobile stage, driver of which had not slept within 36 hours.

Evidence held sufficient to establish defendant's negligence in action for death of passenger, caused by overturning of automobile stage, either with or without application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where stage was driven on gravel road by one who had not slept for 36 hours.

5. Carriers ⇨295(1)—Overturning of automobile stage held not unavoidable accident or ordinary risk of road assumed by passenger.

Overturning of automobile stage, which was driven on gravel road by one who had not slept for 36 hours, held not unavoidable accident or ordinary risk of road assumed by passenger, where stage would not have left road except for driver's negligence.

6. Death ⇨99(1)—$15,000 held not excessive for death.

$15,000 held not excessive for death of passenger on automobile stage, which overturned due to driver's negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Hattie L. Seney against Pickwick Stages Northern Division, Inc., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Warren E. Libby and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edwin S. Earhart and Seth B. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Defendant Pickwick Stages Northern Division, Inc., appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, as sole heir of Leslie W. Seney, in the sum of $15,000 for the death of said Leslie W. Seney, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant in operating one of its auto stages upon which the deceased was a passenger, in such a manner that the stage was overturned and resulted in said death. The case was tried by the court without a jury.

The complaint alleges that the defendant is a common carrier of passengers for hire, and operates auto stages over and along the public roads and highways in the state of California; that on June 24, 1922, plaintiff and her husband were passengers on one of said stages running from Portland, Or., to San Francisco, Cal.; that defendant "operated the auto stage on which said Leslie W. Seney was a passenger in such a careless, reckless, wanton, and negligent manner that the said auto stage was overturned, and said Leslie W. Seney was instantly killed."

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply in this case, for the reason that the foregoing is a specific allegation of what constituted the negligence of the defendant. In support of its contention, appellant quotes the following testimony from the record. The plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Earhart: What was the first thing you knew of the happening of that accident, if any happened? A. Well, as we would say, as we were coming up grade on the right-hand side we skidded against the bank, and the car jumped and skidded clear across the road, and turned upside down. That is as far as I can remember."

The witness Bohme, being the only other witness for plaintiff, testified as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Earhart: Now Mr. Bohme, at the time of the accident, at the time and place mentioned, what was your first knowledge of anything the matter with the car or its operation? A. Why, the car turned to the right to let a vehicle pass, and there was a scraping against the rocks, and then something—I don't know—it turned across the road for some reason or other, and the next thing that we knew was that it turned over. It hit some rocks or some obstacle in the road. The car started bouncing, and it seemingly got unmanageable, and turned over."

Appellant urges that the foregoing testimony could have been adduced for no other purpose than proving an allegation of negligence concerning which the plaintiff's counsel considered the burden was upon him to prove. Appellant further urges that no negligence is shown by the testimony above quoted, and that, since there was no attempt to rely upon any presumption of negligence, the motion for nonsuit should have been granted. The general rule is well settled that the overturning of a vehicle operated by a common carrier raises an inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. 4 Cal. Jur. § 119, p. 980; Dowd v. Atlas T. & A. Service Co., 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870; Lawrence v. Pickwick Stages, 68 Cal. App. 494, 229 P. 885; Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417, 11 P. 750, 59 Am. Rep. 428; Boyce v. California Stage Co., 25 Cal. 468. This doctrine still applies, even though there be specific, as well as general, allegations of negligence in the complaint. Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 180, 111 P. 519, 527. The allegation and proof of specific acts of negligence would not deprive plaintiff of the benefit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur so far as those specific acts of negligence were concerned. Atkinson v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 71 Cal. App. 82, 89, 90, 234 P. 863. Where the allegations of negligence are specific only, but not general, and the proof is insufficient, then the doctrine does not apply. Marovich v. Central Cal. T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595; McKeon v. Lissner, 193 Cal. 309, 223 P. 965. In Zerbe v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 56 Cal. App. 583, 205 P. 887, where the allegations in the complaint were very similar to those in the complaint in the instant case, it was held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied. We confess that we find some difficulty in following appellant's argument that the complaint contains a specific allegation of negligence when it states that "defendant operated the auto stage * * * in such a careless, reckless, wanton, and negligent manner that the said auto stage was overturned." True, the allegation is not wholly general; it is equivalent to a statement that the defendant negligently overturned the auto stage. We have already seen that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in all such cases. The pleading does not state how or in what manner the stage was overturned. There is no dispute in the evidence as to the fact of overturning; but there is a conflict as to what happened at the time of the accident. The mere fact that plaintiff went further than required in proving her prima facie case in offering some testimony as to the manner in which the overturning occurred does not deprive her of the benefit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Such proof was a part of the res gestæ. There is nothing in the record which should take from plaintiff her right to have the court infer negligence from the happening of the accident under the circumstances in evidence. We have examined the cases cited by defendant holding that, where the proof discloses the cause of the accident, inferences are to be excluded. In Stangy v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 220 Mass. 414, 107 N. E. 933, a case cited by defendant, the court said:

"The case at bar is not an instance of an unsuccessful attempt to prove the precise cause, which would not bar the plaintiff from relying upon appropriate presumptions, but it is a case where inferences are excluded because the cause is disclosed to be a definite fact."

In the present case the evidence offered by plaintiff does not disclose the cause of the overturning as a definite fact. Plaintiff testified that the car skidded against the bank and skidded clear across the road and turned upside down. The witness Bohme testified that the car scraped against the rocks, and then turned across the road and turned over; that it hit some rocks or some obstacle in the road, and started bouncing and turned over. The witness further stated that he did not see any obstruction in the road. Under such testimony the precise cause of the overturning of the stage remains unknown, and the plaintiff is entitled to the inferences arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Accordingly, we hold that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to this case, and that the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

[3,4] Appellant next urges that, even if the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did apply, then the plaintiff did not prove negligence on the part of defendant by a preponderance of the evidence. The rule is well recognized that the burden of proof at all times remains upon the plaintiff. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not shift this burden, but merely establishes a prima facie case of negligence which the defendant is bound to meet. All that is required of defendant is to produce evidence sufficient to offset the effect of the plaintiff's showing, and it is not required to offset it by a preponderance of the evidence. Scarborough v. Urgo, 191 Cal. 347, 216 P. 534. We cannot agree with appellant's contention that the plaintiff failed to establish her cause by a preponderance of the evidence. The evidence shows that the deceased was a passenger on one of defendant's stages running from Portland, Or., to San Francisco; that the driver of the stage worked during all of the night preceding the accident trying to repair a bearing in one of the cylinders of the automobile, and at the time of the accident had been without sleep for over 36 hours; that there was a good firm road at the scene of the accident, which had been recently covered with buckshot gravel; and that the stage had been running over such graveled road for a mile and a half before the accident; that, while ascending a 3 per cent. grade the stage left the road, overturned, and plaintiff's husband was killed as a result of the accident. Plaintiff's evidence shows that the stage skidded against the bank while passing another car, skidded across the road, and turned upside down. The speed of the car was between 12 and 15 miles per hour. The stage driver testified for the defendant that he was driving around a right-hand curve where he could not see the road more than 15 feet ahead, at a speed of 12 to 15 miles per hour, when he saw a two-by-four stick in the road about 12 feet ahead, projecting $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 feet into the road, which was 20 feet in width; that he drove around the stick with the front wheels of the car, but, on account of the curve in the road the hind wheels struck the two-by-four, and skidded off the road, and that the car overturned about 75 or 80 feet distant from the point where the stick lay in the road. The driver further testified that by the application of the brakes he could have stopped the car within 20 feet at the time he saw the stick. On rebuttal the witness Bohme testified that the view of the road was unobstructed for a distance of 60 feet before the point was reached where the driver testified he saw the stick in the road. The witness Hassler testified on rebuttal that the car could have been stopped within 6 or 7 feet. Taking the driver's own testimony, if the stick was 12 feet ahead of him at the time the driver first saw it, then the rear wheels must have been nearly 20 feet distant from the stick at that time, and the driver could have brought his car nearly to a standstill before the rear wheels hit the stick. If this had been done, the car could not have run a distance of 75 or 80 feet upgrade beyond the stick before overturning. It is evident that the driver made no effort to apply the brakes when he first saw the obstruction, but that he attempted to drive around it without reducing his speed; that he succeeded in passing the stick with the front wheels; but that the rear wheels failed to pass. It is a significant fact that the marks on the roadway caused by the application of the brakes were after the driver had turned to avoid the obstacle. At this time it may be remarked that the trial court may have disbelieved the testimony of the driver that there was an obstruction in the road, as it had a perfect right to do, if not satisfied with the proof. No other witness testified to seeing such obstruction.

[5, 6] Appellant asserts that this was an unavoidable accident beyond the power of human care and foresight to prevent, and resulted from a cause over which the defendant had no control. We have already indicated that defendant has not shown that the accident was unavoidable. Neither did the accident result from an ordinary risk of the road assumed by the plaintiff. This was not a case where the driver suddenly found himself driving over a skiddy surface, and thereby lost control of his car. No one knew the condition of the road better than the driver himself, as he had been driving over the gravelled surface for some time. If the road was dangerous, he should have driven his car with greater care so as to prevent skidding. Under the facts involved in this case the stage would not have left the road and overturned, except for the negligence of the defendant, and such negligence is not a risk assumed by the plaintiff.

Finally, the judgment, in our opinion, is not excessive.

We believe the evidence in this case absolutely establishes the negligence of the defendants, with or without the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. PAYNE, County Auditor et al. (Civ. 5500.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 6, 1927.

1. Statutes $\S$ 179—Statute whose language is clear must be substantially complied with, though statute itself directs liberal construction.

Where legislative language is clear and unambiguous, it must be substantially complied with, notwithstanding provision of statute that it should be liberally construed to effect purposes stated.

2. Waters and water courses $\S$ 183 $\frac{1}{2}$ —Publication of notice for 2 consecutive weeks held jurisdictional in proceedings for formation of waterworks district (County Waterworks District Act, $\S$ 3).

Provision of County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9123), $\S$ 3, requiring publication of notice of hearing once a week for 2 consecutive weeks for formation of waterworks district, held necessary jurisdictional step in proceedings.

3. Waters and water courses $\S$ 183 $\frac{1}{2}$ —Requirement for publication of notice of forming waterworks district held to require weekly publication over 14-day period (County Waterworks District Act, $\S$ 3).

County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9123), $\S$ 3, requiring publication of notice of hearing for formation of waterworks district at least once a week for 2 consecutive weeks, held to require publication over period of 14 days in order to give jurisdiction, as requirement relates not to manner, but to period of time for publication.

4. Waters and water courses ☞183½—10-day period before hearing petition for waterworks district did not commence to run until publication of notice was complete (County Waterworks District Act, § 3; Code Civ. Proc. § 416).

Provision of County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9123), § 3, that notice must be published 10 days before date set for hearing on petition for forming waterworks district, gave 10-day period, which did not commence to run until jurisdiction was acquired by completion of publication under Code Civ. Proc. § 416.

5. Waters and water courses ☞183½—Supervisors held without jurisdiction to create waterworks district at hearing held 20 days after date of first publication of notice (County Waterworks District Act, § 3).

Board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to create waterworks district at hearing fixed only 20 days after time of first publication of notice under County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9123), § 3, requiring publication at least once a week for 2 consecutive weeks, and further required notice must be published at least 10 days before date set for hearing.

6. Waters and water courses ☞183½—Supervisors had no jurisdiction to create waterworks district on petition failing to recite separately estimated incidental expenses of improvement (County Waterworks District Act).

Board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to form waterworks district on basis of petition which failed to state estimated incidental expenses, though specified figure was given as gross amount of cost, under County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9123), requiring that petition contain "estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement and of the incidental expenses in connection therewith"; gross estimate being insufficient.

Application by the County of Los Angeles for mandamus to be directed to H. A. Payne, County Auditor, to which the respondent and Charles T. Alleman demurred. Writ denied.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, Pierce Works, Deputy County Counsel, and Robert C. Wygant, Deputy County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondent Payne.

Leonard S. Barnes, of Los Angeles, for respondent Alleman.

THOMPSON, J. The petitioner seeks a writ of mandate directing the county auditor of Los Angeles county, H. A. Payne, to countersign the bonds of the Los Angeles county waterworks District No. 9. The respondent Payne and the respondent Alleman, a taxpayer of the district, have appeared by demurrer, so that for the purposes hereof we may refer to the petition for the facts. It appears therefrom that on January 11, 1926, a petition for the formation of the waterworks district, signed by the requisite number of freeholders, was presented to the board of supervisors, together with the map and bond as required; that the board fixed February 8, 1926, as the time for the hearing of the petition and protests, if any; that notice thereof was given by the clerk by posting in three public places, and also by publication in the Compton News-Tribune on January 19, 1926, and January 26, 1926. The County Waterworks District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, p. 3784) requires that:

"The said clerk shall also cause a notice, * * * to be published at least once a week for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in the county in which the proposed district is located, and designated by said board for that purpose. Said notice must be posted and published, as above provided, at least ten days before the date set for the hearing of said petition." Section 3.

The respondents assert that the publication recited was insufficient, and was not in compliance with the provisions quoted. It also appears from the pleadings here that, in the petition presented to the board, the estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement and of the incidental expenses in connection therewith was set forth as follows:

"The estimated cost of the improvement together with the incidental expenses in connection therewith is seventy thousand dollars ($70,000.00)."

The respondents take the position that this is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the act that the petition shall contain "an estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement and of the incidental expenses in connection therewith."

[1-5] We proceed to the inquiry with the mandate of the statute in mind that it shall be liberally construed to effect the purposes thereof. As was said by us in a recent decision, "We cannot, however, apply a rule of construction where there exists no room for construction." In re Flesher (Cal. App.) 252 P. 1057. Where the legislative language is clear and unambiguous, there must be a substantial compliance therewith. We find no room for doubt or uncertainty in the requirement that the notice shall be "published at least once a week for two consecutive weeks," and that "said notice must be * * * published as above provided, at least ten days before the date set for the hearing of said petition." (Italics ours.) The notice herein provided for is unquestionably the method provided by law for acquiring jurisdiction, and is a necessary jurisdictional step in the proceedings. Williams v. Board of Supervisors, 58 Cal. 237; Bliss v. Hamilton, 171 Cal. 123, 152 P. 303. Petitioner's claim that the requirement for publication for 2 consecutive weeks relates to the manner of the publication, and not to the period of time, cannot be sustained. Its argument finds some apparent support, it is true, from the direction in the act to the board to set the petition for hearing on a day not less than 21, nor more than 30, days from its filing. It has been held, however, that this is directory and not mandatory. Bliss v. Hamilton, supra. Aside from this, however, is the equal certainty of the jurisdictional requirement that notice be published at least once a week for two consecutive weeks. We cannot by judicial construction shorten the period of 2 weeks, or 14 days, to 8 days. Nor can we say that jurisdiction is acquired by any publication short of the requirement. Jurisdiction is not acquired until the publication is complete, and, inasmuch as it could not be published for 2 consecutive weeks, unless it was published once every 7 days for the period of 2 weeks, it was not complete. Williams v. Board of Supervisors, supra; Secombe v. Roe, 22 Cal. App. 139, 133 P. 507; and Foster v. Vehmeyer, 133 Cal. 459, 65 P. 974. The 10-day period must be likened to the time to appear and plead or answer in response to the ordinary processes of court, which does not commence to run until jurisdiction is acquired, and in such instances jurisdiction is acquired when the publication is complete. Code Civ. Proc. § 416. Hence the requirement that the said notice shall be published at least 10 days before the date of the hearing means that, after the publication is complete, the residents shall have 10 days within which to prepare and file their protests to the formation of the district. The time being insufficient, therefore jurisdiction was not acquired.

[6] Another objection raised by respondents is that the petition did not give an estimate of the expenses incident to the acquisition and construction of a waterworks system. It will be observed that, in the facts heretofore recited, the incidental expenses were contained in the estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement, which estimate the petitioner asserts is a substantial compliance with the act. It was held in Biggart v. Lewis, 183 Cal. 660, 192 P. 437, that these incidental expenses are those which "naturally and necessarily appertain to and follow the estimate of the whole cost of the proposed improvements." And from this it is argued that no useful purpose is served by segregating what amounts to the total cost. However, we may easily conceive of situations where the incidental expenses might be out of all proportion to the actual, as distinguished from the inclusive, cost of the improvement—and such disproportion might be sufficient to cause, not only the inquiring taxpayer, but also the board of supervisors, to find unfavorably on the petition. It has frequently been held that, where there is a requirement that something other than a gross estimate be given, a gross figure is insufficient. Bickerdike v. City of Chicago, 203 Ill. 636, 68 N. E. 161; City of Peoria v. Ohl, 209 Ill. 52, 70 N. E. 632; City of Chicago v. Illinois Malleable Iron Co., 293 Ill. 109, 127 N. E. 349; City of Harvard v. Roach, 314 Ill. 424, 145 N. E. 618; City of Erie v. Brady, 150 Pa. 462, 24 A. 641; and Friedenwald v. Shipley, 74 Md. 220, 21 A. 790, 24 A. 156.

It is no answer to say that, since the notice of time set for hearing does not of necessity include an estimate of the incidental expenses other than by reference to the petition, the provision was not intended for the protection of the taxpayer. Had the Legislature intended that the gross cost should be sufficient, why did it not say so in the natural way, to wit, an estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement, including the incidental expenses in connection therewith? The very fact that the conjunction "and" is used indicates to our mind that both are required instead of one estimate covering both. It seems to us that the recital in the petition of an estimate of the incidental expenses was necessary to the acquisition by the board of jurisdiction.

Other irregularities are pointed to by the respondents, but they are all irregularities arising out of typographical errors or a failure to properly compare the proof of the published notice with the petition, and would not arise on a resubmission of the petition to the voters, and therefore there is no occasion for us to pass upon their sufficiency or insufficiency.

Writ denied.

MARTIN v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 3164.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 31, 1927.

Rehearing Denied April 27, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 26, 1927.

1. Electricity ⇨19(2)—Evidence of previous negligence in maintaining wires held inadmissible, under complaint alleging specific negligence admitted (Code Civ. Proc. § 1868).

Where complaint alleged and defendant admitted that plaintiff was injured solely because of defendant's negligence in allowing fallen wire to remain charged across sidewalk and defendant elected to go to jury solely on issue of damages, testimony as to defendant's previous negligence in maintaining line between tree branches, etc., was inadmissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1868.

2. Evidence ⇨99—Evidence not corresponding with allegations and confined to issue is irrelevant (Code Civ. Proc. § 1868).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1868, evidence not corresponding with allegations and confined to point at issue is irrelevant.

3. Negligence ⇨119(4)—Proof is limited to negligent act specifically alleged.

Plaintiff is not limited in first instance to alleging specific acts of negligence, but, if he specifically bases grounds of complaint on particular act, proof is limited to such act.

4. Negligence ⇨125—Negligence cannot be proved by similar instances, where notice is not involved.

Where notice is not involved, negligence or absence thereof cannot be proved by similar instances.

5. Damages ⇨158(2)—Testimony as to endocarditis, chorea, and possibility of cancer, not alleged in complaint detailing injuries sustained, held inadmissible (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Where complaint detailed injuries sustained because of defendant's negligence, without alleging general bodily injuries, testimony as to plaintiff suffering from endocarditis and chorea and possibility of cancer, which were not pleaded, was inadmissible, under Civ. Code, § 3283, in absence of allegation or testimony that they necessarily follow injuries alleged.

6. Damages ⇨24—Testimony as to what might possibly result from injury sustained is inadmissible under any pleadings (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Under Civ. Code, § 3283, testimony as to what might possibly occur as result of injury sustained is inadmissible under any state of pleadings.

7. Damages ⇨20—Only natural results of injuries can be considered in awarding damages.

Only natural results of injuries sustained can be considered in awarding damages.

8. Damages ⇨143—Natural and probable, but not necessary, results of injuries must be specifically pleaded.

Necessary results of injury sustained need not be pleaded, but merely natural and probable results must be specifically pleaded.

9. Damages ⇨142—Damages necessarily resulting from wrongful act can be recovered under general allegation of amount, but must be specially alleged where merely natural consequences in connection with special circumstances.

Damages which are necessary consequences of wrongful act can be recovered under general allegation of amount of damage inflicted, but if damages ensue because of particular circumstances, though natural consequences of wrongful act in connection with special circumstances, facts must be specially alleged.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1060(1)—Argument respecting prior negligence in maintaining power line held prejudicial error, in view of allegation and admission that allowing charged wire to remain on sidewalk solely caused injury.

Where complaint alleged and defendant admitted that plaintiff's injuries were wholly due to defendant's negligence in allowing fallen wire to remain charged across sidewalk, vigorous and able argument of plaintiff's counsel, detailing and emphasizing prior acts of negligence in construction and maintenance of power line, was prejudicial error as tending to obliterate distinction between punitive and compensatory damages; testimony as to such acts being irrelevant.

11. Appeal and error ⇨1066—Instructions as to previous acts of negligence held prejudicially erroneous, in view of admission that injury was caused solely by negligence alleged.

Where complaint alleged and defendant admitted that plaintiff's injuries were caused solely by defendant's negligence in allowing fallen wire to remain charged across sidewalk and elected to go to jury solely on issue of damages, instructions based on inadmissible testimony as to previous acts of negligence in construction and maintenance of power line were prejudicially erroneous as conveying impression that jury was to decide other issues than extent of damages.

12. Trial ⇨250—Jurors should be instructed only on questions to be decided, and instruction without bearing on issues or unsupported by evidence is erroneous.

Jurors should be instructed only on questions they are to decide, and it is error to give instruction without bearing on issues or unsupported by evidence, though correct as abstract statement of legal proposition.

13. Trial ⇨252(3)—Instructions as to previous negligence, evidence of which was inadmissible, held erroneous as tending to confuse jury.

Instructions as to previous acts of negligence, evidence of which was inadmissible because of defendant's admission that negligence alleged was sole cause of injury, held erroneous as tending to confuse jury as to issue for decision in rendering general verdict, if effect, as impressing on their minds conclusion that something besides compensatory damages should be considered, was cured by subsequent instructions correctly stating measure of damages.

14. Damages $\Leftrightarrow$ 132(13)—\$25,000 for severe electric shock, pain, and loss of thumb and two fingers of schoolboy held excessive by \$10,000.

Award of $25,000 for severe electric shock and pain suffered by schoolboy and disfigurement of his right hand for life by amputation of thumb and two fingers held excessive by $10,000, in view of problematical permanency of other alleged consequences and failure to plead endocarditis, chorea, and probability or possibility of cancer as result of such injuries.

15. Damages $\Leftrightarrow$ 127—Allowance must be made for dollar's diminished purchasing power, in fixing damages for injuries since 1915.

In fixing amount of damages for injuries sustained since 1915, due allowance must be made for diminished purchasing power of the dollar.

16. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 1140(2)—Appellate court may order that judgment stand affirmed on remittitur of excessive damages awarded because of evidence of negligence prior to that alleged and admitted (Code Civ. Proc. § 53).

Where amount of damages was only proper issue for jury and evidence of defendant's previous negligence was admitted notwithstanding admission that injury was caused solely by negligence alleged, appellate court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 53, may order that judgment stand affirmed on filing of remittitur of excessive damages awarded because of such evidence.

17. Costs $\Leftrightarrow$ 241—Where it is ordered that judgment for plaintiff stand affirmed on filing of remittitur below, parties will be ordered to pay their own costs on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1027).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1027, parties to case, in which it is ordered that judgment for plaintiff stand affirmed on filing below of remittitur of excessive damages awarded, will be ordered to pay their own costs on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by Henry Alan Martin, a minor, through his guardian ad litem, P. R. Merrill, against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed on condition of remittitur.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, and T. J. Straub, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment in the sum of $25,000 in an action for personal injuries, and the defendant appeals.

As grounds for reversal herein, the appellant sets forth 8 specific reasons, which, for convenience, we will reclassify, as a number of them appear to be divisions of subjects which may be considered as one. We will consider them in the following order:

(1) The alleged error of the trial court in admitting evidence regarding the construction and condition of the defendant's power line preceding the event of plaintiff's injury. (2) That the court erred in admitting testimony outside of the issues tendered by the pleadings. (3) That the court erred in its instructions to the jury. (4) That the verdict of the jury was and is excessive. All the other errors assigned may properly be considered in connection with the main subjects just enumerated.

The plaintiff was injured on the morning of December 24, 1922, at Cottonwood, in Shasta county, by coming in contact with a power line charged with electricity belonging to and maintained and operated by the defendant in serving a pumping plant near by with electrical energy. The wire of the power line with which the plaintiff came in contact had broken and fallen across the sidewalk area of a certain street in said town known as Chestnut street. This wire remained on the ground unguarded and charged with electricity for several hours, to wit, from some time early in the morning of said day until after the injury of the plaintiff, which occurred at about 10 o'clock on the morning of said 24th of December. Preceding the fall of the wire there had been a heavy snowfall. The circumstances preceding the injury of the plaintiff and the specific act of negligence upon which this action is founded can be best explained by here setting forth the allegations of the plaintiff's amended complaint involved in the questions to be considered, to wit:

"V. That on or about the 24th day of December, 1922, and for several months prior thereto, the said defendant carelessly and negligently had constructed, kept, maintained, and operated the said electric wire power line through the limbs and branches of a tree, situated on the sidewalk on said Chestnut street, near the southeast corner of the yard fence of the 'Ogburn residence,' in said town of Cottonwood; that said electric wire power line was so constructed, kept, maintained, and operated through the limbs and branches of said tree that the wires thereof came in contact with the limbs, branches, and leaves of said tree and caused the same to arc, burn, rub, and cut said limbs, branches, and leaves; that for approximately three weeks continuously prior to the said 24th day of December, 1922, some of the limbs and branches of said tree had broken and fallen over said wires, causing the same to droop, sag, and break and thus greatly endangering the life and limb of persons passing under said tree and said electric wire power line on said sidewalk; that as a result of said wires coming in contact with the limbs and branches of said tree and the limbs and branches thereof falling and bearing upon said wires, and said wires arcing, burning, rubbing, and cutting said limbs and branches, one of said wires broke and fell to the ground, and remained thereon at or near said sidewalk from about 6 o'clock a. m., until 12 o'clock m., on the said 24th day of December, 1922; that said wire remained connected on one end with the said electric wire power line and was, during all of said time, heavily charged with electricity, which said charged wire was so exposed and unguarded as to permit pedestrians to come in contact with it, all of which the said defendant well knew; that said broken wire lying on the ground near said sidewalk, as aforesaid, was at all of said times owned by and under the control of said defendant.

"VI. That on the said 24th day of December, 1922, and at about the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, while the said minor, Henry Alan Martin, was walking along the sidewalk on said Chestnut street, at or near the corner of the yard fence of said 'Ogburn residence,' while walking within the limits of said Chestnut street, and on and along the pathway generally traveled by pedestrians, he, the said minor, came in contact with said live wire so lying on the ground, as aforesaid, and thereupon and thereby the full charge of electricity then carried by said wire passed through the person of said minor, and said minor was thereby knocked down and very severely burned at various points on and about his body, his head, his hips, and arms; that his right arm, hand, and fingers were so badly burned that it became necessary to amputate the index and middle finger and thumb of his right hand, and the same were amputated; that the right hand and arm of said minor were so badly burned that the same are now shrinking and shriveling and are less than their normal size, and said minor has lost the strength and full use of said right hand and arm.

"VII. That by reason of said injury and said burns, said minor was made ill and was confined to his bed for several weeks, and during all said time suffered and still suffers great and excruciating pain, and by reason of said burns plaintiff has been maimed and disfigured and permanently deprived of the full use and strength of his right arm and hand, and plaintiff is informed and believes that his injuries are permanent, and that he will continue to suffer great and unusual pain and mental anguish for a long time to come.

"VIII. That said plaintiff, Henry Alan Martin, suffered and received said injuries hereinabove mentioned wholly by reason of the carelessness and negligence of said defendant in permitting said electric power wire to remain upon the ground at the time and in the manner aforesaid."

[1] Immediately upon the impanelment of the jury to try this case defendant in open court made and entered the following admission:

"The Pacific Gas & Electric Company desire to admit that on the morning of December 24, 1922, one of its wires fell, and that the defendant thereafter negligently permitted the wire to remain on the ground until the time alleged in the complaint, and that Henry Alan Martin, the plaintiff in this action, was injured as a result of such negligence.

"We have made this admission in the interest of shortening the trial of the case, believing that the circumstances justify it: and we will then go to the jury with the sole issue as to the nature and extent of the injuries, and the amount of just compensation to which the plaintiff is entitled."

Notwithstanding the allegations contained in paragraph VIII of the plaintiff's amended complaint and the admissions of the defendant, the trial court permitted the plaintiff to introduce testimony that for a considerable period of time, ranging over something like three years, the defendant had maintained its line in such a place and course that the wires thereof ran between the limbs of a certain eucalyptus tree; that the wires running between the branches of said tree rubbed against the same, causing the electricity with which the wires were charged to arc, thereby emitting flashes of light; that about the 9th day of December, 1922, there was a snowfall of about four inches in the vicinity of the town of Cottonwood; that the weight of the snow caused some of the limbs of the said eucalyptus tree to bend and break and drop over on the wires of the power line maintained through said trees by the defendant to such an extent that one of the wires broke and fell to the ground; that this broken wire was repaired by an employee of the defendant; that nothing, however, was done toward the removal of the limbs or branches of the tree, or to safeguard the wires running between said branches, and that this condition continued from the 9th to the 24th days of December, 1922. Some seven different witnesses were called by the plaintiff, who testified as to the condition of the power line, as it had been maintained for a long period of time preceding the 24th day of December, 1922. The several witnesses all repeating in detail the substance of which we have stated generally, relating to the previous erection and maintenance and condition of the power line, or lines belonging to the defendant. All of the testimony relating to the condition of the wires belonging to the defendant, the manner of its maintenance, etc., was objected to by the defendant on the ground that it did not tend to prove any of the issues involved in the action; that the specified act of negligence which led to the plaintiff's injury being particularly set forth in such manner as to exclude any general acts of negligence, and being admitted by the defendant, all other questions were irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The plaintiff, having alleged in paragraph VIII that the injury of the plaintiff was caused "wholly by reason of the carelessness and negligence of said defendant in permitting said electric power wire to remain upon the ground at the time and in the manner aforesaid," and the defendant having admitted such act of negligence, and that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the defendant having negligently allowed the power wire charged with electricity to remain in its fallen condition across the sidewalk in the town of Cottonwood, there was nothing for the jury to determine or pass upon save and except the amount of damages that should be awarded, and that testimony as to any previous condition of the wire, its having fallen at a previous time, or any negligence in its maintenance could only have one effect, to wit, arouse resentment or passion on the part of the jury.

The effect upon the jury of the admission of such testimony may be inferred by considering the following excerpt taken from the argument of counsel in urging upon the trial court the admissibility of such testimony:

"We claim that the defendant is guilty of negligence. Now, the facts which would impute knowledge of the conditions to the defendant would be necessary in order to prove negligence. Now, if the condition has existed here for a period of over three years, even if that condition had not been brought home to them, knowledge of that condition is to be imputed to them—to the defendant—and we desire to show that they knew all about it for over three years and never raised a hand to correct, and the question of knowledge is relevant in all those cases. In a case of this kind we have the right to show that this defendant knew of this condition and, having knowledge, they were negligent in not correcting it. We are not trying to show any previous damage done to any one, but are showing that this was a condition they knew of, and it would have been the part of prudence for them to have repaired it and they did not do it. The same question was involved in the case of Smith v. San Joaquin Light & Power Co., 59 Cal. App. 647, 211 P. 843—they knew it, but didn't repair it. It seems to me that over the entire period it was a series of negligence, and that we have right to show it, whether it was a day, week, a month or a year, or three years, as was the fact in this case."

It is apparent that counsel was placing before the jury a series of negligent acts, irrespective of paragraph VIII, which specifically confined plaintiff's injury wholly to one cause, and that cause being admitted, former acts of the defendant, or prior condition of the wires belonging to defendant, were entirely outside of the issues tendered by the complaint. Knowledge of the fact of there being a fallen wire could, of course, be imputed to the defendant by proving the length of time that it remained upon the ground, but, in this case, it was first proved and not denied by the defendant that some hours before the injury to the plaintiff occurred the employees of the defendant at the station where the power could be turned off of the wire had been informed that the charged wire was lying across a sidewalk in the town of Cottonwood, and that such employees had neglected to turn off the power. This was established, and not denied. The allegations of the complaint and the admissions of the defendant were to the effect that the plaintiff was injured by the fallen wire, and that his injuries were wholly due to the negligence of the defendant in allowing the wire to remain charged across the sidewalk, and, therefore, whatever had occurred prior to the falling of the wire and whatever acts of negligence the defendant may have been guilty of prior to the negligence, allowing the wire to remain across the sidewalk, and thereby causing the plaintiff's injuries, were not involved in any issue to be tendered to the jury. The defendant, prior to the filing of defendant's answer to the plaintiff's complaint, moved to strike out as surplusage all that portion of the amended complaint relating to previous acts of negligence and the manner of its maintenance of its wires other than that portion of the complaint specifically alleged to be wholly the cause of plaintiff's injuries. This motion was denied and is also set forth as one of the grounds of error, which is properly considered by what is hereafter said and governed by the authorities cited.

Section 1868 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"Evidence must correspond with the substance of the material allegations, and be relevant to the question in dispute. Collateral questions must therefore be avoided. It is, however, within the discretion of the court to permit inquiry into a collateral fact, when such fact is directly connected with the question in dispute, and is essential to its proper determination, or when it affects the credibility of a witness."

From what has been said it will be perceived there was no collateral fact pertinent to a decision of the issue before the court under which inquiry as to previous occurrences might properly be had, nor was anything that had occurred in the past connected with the question in dispute, to wit, the amount of damages that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Nor was there anything that called for the admission of such testimony affecting the credibility of witnesses. The injuries suffered by the plaintiff could neither be augmented nor lessened by the testimony concerning previous acts of negligence on the part of the defendant. The cause of the injuries suffered by the plaintiff, having been limited and circumscribed to a specific act, eliminated all matters of previous general negligence, even though the plaintiff, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to make proof of the specified act, rather than rely upon the defendant's admission.

[2] As stated in the Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 143, on page 147, 90 P. 454, 456:

"One of the elemental rules of the law of evidence is that the evidence must correspond with the allegations and be confined to the point at issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 1868. If not, it is said to be irrelevant. 16 Cyc. pp. 847, 1111; 1 Taylor on Evidence, § 217."

In the case of Frascona v. L. A. Ry. Corp., 48 Cal. App. 135, 191 P. 968, the court held:

"In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant, a common carrier of passengers, while plaintiff was a passenger on one of its street railway cars, where the complaint alleges one distinct and specific act of negligence, namely, starting the car before plaintiff had alighted, a general finding that defendant operated its car in a careless and negligent manner, thereby injuring plaintiff, is not responsive to the issue as tendered by the complaint; and the failure of the court to find on that issue is prejudicial error requiring a reversal of a judgment in favor of plaintiff."

Thus, in the case at bar, the issue upon which the plaintiff could prevail was the issue tendered in paragraph VIII of the amended complaint and was the only issue upon which a judgment could be based and therefore the only one upon which testimony would be pertinent.

[3] The rule governing the admission of testimony in negligence cases is thus stated in 19 Cal. Jur. p. 687, § 110:

"Under a general allegation of negligence, plaintiff may show the particular act which caused the injury complained of and is entitled to instructions upon every one of the probative elements pertinent to the rights and liabilities of the parties. Likewise, where a general allegation of negligence is followed by an enumeration of specific acts, the pleader is not limited to proof of the specific acts alleged unless his pleading clearly indicates an intention to so limit his proof; and this is true even though the specific acts pleaded precede the general allegation. However, if a pleading is specific, setting forth in detail specific acts in connection with which negligence is claimed, proof is limited to acts so pleaded."

To the same effect is 20 R. C. L. p. 177, § 146. Thus, the plaintiff is not limited in the first instance to alleging specific acts of negligence, but, as stated in Cal. Jur., if, in pleading his cause of action, the plaintiff specifically bases his grounds of complaint upon a particular act, proof is limited to the act so pleaded, to which the plaintiff's injuries are attributed. In St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Simmons (Okla. Sup.) 250 P. 510, the court thus states the rule on the admission of the testimony we are considering:

"We think the rule recognized by the authorities generally, and by this court, is that, when a general allegation of negligence is followed by an enumeration and averment of specific acts of negligence, plaintiff is confined to the acts of negligence specifically alleged. 21 R. C. L. 501; McManamee v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 135 Mo. 440, 37 S. W. 119; Haley v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 197 Mo. 15, 93 S. W. 1120, 114 Am. St. Rep. 743; C. & R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Wheeler, 70 Kan. 755, 79 P. 673."

In Shipley v. Nelson, 121 Wash. 39, 207 P. 1046, the Supreme Court of Washington holds:

"Where there is a general allegation of negligence in a complaint which is followed by a specification of the acts of negligence complained of, or where negligence is specifically set out without any general allegation, the evidence must be confined to the specific issue so presented in the pleadings."

The same court, in Ennis v. Banks, 88 Wash. 237, 152 P. 1037, stated:

"Plaintiff having charged the appellant with a specific act of negligence cannot, under that charge, introduce evidence of other acts and attempt to show negligence therein, although she is not obligated to plead her evidence or set out in detail specific acts."

These cases point out the reasons for the rule, it being held that, the plaintiff having elected to base the cause of action upon specified acts, the defendant cannot be expected or required to meet other acts of alleged negligence not involved in the determination of the issue before the court. In Moore & McFerren v. Fletcher, 145 Tenn. 97, 236 S. W. 924, the Supreme Court of Tennessee thus states the rule:

"Where a pleader undertakes specifically to set forth the acts of negligence which constitute the proximate cause of the injury, he cannot rely on other acts of negligence."

See, also, Davis v. Texas Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 262 S. W. 129, 22 C. J., p. 744.

[4] Notice not being involved, negligence or the absence of it cannot be proved by similar instances. Steinberger v. Cal. Electric Co., 176 Cal. 386, 168 P. 570. To the same effect is Starr v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 187 Cal. 270, where, on page 281, 201 P. 599, 603, it is said:

"Evidence as to the previous conduct and habit of the conductor as to sitting down and talking to passengers was improperly received, not only because of the fact that the matter was not in issue, but also because of the fact that his habit was not competent (Langford v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 729, 732, 733 [164 P. 398]; Steinberger v. California Elec., etc., Co., 176 Cal. 386 [168 P. 570]) to establish the condition at the time of the accident. We need not here consider the effect of the exception to this general rule considered in Wallis v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 184 Cal. 662 (15 A. L. R. 117, 195 P. 408), where circumstantial evidence only is relied upon, and there are no eyewitnesses."

See, also, Manwaring v. Geisler, 191 Ky. 532, 230 S. W. 918, 18 A. L. R. 192.

The negligence not in issue, and not involved in the specific act alleged to be the cause of the plaintiff's injuries, should not have been presented to the jury, either by way of testimony or argument. In Taylor v. Spokane P. & S. Ry. Co., 72 Wash. 378, 130 P. 506, where the negligence alleged was admitted by the defendant, the Supreme Court of Washington held it was error to permit plaintiff's counsel to discuss the question of negligence in presenting the cause to the jury. The same case was previously before the court and reported in 67 Wash. 96, 120 P. 889. In the first opinion it was held error to permit argument upon admitted facts, but not sufficiently prejudicial to warrant reversal. Upon rehearing a reversal was ordered.

[5-8] In paragraph VI of plaintiff's complaint a detailed statement is made of all and singular the injuries suffered and sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the negligence of the defendant, without any allegations of general bodily injuries, such as are frequently set forth in actions for negligence, where the plaintiff does not by his pleadings confine himself to any particular injurious results. This difference in pleading is illustrated by the case of Samuels v. Cal. Street Cable R. Co., 124 Cal. 294, 56 P. 1115, where the complaint alleged the injuries suffered and the bodily condition resulting therefrom in such manner as to admit the widest possible range of testimony and put the defendant upon notice and inquiry as to all the injuries that could be traced to the act of negligence alleged. Without any such pleading in this case, the court, over the objection of the defendant, permitted the plaintiff to introduce testimony as to the plaintiff suffering from endocarditis (affection of the heart), chorea (St. Vitus dance), and possibility of cancer. Under no state of the pleadings could testimony as to what might possibly occur be held admissible. Section 3283, Civil Code, reads:

"Damages may be awarded, in a judicial proceeding, for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future."

The rule is well settled that only the natural results can be considered in awarding damages. The necessary results do not have to be pleaded, but the evils which are not necessary results, but are the natural and probable results of an injury, must be specifically pleaded. As set forth in 8 Cal. Jur. p. 889:

"The defendant cannot be presumed to be aware of the damage naturally, though not necessarily, resulting from his act, and, therefore, in order to prevent a surprise on him, this sort of damage must be specially set forth in the complaint, or the plaintiff will not be permitted to give evidence of it" (citing a number of cases).

Likewise, in 8 R. C. L. p. 611, it is said:

"General damages, that is, such as necessarily result from the injury complained of, need not be specially pleaded."

And on page 612 of the same volume the rule is further set forth:

"That special damages, that is, damages which do not necessarily result from the injury complained of, must be specially pleaded, except where they are conclusively presumed from the facts stated,"

—the reason for the rule being set forth. It is further said in the same volume, pages 620, 621, that the plaintiff may allege his injuries in such a manner as not to require specific allegations:

But, "if the complaint specifies the injuries received, then proof cannot be given of any other injuries, unless they necessarily and immediately flow from those named."

Here the complaint specifies all the injuries received, and there is nothing in the record either by way of allegation or testimony showing that endocarditis, chorea, or cancer, either one or all three, necessarily follow in the wake of the injuries alleged.

In 17 C. J. p. 107, the text, supported by a long list of authorities, is as follows upon this subject:

"In actions for personal injuries, where injury is alleged, a recovery may be had for the natural and probable consequences thereof, although such consequences are not set up in detail, while all effects not the natural and necessary result of the injury complained of constitute special damages, and must be specially averred."

[9] As stated in Gomez v. Reed, 178 Cal. 759, quoting from page 763, 174 P. 658, 660:

"Damages which are the necessary consequence of the wrongful act can be recovered under the general allegation of the amount of damage inflicted. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 579 (13 Am. St. Rep. 175, 5 L. R. A. 498, 22 P. 266). * * *. And if damages ensue because of some particular circumstances existing at the time, though the natural consequences of the wrongful act in connection with the special circumstances, the facts must be specially alleged."

In Sloane v. Southern Cal. Railway Co., 111 Cal. 668, 44 P. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193, where the plaintiff sought to recover for special injuries not the necessary consequence of the defendant's acts, it was held that it was necessary to allege the same. In Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. App. 684, 121 P. 690, in dealing with the subject of special damages, the court holds:

"General damages are those which necessarily result from the act complained of, and may be shown in evidence under a general allegation of damages. Special damages are those that are the natural, but not the necessary, result of the act complained of, and not being implied by law, they must be particularly pleaded and proved."

The same rule was followed in the case of Ryan v. Oakland Gas, etc., Co., 21 Cal. App. 14, 130 P. 693, where the distinction is made between mental suffering and mental impairment, holding that in order to admit proof of mental impairment there must have been such an allegation in the complaint. Likewise, in McCready v. Bullis, 59 Cal. App. 286, 210 P. 638, it is said:

"When the damages are special—that is, such as do not necessarily arise, or are not implied by law, from the act complained of—the facts out of which the damages arise must be averred in the complaint."

See, also, Yoakam v. Hogan, 198 Cal. 16, 243 P. 21; 5 Enc. of Pleading & Practice, p. 719. In Hall v. Manufacturers' C. & C. Co., 260 Mo. 351, 168 S. W. 927, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 375, the rule relating to pleading and evidence relative to general and special damages is clearly set out in the following excerpt:

"General damages are those which necessarily and by implication of law result from the act or default complained of. * * * Special damages as contradistinguished from general damages have been defined as those which are the natural but not the necessary result of the act complained of." 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d. Ed.) 542, 543; Brown v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 99 Mo. 310, 12 S. W. 655; Nicholson v. Rogers, 129 Mo. 136, 31 S. W. 260.

Special damages, which are the natural but not necessary result of the injury complained of, must be specially alleged. Such injuries do not necessarily result from the defendant's wrongful act, but flow from it as a natural and proximate consequence; hence the defendant may have notice thereof and be prepared to meet the same upon the trial. 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 719, and numerous cases therein cited; Brown v. Railroad, supra; Nicholson v. Rogers, supra; Bliss on Code Pleading (3d Ed.) par. 297a, 297b; 13 Cyc. 176.

It would serve no useful purpose to review the cases cited by counsel for the respondent holding that distinct acts of negligence may be set forth in a complaint and, also, holding that where knowledge is to be imputed from a condition long existing, then and in that case, and under proper pleadings, evidence of the previous condition of the dangerous instrumentality may be offered in evidence. Thus, in the case of Rocca v. Tuolumne County Elec. Power & Light Co. (Cal. App.) 245 P. 468, proof of the dangerous condition preceding the falling of the wire was admitted for the purpose of imputing knowledge to the defendant and, also, proving the act of negligence on the part of the defendant in erecting its wire underneath an overhanging limb of a tree, which constituted a perilous circumstance of which the defendant was bound to take notice. Also, where the cause of death is questioned, as was true in the case of Robinson v. Western States Gas & Electric Co., 184 Cal. 401, 194 P. 39, and as shown in 10 Cal. Jur. pp. 827, 828, such testimony is admitted to bring home knowledge to a defendant. The cases of Marovich v. Central Cal. T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595, Connor v. A. & S. F. Railway Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 26 A. L. R. 1462, and Atkinson v. United Railroads of S. F., 71 Cal. App. 82, 234 P. 863, have to do mainly with the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and not questions of pleading confining the negligence to a specific act from which the injury is alleged to have been suffered.

It may be here stated that a review of the cases cited by counsel for respondent discloses that none of them limit the cause of the injury complained of to a particular proximate cause or single act of negligence. Under such circumstances, the rule applicable to the admission of testimony and the relevancy of the testimony is entirely different. Where the dangerous character of the instrument is disputed, and where knowledge of the dangerous condition of the instrument is to be imputed, and the pleadings are so framed as to involve such issues, and no particular act of negligence is specified as the proximate cause of the injury, and there is no admission of negligence on the part of the defendant, then, under such circumstances, the law supports the contention of the respondent, but such is not the case at bar.

[10] We need not follow the somewhat extended argument of appellant in support of its allegation that counsel for respondent was guilty of misconduct to the extent of preventing a fair trial further than to state that the objectionable conduct related to statements during the taking of testimony and in arguments to the jury, detailing and emphasizing the prior alleged acts of negligence of the defendant in the construction and maintenance of its power line, which acts, as we have shown, are irrelevant to the issues which the jury could only properly be called upon to decide, and therefore the cases which we have cited on the admission of testimony are sufficient to show whatever element of prejudice there was in such testimony conveyed to the jury by the argument of counsel. Had the testimony been admissible, the argument of counsel, we think, would have been entirely unobjectionable, but it is easily perceived that a rather vigorous argument of counsel to a jury of ordinary human beings, presenting a picture of alleged previous acts of negligence covering a long period of time, tended strongly to obliterate the line of demarcation between punitive and compensatory damages. Had the premises for the argument been such as warranted counsel's remarks, there would be nothing objectionable therein, and for this reason we do not think it necessary to incorporate in this opinion the argument of counsel set out in the record, and confine ourselves to the further statement that it was a rather able argument and may be said to be reasonably calculated to induce in the minds of the jurors a conclusion that there should be something added to the award of damages in order to teach the defendant a lesson.

[11-13] At the conclusion of the taking of testimony, the court, in line with its previous rulings, instructed the jury relative to the previous acts of the defendant, construction and maintenance of its power lines, not involved as the alleged cause of the injury to the plaintiff. These instructions abstractly state the law correctly, but are not embraced within the issues tendered for decision. The instructions, in substance, state that, where one places or maintains a wire charged with a highly dangerous electrical current over a public highway, the law requires that he must see the highest and utmost degree of care in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such wire; that he must use the best materials, adopt the most approved methods of construction to prevent injury, use due care and circumspection to prevent the wires from hanging down and falling to the ground; that the duty is not only to make such wires safe but to keep them safe by vigilance, foresight, and inspection; that a company using wires charged with electricity is bound to know the extent of the danger resulting from them, while the public is not, and is bound to use the highest degree of care practicable to avoid injury; that the operator of an electrical plant is bound to exercise reasonable care in maintaining a system of inspection in order to discover any change in the physical condition of the plant, which would tend to increase the dangers to persons lawfully in pursuit of their business or pleasure; that the care which the law exacts in operating an instrumentality is always in proportion to the degree of injury reasonably to be apprehended from the use of the means employed; and that the master or employer is liable for the wrong or negligence of the servants or employees.

These instructions necessarily conveyed to the jury that it was called upon to decide other issues than that of the extent of the damages suffered by the plaintiff. There is no dissent from the rule that jurors should be instructed only upon the question or questions which the jury is called upon to decide. As said in 24 Cal. Jur. p. 827:

"Accordingly, it is error to give an instruction which, although correct as an abstract statement of a proposition of law, has no bearing upon the issues of the case under consideration, or is unsupported by evidence, though, as in other cases, a reversal is justified only in case a miscarriage of justice results, as where it is probable that the jury was misled. Prejudicial error does not result from an erroneous abstract instruction, which, in view of the undisputed facts, could not possibly have caused injury."

All of these statements of the law, as set forth by the text-writer, would be applicable here, where it not for the fact of the erroneous admission of testimony and the tendering to the jury for decision questions not involved. But, following the admission of the erroneous testimony and the argument of counsel relative to previous acts of alleged negligence and the alleged negligence in the construction and maintenance of the power line, it could not very well be said to have any other effect than to impress upon the minds of the jury a conclusion that something besides compensatory damages should be taken into consideration by the jury. We think that such would be the case, notwithstanding the fact that the trial court subsequently correctly instructed the jury as to the measure of damages. If the effect which we have mentioned may be said to be cured by the subsequent instruction, then the tendency of the instructions, to which we have referred, was to confuse the jury as to the question or issue they were called upon to decide in rendering a general verdict, and to that extent constituted error. Taken alone, we would not hold the giving of the instructions mentioned prejudicial error, but, in connection with the inadmissible testimony upon which the instructions were based, we conclude that the jury must have been more or less influenced thereby.

Upon motion for a new trial the defendant set out in an affidavit the alleged misconduct of counsel for the plaintiff, among other things, as a basis upon which its motion should be granted. This affidavit was upon motion of the plaintiff stricken from the record. The action of the court in granting such motion and denial of the defendant's application for a new trial are assigned as grounds for reversal, but are not separately considered herein for the reason that it would involve practically a restatement of what we have heretofore stated. The affidavit added nothing to the record.

[14, 15] As one of the reasons urged upon the trial court as to why a new trial should be granted, and one of the grounds strongly urged upon this court as to why the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, appellant sets forth that the damages are excessive. As stated herein, the jury awarded the plaintiff the sum of $25,000. The damages suffered by the plaintiff, as shown by two physicians called on the part of the plaintiff, are as follows:

"Testimony of Dr. Thompson.

"The burn destroyed the exterior area of the skull covering about one-half inch in diameter, which had to be removed; the electric current entered the body from the right hand and his two fingers and thumb were badly burned; the bone on the lower or outer edge of the right hand was burned so it had to be removed; the little finger is somewhat pressed in toward the other fingers; the second finger was destroyed to the knuckle joint and had to be removed to that joint; the first finger was destroyed down almost to the joint; the thumb was removed to the last joint; the wire evidently came in contact with the right hand, passed through the head and where the boy's body came in contact with the ground; the next injury was a spot on the left shoulder blade about two inches long, where it went through the skin; there was a burn about four inches long on the left side and some of the tissues underneath were destroyed; we took some skin off the leg and covered that over; you can still see the outline of the scar; at the point where the burn occurred I will say that the muscles extending to the arm where the electric current entered the body, the upper part of the arm is about half an inch smaller than the left arm and in the forearm it is about a quarter of an inch smaller than the left arm; the boy was formerly right-handed; the measurements of the boy's chest disclose that the muscles in the right side seemed to be three or four inches smaller than the muscles on the left side of the chest; the tendency of the muscles on the left side of the chest being drawn toward the spine is to pull the muscles to the left of the vertebræ and cause a curvature of the spine; this curvature is about an inch at the widest place."

In answer to a juror, the distance was given at about half an inch.

"There was also a spot on the left shoulder blade about two inches in length; the boy was a robust boy of between eight and nine years of age when the injuries were inflicted."

In answer to a juror, the doctor stated that he would not say that the curvature of the spine would weaken the boy permanently. This witness then testified that the boy was suffering from chorea and endocarditis as probable results of the injuries described. The witness also testified that cancerous growth frequently follows a scar or a burn; that such results are probable results. It may be here stated that other witnesses had testified that the boy was unconscious for a few hours, that when the doctor called the plaintiff was unconscious and seemed to be suffering great pain; that cancerous growth is not certain to occur in cases of this kind, but that in a certain number of cases cancerous growths do appear from scars or burns; that in this case chorea was the result of the shock; that the chorea might be permanent.

Dr. White, the second doctor called for the plaintiff, testified substantially as Dr. Thompson, but added that his first observation was of a large scar on the left buttocks and then described the other scars and injuries about the same as Dr. Thompson; that the right arm at the biceps was found one-half inch smaller in circumference than the left, and the lower portion of the right arm about one-quarter inch smaller than the left. This witness also testified as to the presence of chorea, endocarditis, and of the possibility of cancerous growth that might occur any time within a period of 50 years.

Two witnesses called by the defendant testified that there was no evidences of endocarditis or of chorea, and that the boy was simply a nervous child; there was also testimony that the boy had resumed his studies in school, and that he had a very fair grip in his right hand.

It thus appears that, while the boy suffered a severe shock and a great deal of pain, that his right hand is disfigured for life, the permanency of the other alleged injurious consequences induced by the shock are more or less problematical. And this is true if we accept only the testimony of the physicians called by the plaintiff. As heretofore pointed out, the circumstances of endocarditis, chorea, and probability or possibility of cancerous growth were not pleaded as injuries or results of injuries suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the negligence of the defendant, but the testimony in relation thereto is referred to herein as bearing upon the question of the award of damages.

As a final résumé of the grounds set forth for reversal upon this appeal, the respondent calls attention to the fact that, even though it be admitted that the errors occurred in the trial as complained of and that the testimony objected to should not have been admitted, unless the defendant has been prejudiced thereby, the judgment should not be reversed. In other words, unless the damages awarded are in excess of what should have been awarded, the defendant has not been injured. This necessitates a consideration of the award. We will here state that we cite no case decided prior to the year 1916 for the reason that beginning at about the year 1916, and perhaps a little earlier, the value of dollars taken as a standard in estimating damages has very materially changed; that is, the value of a dollar prior to 1916, in purchasing power, was so much greater than the purchasing power since the beginning of the year 1916 and up to the present time has been and is so that due allowance must be made therefor.

Since the preparation and filing of briefs by counsel in this cause, volume 46 of the American Law Reports has been published. This volume contains in its annotations of cases an almost complete treatise on the subject of damages in personal injury cases. The annotations referred to include only cases decided between the beginning of the year 1916 and the end of the year 1926. The annotations to which we refer begin on page 1230 of volume 46 A. L. R., and cover over 193 pages. In these pages are collected and cited all the cases, we think, appearing in the official reports decided during said period of time. It would be a work of supererogation on our part to do anything more than to refer to the annotations appended to the case of Quinn v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., beginning on page 1230 of volume 46 A. L. R. A careful study and review of every one of the cases contained in that elaborate annotation discloses no case where damages awarded in a sum such as was awarded in this case have been allowed to stand, where the injuries were no more serious than those suffered by the plaintiff. The cases collected in the note to the annotation to which we have referred show that, in practically every case where the injuries suffered by the plaintiff may be said to be at all comparable, the award of damages has been limited to from $10,000 to $15,000.

In the case of Williams v. Fleming, reported in 46 A. L. R. 1220, just preceding the annotations contained in said volume, we find where a jury had brought in a verdict of $25,000 for injuries to a boy 3½ years old, which required amputation of one leg above the knee and other injuries mentioned thereon, the verdict was reduced to $15,000. In the case of Stroup v. N. E. Okl. R. Co., 122 Kan. 587, 253 P. 242, in an action for damages where the plaintiff, 24 years of age, had sufferred a fracture and displacement of the vertebrae and other nervous afflictions, a verdict of $30,000 was reduced to $20,000. In the case of Stone v. City of Pleasanton, 115 Kan. 378, 223 P. 312, a case decided in 1924, a boy of 13 years of age came in contact with a live wire, was severely burned, his arm had to be amputated between the elbow and the wrist, scalp wounds on the head which would not cure, large burns on the shoulder and leg, and 216 square inches of skin grafting required. A verdict of $19,000 was reduced to $15,000.

We will not here extend this opinion by referring to the cases cited, but content ourselves with the statement that an examination thereof shows that the award in this case is considerably in excess of that which has been awarded for anything like comparable injuries in other states, and no case has been decided in this state where, for like injuries, so great an award has been permitted. The nearest approach thereto is that of Smith v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, 59 Cal. App. 647, 211 P. 843. In that case, the right arm of the plaintiff had to be amputated just below the elbow and other injuries were suffered by him, which the record does not disclose, but which the court in its opinion stated that it had carefully examined, and that there was nothing in that case which tended to improperly influence the jury and thereby increase the award of damages.

[16] Without touching upon the question of passion or prejudice, we think it is reasonably apparent from what has been said herein that the award of the jury was increased to a considerable extent by the testimony improperly admitted, and that to such extent the defendant may be said to have suffered prejudice. In view of the admission of negligence on the part of the defendant and that the amount of damages to be awarded really constituted the only issue that should have been submitted to the jury, and which issue only it was proper for the jury to determine, the ends of justice in this case do not require an absolute reversal of the judgment. Under section 53, Code of Civil Procedure, an appellate court is empowered to affirm, reverse, or modify any judgment appealed from and may direct the proper judgment to be entered, or direct a new trial or that further proceedings be had. In the case of Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 264, 277, 137 P.

20, the Supreme Court, in a personal injury case, upon first hearing ordered a new trial for the reason that improper testimony had been admitted. Upon rehearing this order was revoked, and the judgment was remitted in a definite amount and allowed to stand affirmed as remitted. The court, in its opinion, following this course, said:

"As, however, the only ground upon which the judgment and order denying a new trial was reversed was for the erroneous admission of evidence on the subject of damages, the respondent asks that he be permitted to remit the sum of $3,000, and that upon such remission, the order denying a new trial and a judgment against defendant for seven thousand dollars be affirmed. There can be no question but that this court in a proper case may do this (Code Civ. Proc. § 53; Tarbell v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 34 Cal. 616; Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 463; Davis v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. [19] 18 [35 Am. St. Rep. 133, 32 P. 708]), and we think this is a proper case for doing so."

Eliminating the inadmissible testimony to which we have referred, which may have increased the award of damages, and also eliminating the special injuries complained of, which were not properly pleaded and presented for determination, we think there is still remaining sufficient to show that the plaintiff suffered severe injuries and that a comparison of this case with the long list of cases set out in the annotations in 46 A. L. R., supra, to which we have referred, a judgment awarding the plaintiff compensation for the injuries suffered in the sum of $15,000 would subserve the ends of justice, avoid the expense and necessity of a new trial and terminate litigation already somewhat protracted.

[17] It is therefore ordered and adjudged that if the respondent shall, within 30 days after the going down of the remittitur herein, file in the court below a written release to the extent of $10,000, then, and in that case, the judgment in this case stands affirmed in the sum of $15,000, otherwise to stand reversed; it is further ordered that in view of section 1027, Code of Civil Procedure, covering costs in cases where a judgment is modified, that the respective parties in this case pay their own costs upon appeal and that neither recover from the other such costs.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; SHIELDS, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 187

THILLE v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.
(Civ. 4484.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 5, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ⚡58—City charter strictly construed (Constitutional Amendment 1914 [article 11, § 6]).

In view of constitutional amendment of 1914 (article 11, § 6), providing that cities might regulate municipal affairs, subject to limitations provided in charters and as to other matters being subject to general laws, city charter held to operate as a limitation, and not a grant of power, and hence was to be strictly construed.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡63(1)—Unless ordinance is clearly oppressive, it will be upheld as exercise of police power.

Unless city ordinance, claimed to be in exercise of municipal police power, is clearly harsh and unreasonable and not related to public health, safety, morals, or general welfare, courts will not nullify it.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡595—Police power extends to regulations merely for public convenience.

Police power of city embraces regulations designed to promote public convenience or general welfare, as well as those intended to promote public safety, health, or morals.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡601—Ordinance prohibiting building unless 30 feet from street held sustainable on other than æsthetic grounds (Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Under Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, city ordinance requiring buildings erected in certain district to be 30 feet from street held sustainable and not in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, without basing justification on æsthetic considerations only.

5. Constitutional law ⚡319—Ordinance requiring buildings to be 30 feet from street held not confiscatory (Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Under Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, city ordinance prohibiting building unless 30 feet from street held regulative only, and not confiscation of private property in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡601—City ordinance prohibiting building within 30 feet from street held within police power (Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Where reasonableness, as matter of public welfare, of city ordinance prohibiting erection of buildings unless thirty feet from street was debatable, held that court could not interfere with such exercise of city's police power, under Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, and hence refusal to issue permit to plaintiff entitling him to build garage within prohibited limits was within discretion of city officials, and not in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

Houser, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ralph H. Clock, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by John M. Thille against the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles and another. From an order issuing a writ of mandate, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., and Chas. B. MacCoy, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Wm. J. Locke, of San Francisco, J. Leroy Johnson, of Stockton, Archer Bowden, of San Jose, S. J. Higgins, of San Diego, Leon E. Gray, of Oakland, Robert L. Shinn, of Sacramento, John J. O'Toole, of San Francisco, Loren A. Butts, of Fresno, and Earl J. Sinclair, of Berkeley, amici curiæ.

Vernon M. Brydolf, of Pasadena, for respondent.

YORK, J. The merits of this appeal rest upon a certain ordinance adopted by the city council of the city of Los Angeles on the 14th day of July, 1922, designated a "set-back ordinance." In that ordinance the city council "determined that the public peace, health, safety, comfort, convenience, interest, and welfare require and it is hereby ordered that the minimum distance back from the street line for the erection of buildings or structures to be designated as 'set-back lines' on Lake street, between Bellevue avenue and Temple street," for certain distances on either side of said North Lake street should be 30 feet; and enacted that it should be unlawful to construct any buildings, etc., between the lines of the street and said "set-back" lines.

The plaintiff on the 7th of March, 1923, made an application in due form to the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles for a permit to erect a garage at No. 458 North Lake street, in said city, which permit was refused on the ground that the application did not show that the place where it was proposed to erect such garage was not within the said 30 feet between the established "set-back" line and the line of the street. This action is prosecuted by plaintiff against the board of public works, consisting of Charles H. Treat, Hugh J. McGuire, and Edward J. Delorey as members of the board, and J. J. Backus, as chief inspector of buildings of said city, asking for a writ of mandate requiring the issuance of such permit. The superior court held that the ordinance was void, and ordered the issuance of the writ of mandate as prayed. The defendants have appealed from the judgment, which judgment was entered June 25, 1923.

Said "set-back" ordinance was adopted in accordance with another ordinance adopted by said city council on December 13, 1921, No. 42882 (New Series), known as a "set-back" ordinance, which provides for the establishment by the city council of a line along any portion of any street in the city of Los Angeles, and prohibits the construction of any building or structure between such line and the street line. The general ordinance prescribes the method of procedure in the establishing of such lines, provides for a notice of intention to adopt the same and a hearing thereon at a time and place to be designated, and provides that prior to the time such ordinance establishing such line, etc., shall be effective, no building permit shall be issued for the erection of any building between the line proposed to be established and the line of the street. Under this ordinance the council has reserved the power to refuse any and all protests, and adopt an ordinance establishing or refusing to establish a "set-back" line.

[1] Appellants contend that the judgment of the trial court was erroneous, and contend that said ordinances were in accordance with the police powers of said city, and the question involved is whether it was shown that such "set-back" ordinances are in accordance with article 11, § 11, of the Constitution of the state of California, which provides that:

"Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

Respondent contends also that such ordinances are in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Our attention has not been called to any general law with which either of said ordinances is in conflict. By an amendment of the Constitution of California, adopted in 1914 (article 11, § 6), it is provided that:

"Cities * * * hereafter organized under charters framed and adopted by authority of this Constitution are hereby empowered, and cities * * * heretofore organized by authority of this Constitution may amend their charters, * * * so as to become likewise empowered hereunder, to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

It has therefore been held that such city charters operate as a limitation and not a grant of power, and hence should be strictly construed. The city charter of the city of Los Angeles comes within this rule.

The tendency to a more liberal construction of the police power, as applied in zoning and other regulatory laws, is shown in such decisions as Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 234 P. 381, 38 A. L. R. 1479, and Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 388. In the Miller Case the Supreme Court said:

"As a commonwealth develops politically, economically, and socially, the police power likewise develops, within reason, to meet the changed and changing conditions. What was at one time regarded as an improper exercise of the police power may now, because of changed living conditions, be recognized as a legitimate exercise of that power. This is so because: 'What was a reasonable exercise of this power, in the days of our fathers may today seem so utterly unreasonable as to make it difficult for us to comprehend the existence of conditions that would justify same; what would by our fathers have been rejected as unthinkable is today accepted as a most proper and reasonable exercise thereof.' Streich v. Board of Education, 34 S. D. 169, 147 N. W. 779, L. R. A. 1915A, 632, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 760. * * *

"Thus it is apparent that the police power is not a circumscribed prerogative, but is elastic and in keeping with the growth of knowledge and the belief in the popular mind of the need for its application, capable of expansion to meet existing conditions of modern life and thereby keep pace with the social, economic, moral, and intellectual evolution of the human race. In brief, 'there is nothing known to the law that keeps more in step with human progress than does the exercise of this power.'"

In providing for the common welfare the statutes of California take into consideration "open space for light," "ventilation," "health," "comfort," and "convenience"; even sentiment has had an influence in extending the limitations of the exercise of police powers. Police power embraces in its most comprehensive sense the whole system of internal regulation, and extends to the protection of all persons within its jurisdiction, and their health, comfort, and quiet. As was said by the Supreme Court in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Tranbarger, 238 U. S. 67, 35 S. Ct. 678, 59 L. Ed. 1204:

"And it is also settled that the police power embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general welfare and prosperity, as well as those in the interest of the public health, morals, or safety."

See, also, Sligh v. Kirkwood, 237 U. S. 52, 35 S. Ct. 501, 59 L. Ed. 835. The limitation of police powers has been expanding slowly but surely for several years. The case of Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 S. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385, seems to change former decisions defining police powers to such an extent that Chief Justice Fuller wrote a dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by Justice Field and Justice Brewer. But we have found no case where the authority of the majority decision has ever been questioned. That decision was rendered March 5, 1894. In his dissenting opinion, Chief Justice Fuller said:

"The police power rests upon necessity and the right of self-protection, but private property cannot be arbitrarily invaded under the mere guise of police regulation."

The question involved was the right to destroy property under a law of New York, which property was being used in violation of a prohibitory law, and which had been summarily destroyed. The property destroyed was valued at $525. The contention was that, notwithstanding the New York statute, the owners should have had an opportunity to defend their rights in the property in court. Gradually police powers have been extended until we have the decisions of our Supreme Court in the Miller and Zahn Cases, supra, which set up an authority and rule far in advance of the cases which the respondent has cited, all of which cases cited were decided long before the Miller and Zahn Cases, and of course such cases cited have no controlling force, wherein they are not in accord therewith. As was said in the case of Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra (page 514 [234 P. 395]):

"* * * We are well satisfied that the weight of authority dealing with the subject of zoning may now be regarded as establishing that 'every intendment is to be made in favor of zoning ordinances, and courts will not, except in clear cases, interfere with the exercise of the power thus manifested.'"

Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, was also quoted in the case of Zahn v. Board of Public Works, as follows:

"The courts are loath to substitute their judgment as to the necessity for a particular enactment for the legislative judgment as to the need of such an enactment with reference to the exercise of the police power. A large discretion is vested in the legislative branch of the government with reference to the exercise of the police power. Every intendment is to be indulged by the courts in favor of the validity of its exercise and unless the measure is clearly oppressive it will be deemed to be within the purview of that power. It is only when it is palpable that the measure in controversy has no real or substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals or general welfare that it will be nullified by the courts."

[2] In other words, the question is not whether the city council acted wisely, but whether it acted so oppressively and irrationally as to justify a court in holding that the city council exceeded its authority and imposed harsh and unreasonable ordinances from motives not intended for the public welfare. As held in Hebe Co. v. Shaw, 248 U. S. 297, 39 S. Ct. 125, 63 L. Ed. 255, if the question of public welfare be debatable, the city council is entitled to its own judgment, and that judgment is not to be superseded by the opinion of a court.

sities of the case and the safeguards of public interest. It embraces regulations designed to promote public convenience, or the general prosperity, or welfare, as well as those specifically intended to promote the public safety, or the public health. Whether it is a valid exercise of the police power is the question in this case, and that power, as far as it is capable of definition, extends not only to regulations as to morals, and safety, but to those which tend to promote the public convenience.

[4] The case of Varney & Green v. Williams, 155 Cal. 318, 100 P. 867, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 132 Am. St. Rep. 88, cited by respondent, pertains to a decided prohibition of the use of property for maintaining billboards, except to advertise goods for sale by the owner of the property on which the signs are maintained. The Supreme Court said in that case:

"We find that the one ground upon which the town council may be thought to have acted is that the appearance of billboards is, or may be, offensive to the sight of persons of refined taste."

[5] In other words, holding that an ordinance cannot be sustained which inhibits a use of property or restricts its use solely on aesthetic grounds. The contention that there was no other than aesthetic grounds to sustain the ordinance in question in this case at bar cannot be sustained. The cases cited in the last-named case, wherein they are not in accord with the Miller and Zahn Cases, are, of course, not authority in determining the points involved in this case. The case of Varney & Green v. Williams, supra, was decided almost 15 years before the Miller and Zahn Cases, and the authorities cited in the Varney & Green v. Williams case were, of course, much more ancient than that. It is clear that the ordinance in question is regulative, and not confiscatory.

Zoning ordinances are now being held to be for the public welfare, basing the consideration on fire protection, safety, and security of human life, prevention of street accidents—especially to children—by reducing the traffic congestion in residential districts, and danger of collision, with the resultant damages, and even when based on the decrease of noises in residential areas of a character that tend to produce "nervous disorders," may be "debatable," though not void. Changes in living conditions during a comparatively few years have brought corresponding changes in the exercise of police powers, and those advancements are recognized in construing ordinances alleged to be in conflict with them.

[6] In the case under consideration the city council may have concluded, without being arbitrary or intentionally unreasonable, that the public welfare would have been subserved, danger from fires lessened, danger from street traffic lessened, without injustice to plaintiff. There was a 20-foot alley in the rear of the lots in the district where plaintiff's lot was located. The alley runs in from North Lake street and connects with Bellevue avenue. Before approaching Bellevue avenue the alley widens into a street called Telvada street. Plaintiff's testimony that during the rainy season he could not get up the alley with his automobile does not establish that with grading the alley would not serve the purpose of entry to a garage erected on the rear of plaintiff's lot. It would seem quite improbable that the alley could not be so improved that it would be ample as a driveway to and from the rear of plaintiff's lot. The council could reasonably consider that, as plaintiff's garage was to be constructed at a line within 30 feet from the street line, the approach to the street with an automobile could not be as readily discerned by pedestrians and those passing in the street in vehicles after its erection. Under the circumstances, it was for the city council to decide whether the erection of a garage within the 30-foot limit would be detrimental to the public welfare. It is for this court to decide whether the question is a debatable one only, and the court is not to substitute its judgment for that of the city council if the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance is a debatable one.

We hold that the reasonableness of the ordinance in question here is, to say the least, debatable. It may have been unwise, but it was not necessarily based upon aesthetic considerations only, but had a reasonable basis within the charter of the city of Los Angeles and the Constitution of the state. The latest expression on the subject by the Supreme Court of the United States that we have been able to find is contained in the case of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 47 S. Ct. 114, 71 L. Ed. 171. We will quote from page 175 (47 S. Ct. 118):

"There is no serious difference of opinion in respect to the validity of laws and regulations fixing the height of buildings within reasonable limits, the character of materials and methods of construction, and the adjoining area which must be left open, in order to minimize the danger of fire or collapse, the evils of overcrowding, and the like, and excluding from residential sections offensive trades, industries and structures likely to create nuisances. See Welch v. Swasey, 214 U. S. 91, 29 S. Ct. 567, 53 L. Ed. 923; Hadacheck v. Sebastian, 239 U. S. 394, 36 S. Ct. 143, 60 L. Ed. 348, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 927; Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U. S. 171, 35 S. Ct. 511, 59 L. Ed. 900; [Thomas] Cusack Co. v. City of Chicago, 242 U. S. 526, 529, 530, 37 S. Ct. 190, 61 L. Ed. 472, [475] L. R. A. 1918A, 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 594." [Italics ours.]

We cannot do better than quote further from the case of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co. as follows:

"Building zone laws are of modern origin. They began in this country about 25 years ago. Until recent years, urban life was comparatively simple; but, with the great increase of concentration of population, problems have developed, and constantly are developing, which require, and will continue to require, additional restrictions in respect of the use and occupation of private lands in urban communities. Regulations, the wisdom, necessity, and validity of which, as applied to existing conditions, are so apparent that they are now uniformly sustained, a century ago, or even half a century ago, probably would have been rejected as arbitrary and oppressive. Such regulations are sustained, under the complex conditions of our day, for reasons analogous to those which justify traffic regulations, which, before the advent of automobiles and rapid transit street railways, would have been condemned as fatally arbitrary and unreasonable. And in this there is no inconsistency, for, while the meaning of constitutional guaranties never varies, the scope of their application must expand or contract to meet the new and different conditions which are constantly coming within the field of their operation. In a changing world, it is impossible that it should be otherwise. But although a degree of elasticity is thus imparted, not to the meaning, but to the application of constitutional principles, statutes and ordinances, which, after giving due weight to the new conditions, are found clearly not to conform to the Constitution, of course, must fall.

"The ordinance now under review, and all similar laws and regulations, must find their justification in some aspect of the police power, asserted for the public welfare. The line which in this field separates the legitimate from the illegitimate assumption of power is not capable of precise delimitation. It varies with circumstances and conditions. A regulatory zoning ordinance, which would be clearly valid as applied to the great cities, might be clearly invalid as applied to rural communities. * * * Nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard. If the validity of the legislative classification for zoning purposes be fairly debatable, the legislative judgment must be allowed to control. Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, 294, 44 S. Ct. 325, 68 L. Ed. 690 [694]. * * *

"The decisions enumerated in the first group cited above agree that the exclusion of buildings devoted to business, trade, etc., from residential districts, bears a rational relation to the health and safety of the community. Some of the grounds for this conclusion are promotion of the health and security from injury of children and others by separating dwelling houses from territory devoted to trade and industry; suppression and prevention of disorder; facilitating the extinguishment of fires, and the enforcement of street traffic regulations, and other general welfare ordinances; aiding the health and safety of the community, by excluding from residential areas the confusion and danger of fire, contagion, and disorder, which in greater or less degree attach to the location of stores, shops, and factories. * * *

"If the municipal council deemed any of the reasons which have been suggested, or any other substantial reason, a sufficient reason for adopting the ordinance in question, it is not the province of the courts to take issue with the council. We have nothing to do with the question of the wisdom or good policy of municipal ordinances. If they are not satisfying to a majority of the citizens, their recourse is to the ballot—not the courts.' * * *

"If these reasons, thus summarized, do not demonstrate the wisdom or sound policy in all respects of those restrictions which we have indicated as pertinent to the inquiry, at least, the reasons are sufficiently cogent to preclude us from saying, as it must be said before the ordinance can be declared unconstitutional, that such provisions are clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, having no substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare."

It was said by the Court of Appeals of New York, in the case of Wulfsohn v. Burden, Inspector of Buildings of the City of Mount Vernon, 241 N. Y. 288, 150 N. E. 120, 43 A. L. R. 651:

"The open spaces not only tend to minimize the danger of fire to adjoining buildings and thus a spreading conflagration, but they also afford a greater opportunity for access by fire departments to a burning building and thus increase the possibility of successfully stopping a conflagration before it spreads to other buildings. * * * But certainly it seems to us that a requirement of 25 feet of open space between an apartment house such as the one proposed and adjoining property cannot be said to be an unreasonable protection against some of the dangers to which we have referred."

We are not unmindful of the fact that in Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, at page 502 (234 P. 390), our Supreme Court said:

"It will not be necessary for us to decide at this time the question as whether or not the particular set-back ordinance in question here is valid."

But we observe from a careful examination of both the case of Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, and Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., supra, that the reasoning used in each and all of said cases would apply equally to the particular set-back ordinance involved in this appeal. We are not holding that the law laid down in this case, or in any of the cases cited, would affect a case where want of good faith on the part of the legislative body is involved, as there is nothing in this case at bar, or in the three cases cited, raising such a question. We can readily see that circumstances might arise whereby a set-back ordinance of even the distance involved in this case would work an absolute confiscation of an entire lot—but a question of that kind is not involved in this appeal.

We hold that the court erred in granting the writ of mandate. It follows that the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

CONREY, P. J. I concur in the judgment. It is only fair, however, to admit that I have found it difficult to be satisfied with this extension to set-back ordinances of the rule recently declared in the zoning cases. To say that the owner of a lot, in building thereon, shall leave vacant a 30-foot strip in front of his property is different in fact, if not in principle, from a mere regulation governing the kind of structure that he may place upon his land. A set-back ordinance, at least in some instances, goes perilously near to depriving the owner of his property without compensation. To wholly deprive one of the use of property is, in effect, the same as taking the property entirely away from him. On the other hand, of course, it must be conceded that the use is not entirely destroyed, since there remain the rights of light and air and the right of access or passage to and fro across the otherwise unoccupied space. There also remains the right to cultivate the ground and ornament it with grass, trees, and flowers, or, if the owner prefers, with cabbages and turnips, until, perhaps, such right shall be taken away from him for aesthetic reasons. A writer, who apparently is neither a judge nor a legislator, has recently remarked concerning Charles I of England:

"His theory of the divine right of kings is dead—or at least has been transmuted into a theory of the divine right of Legislatures to make police regulations."

Even in very recent decisions in some of the states the courts have refused to concede the right to enforce the establishment of set-back lines by exercise of the police power, and have insisted that such regulations should be enforced under the power of eminent domain, where a right of compensation is recognized. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in making such a ruling, declared that the establishment of such a building line is the creation of an incumbrance upon private property in favor of the public; and that such establishment of a building line being a taking of property by eminent domain, the procedure prescribed for such taking must be followed. Inhabitants of the Town of Watertown v. Dana et al., 150 N. E. 860, 44 A. L. R. 1374. If the police power applies to such a case, then the incumbrance always exists in an inchoate state, and is not "created" by the set-back ordinance.

Notwithstanding the foregoing observations, which at least show the difficulty of arriving at a decision in favor of appellants in this case, I concur in the judgment of reversal because I think that such is the inevitable progressive consequence of the decisions rendered in the Miller Case and in the Zahn Case, which are extensively quoted in the foregoing opinion written by Mr. Justice YORK. It is admitted by every one that all private property is held subject to the state's exercise of that vast and flexible authority known as the police power. It may be that some of these later applications of that power, in the control of property rights, present themselves to our minds in the aspect of something arbitrary while they are new, but will seem less objectionable when our independent souls become accustomed to the new bonds. As the individual withers and as his frontiersman spirit is tamed, he will more easily recognize that when he lives in Rome and owns property there he must submit to the conditions which the Romans prescribe. Since it is now established to be the law that the city of Los Angeles, in adopting its zoning plans, may provide for strictly private residential districts, from which all kinds of business structures are prohibited, it is perhaps a very short step, and not crossing any boundary lines of principle, to preserve the commonly accepted characteristics of such residential districts by insisting that every house shall have its own "front yard," with an incidental view across the neighbors' front yards. It may be worth while to observe, however, that the application of this rule may have a direct effect in limiting the choice of property owners in selecting building plans for homes, so that instead of rear gardens or interior gardens and playgrounds for their children, the trapezes and hobby horses will have to go out into the more exposed and more public front yard.

It may be, however, that while the enactment of set-back ordinances, as such, is a thing within the power of the municipality, yet that some set-back ordinances might be rejected as unreasonable invasions of private right. In the case at bar, where it appears that the property owner is seeking to erect on the street line a garage for trucks used by him in his trucking business, and to do this in a block of residences, all of which are set back from the street line, it does not seem probable that the application of the ordinance in this case is peculiarly unreasonable.

HOUSER, J. I dissent. As it is apparent that no consideration of public health, morals, safety, or welfare is here involved, it follows that, in my judgment, none of the reasons assigned for the exercise of the police power in the premises is sound. I cannot but think that the suggestion that more light, or more air, or more or better fire protection will be afforded in a residence district by reason of the enforcement of a set-back ordinance, which forbids the erection of any building nearer than 30 feet to the front property line, is untenable. It may not be doubted that in a downtown business district in a city like New York, for example, where extremely tall buildings are permitted, such an ordinance might be helpful, if not essential, to the public welfare. But on a fairly wide street, in a residential district, the only consideration which can be reasonably urged for the passage of such an ordinance is that without it the beauty of the street will be marred; in other words, the reason is founded solely on aesthetic considerations. No one contends but that the police power is elastic, but the upholding of the ordinance in question as legal stretches the police power to the breaking point. The ordinance is arbitrary in its nature, and at least morally discriminatory, if not legally so.

In addition to such criticisms on the exercise of the so-called police power as affecting the ordinance here under consideration, it is clear that the effect of such ordinance is nothing less than confiscatory. It is possible that a 30-foot corner lot, which may face on a street intersecting at right angles with the street affected by the ordinance in question, so that the length of the lot will run lengthwise of such street, in effect, will be taken without compensation and without "due process of law." The owner of such a piece of property, as will the owner of every other piece of property fronting on the street affected by the proposed ordinance (to the extent of 30 feet thereof), will be deprived of practically every useful benefit connected therewith, so far as pecuniary considerations are concerned. That one may be the owner and possessor of real property, and yet by ordinance be so restricted as to be prevented from putting it to any beneficial use, presents an anomalous situation. The only remaining privileges to the owner of property so affected are to pay taxes and street assessments levied thereon and keep it cleared of weeds, garbage, and other refuse. In such circumstances, especially as affecting a corner lot fronting on an intersecting street, as hereinbefore suggested, the owner thereof, far from having a property of value, exchangeable for currency or marketable commodity, might even experience difficulty in inducing its acceptance by any person as a gift. To one so situated, if it be possible that the upholding of the ordinance amounts to the safeguarding of his constitutional property rights, by comparison it would seem that the classic myths depict what were stern realities. To my perception, the fact of the matter is that the ordinance is both arbitrary and oppressive and a clear invasion and infringement upon the rights guaranteed by the Constitutions of this state and of the United States. With the recognition of such legislation as lawful, every other constitutional right possessed by each citizen of the state is in danger of being disregarded at the whim or the caprice of any legislative body. As affecting the principle, it was said by Burke:

"The moment you abate anything from the full rights of men each to govern himself, and suffer any artificial positive limitation upon these rights, from that moment the whole organization of government becomes a consideration of convenience."

Motion to vacate default is addressed to sound discretion of trial court, which will not be disturbed in absence of clear showing of abuse.

3. Appeal and error §957(1)—In absence of abuse of discretion, order refusing to vacate default, based on conflicting affidavits, cannot be disturbed.

Where affidavits submitted were conflicting, order of trial court, denying motion to be relieved from default, cannot be disturbed, in absence of abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig and Hugh J. Crawford, Judges.

Action by Anna M. Gomes against H. H. Bragg. From a judgment entered for plaintiff by default and an order refusing to set aside the default, defendant appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed, with directions, and order appealed from affirmed.

Hugh A. McNary, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. H. Johnson and H. J. Brady, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment entered by the superior court of Los Angeles county and from an order refusing to set aside and vacate the defendant's default. The action was instituted to secure the specific performance of a contract for the exchange of real properties. It is alleged in the complaint that the parties to the action executed, on October 2, 1924, a contract in writing, whereby the plaintiff agreed to convey to the defendant certain real property, particularly described, situate in this state, and the defendant agreed to convey to the plaintiff in exchange therefor certain particularly described real property, situate in the state of Montana. There is also an allegation that the defendant refused and failed to comply with the terms and provisions of said contract. Personal service of summons was had upon the defendant. Thereafter and upon the expiration of the statutory period the defendant's default was duly entered. In its findings of fact and conclusions of law the trial court declared that the defendant had wrongfully breached the written agreement of the parties, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a deed of conveyance covering the Montana property, "upon depositing with the clerk of this court a deed to the property in San Bernardino county, Cal." GOMES v. BRAGG. (L. A. 8752.)

Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1927.

1. Appeal and error §1152—Where decree of specific performance of exchange contract failed to require performance by both parties, appellate court may modify decree to conform to findings (Code Civ. Proc. § 53).

Where decree of specific performance of contract for exchange of real properties required execution of deed from one party only, court could, on appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 53, modify judgment to require delivery of deeds by ment was thereupon entered, decreeing that the defendant execute and deliver to the clerk of the court for the plaintiff a deed covering the Montana property. Thereafter, and upon the denial of a motion to vacate and set aside his default, the defendant prosecuted this appeal from the judgment and order. The appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why said judgment and order should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of the cause upon said calendar, and the entry of the order to show cause, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein but that no brief had been filed on behalf of the respondent, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. The order to show cause was thereafter submitted upon the calling of said special calendar.

[1] As ground for reversal of the judgment, the appellant urges that said judgment is inconsistent with and unsupported by the complaint and findings of fact, and that it is invalid in that it does not fully adjudicate the mutual rights and liabilities of the parties. This contention is bottomed upon the assertion that the judgment should have decreed, in conformity with the terms of the contract, that each party execute in favor of the other a deed of conveyance covering his or her respective property as described in the contract. In our opinion the failure or silence of the judgment to decree the execution by the respondent to the appellant of a deed to the California property does not necessitate or warrant a reversal of the judgment. The findings of fact and conclusions of law, as above indicated, provide for the mutual execution and delivery by the parties of deeds to their respective described properties. Section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that on appeal the court may "affirm, reverse, or modify any judgment or order appealed from, and may direct the proper judgment or order to be entered. * * *" The judgment appealed from is therefore modified by adding thereto immediately preceding paragraph 2 thereof the following:

"The delivery of said deed to the plaintiff being conditioned upon her executing in favor of the defendant, H. H. Bragg, as grantee, and depositing with the clerk of this court a deed in and to that real property situate in San Bernardino county, Cal., described as follows, to wit: The east half of lot 507 according to the map showing subdivisions of lands belonging to the Semitropic Land & Water Company, as per plat recorded in Book 11, p. 12, of Maps Records of said county."

[2, 3] This brings us to a consideration of the appeal from the order refusing to vacate and set aside the appellant's default.

The recent case of Waybright v. Anderson, (Cal. Sup.) 253 P. 148, announces the principles of law governing such appeals. It is there held that a motion to set aside a default is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and, in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise thereof, an appellate court will not disturb the order of the court below. There has been no showing herein that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the appellant's motion to be relieved from default. Moreover, it is indicated in Waybright v. Anderson, supra, that the decision of the lower court is conclusive on appeal in so far as the affidavits used on said motion are in conflict. An inspection of the record in the instant case discloses a sharp conflict in the affidavits filed. In view of these conflicting affidavits and in the absence of abuse in the exercise of its discretion, the order of the trial court denying the motion to be relieved from default must be affirmed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed as modified, with directions to the court below to amend the same as herein indicated. The order appealed from is also affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO., et al.
(S. F. 11453.)

Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1927.

1. Railroads $\S$ 348(4)—Evidence of operation of train without light or warning held to show negligence.

Evidence of operation without headlight or any warning, of electric train, which struck plaintiff, held to show negligence of defendant railroad company.

2. Evidence $\S$ 10(3)—Court may take judicial notice that avenue where pedestrian was injured by train was in business district of city.

Court may take judicial notice that avenue where pedestrian was injured while crossing railroad tracks was in business district of city.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 866(1)—Where plaintiff was nonsuited because his evidence showed contributory negligence, sole question on appeal is whether he was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

Where plaintiff, suing for being struck by train, was nonsuited on theory that his evidence showed contributory negligence in failing to observe train before stepping on track, sole question on appeal is whether he was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

4. Railroads $\S$ 301—Pedestrian's right to use street is equal to right of electric railroad.

Pedestrian has right to use of street equal with that of electric railway thereon.

5. Railroads ⚡324(1)—Pedestrian, crossing railway at point other than regular crossing, must exercise greater care than in using established crossing.

Pedestrian, struck by electric car in crossing street at point other than regular crossing while crossing track in diagonal route, was required to exercise greater care than if he had used established crossing.

6. Railroads ⚡330(1)—Pedestrian may assume train will be operated in careful manner.

Pedestrian about to cross electric railway track has right to assume that those in charge thereof will operate it in reasonable and careful manner.

7. Railroads ⚡330(3)—Pedestrian had right to assume motorman would sound warning for crossing.

Pedestrian about to cross electric railway track had right to assume that motorman in charge of electric train would sound warning bell or whistle as he crossed cross street near by.

8. Railroads ⚡330(3)—Pedestrian had right to assume that train without headlight was not coming toward him.

Pedestrian crossing electric railway track had right to assume that train was equipped with proper headlight, and that, if it was approaching where he was about to cross, it would be reflected along track, and, as he saw no light on train, it was not unreasonable to assume that it was not traveling toward him.

9. Railroads ⚡350(28)—Pedestrian crossing in front of train without headlight held not negligent as matter of law.

In action against railway company for personal injuries, evidence of plaintiff's attempt to cross track in front of train without headlight, which he thought was traveling away from him, held to present jury question, and not to show contributory negligence as matter of law.

10. Railroads ⚡350(13)—Pedestrian's knowledge of custom of stopping trains held not to make him guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

In action by pedestrian against electric railway company for injuries while crossing track, his knowledge that company stopped trains at cross street near by did not make him guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, but presented jury question, in view of fact that train which struck him was without headlight, causing him to think it was traveling away from him, which might have caused him to forget place of stoppage of trains temporarily.

11. Negligence ⚡69—Forgetfulness of known danger does not always prevent recovery.

Plaintiff's forgetfulness of known danger does not always prevent recovery therefrom, for it is not negligence, unless it shows want of ordinary care.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Edward Smith and another against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From a judgment granting a motion for a nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Philip M. Carey and Chapman, Trefethen & Chapman, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This action was brought to recover damages sustained by plaintiff Edward Smith for injuries caused by the alleged negligence of the defendants in the operation of an electric car or train belonging to the defendant corporation. The defendant Tom Kelley was the motorman in charge of said car at the time said plaintiff was injured, and the plaintiff, Vernon P. Peck, was the employer of the said Edward Smith at the date of the latter's injury. Hereafter we will refer to Edward Smith as the plaintiff or appellant and the Southern Pacific Company as the defendant or respondent. At the close of plaintiff's evidence the court granted a motion for a nonsuit, and from the judgment, based upon the order granting said motion, the plaintiffs have appealed. The injury of plaintiff, for which he seeks to recover damages in this action, was received while he was crossing Shattuck avenue in the city of Berkeley on the evening of October 20, 1922, at about half past 6 o'clock. The plaintiff was 26 years of age, in good health, and his hearing and eyesight were unimpaired. He was employed at the time in Pex Candy Store as a soda water dispenser, and had been so employed for a period of about 2 months previous thereto. During a part of this time he had lived in San Francisco, and made daily trips to and from that city to Berkeley over the Key Route, getting off the train at Bancroft way. He knew on the date of the injury that both the Key Route and the Southern Pacific trains coming from San Francisco stopped on the south side of Bancroft way, and on the north side of Bancroft way in going to San Francisco. He also knew that the Southern Pacific trains used the third and fourth tracks, but he did not know on just which track the north-bound train stopped, nor on which track the south-bound train stopped. He never rode on those cars. Shattuck avenue runs north and south, and is intersected at right angles by Bancroft way and Kettredge street. Shattuck avenue is practically 160 feet in width. Bancroft way is 61 feet in width. Pex Candy Store is located on the east side of Shattuck avenue, and 60 feet north of Bancroft way. Kettredge street is the next street north of Bancroft way, and runs parallel thereto. There are four car tracks running abreast on Shattuck avenue, and, commencing on the east side of said avenue, these tracks are referred to in the evidence as tracks numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4. Tracks 1 and 2 are used by the Key Route, upon which it operates its local and inter-urban cars from the San Francisco pier to the city of Berkeley, and tracks 3 and 4 by the Southern Pacific Company for like purposes. The distance between the rails of each of these tracks is 4 feet 8½ inches. The sidewalk on the east side of Shattuck avenue is 14 feet in width, and the distance from this sidewalk to the east rail of track No. 1 is 29 feet. The distance from the west rail of track 1 to the east rail of track 2 is 7½ feet, and the distance from the west rail of track 2 to the east rail of track 3 is 12 feet, and from the west rail of track 3 to the east rail of track 4 is 12 feet and 3 inches. From the west rail of track 4 to the sidewalk on the west side of Shattuck avenue is 53 feet. The surface of Shattuck avenue between Bancroft way and Kettredge street is oiled macadam, and the rails of the respective tracks are substantially flush with the street. On the evening of October 20, 1922, at about 6:30 o'clock, the plaintiff left Pex Candy Store for the purpose of going to his hotel, which was located almost directly across Shattuck avenue from said store. As he walked out on the sidewalk in front of the candy store, he noticed a Southern Pacific train on track No. 3. This train had stopped for the purpose of receiving and discharging passengers just south of Bancroft way. It was dusk or dark at this time, and the lights in the store and the street lights were lighted. Plaintiff testified that he could see a man on the west side of Shattuck avenue in front of the door "that is, the outline of a human," and he could see cars thickly parked on the west side of Shattuck avenue as far north as Kettredge street. He identified the train south of Bancroft way on the third track as a Southern Pacific train by the lights that were in the train. There was no headlight on this train. From this fact plaintiff inferred that the train was going towards San Francisco and not towards Berkeley. After thus observing this train, the plaintiff walked to the curb of the sidewalk, and then around an automobile that was parked alongside the curb. As he walked around the automobile, he again saw the Southern Pacific train still standing south of Bancroft way on track No. 3. At that time a local Key Route car arrived from the north from Berkeley, and stopped on the first track in front of where plaintiff arrived as he walked around said automobile. He walked north along this car a distance of 15 or 20 feet, and passed around its rear end, and, when on the west rail of track No. 1, he again observed the Southern Pacific train, which was in a position similar to that which it occupied when he saw it on the two previous occasions, but he could not tell whether it was in motion or not. It appeared to be standing still. Plaintiff then walked briskly in a northwesterly direction, and, when he reached about the middle of track No. 3, he was struck by said train and severely injured. His left foot was crushed by the wheels of one of the cars, as a result of which his left leg was amputated midway between the ankle and knee. He testified that as he walked in a northwesterly direction from the west rail of track 1 to the point where he was struck he looked west and south. "During that 30 feet I had no intimation at all of any kind or character that the train was going. I was walking across the track, and I judge I was about the middle of the Southern Pacific track; I judge the car was that struck me. I got a glance out of the corner of my eye, and I sprang into the air and backwards. The train was right on top of me then. Before I could spring backwards the front end of the train must have struck me. To the best of my recollection I think it was the front end." Plaintiff further testified that there was nothing to obstruct his view from the time he left the west rail of track 1, from which point he saw the Southern Pacific train for the third and last time south of Bancroft way, up to the time he was struck. This point on the west rail of track 1 from which plaintiff last saw the Southern Pacific train was designated and marked upon a map or exhibit before the trial court as "S-3." Plaintiff testified that, after he left this point S-3 he did not turn and look to his left to observe whether or not the Southern Pacific train which he had seen standing was approaching, and that during that time, if he had so turned and looked, he could have seen said train. Other witnesses testified that the train which struck plaintiff carried no headlight, and that no whistle or bell or any other warning was sounded or given by those in charge of the train after it left the point south of Bancroft way until it struck plaintiff. The witness Dyer testified that he was standing in front of the Pex Candy Store; that he heard no bell or whistle from the train; that he heard no rumbling or other sound from the train that he noticed until the brakes were applied; and that, "when I saw Smith with his leg under the train, my best judgment was that the train was traveling at the rate of speed they usually run along there. I think it is about 30 miles per hour."

[1, 2] There is no question, and but slight contention, if any, but that the evidence shows that the defendant was negligent in the operation of its train in the manner shown by the foregoing evidence. Shattuck avenue at the locality where plaintiff was injured was in the business district of the city of Berkeley. Of this fact the court has a right to take judicial notice. Varcoe v.

Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 181 P. 223; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125. Furthermore, the evidence shows that Pex Candy Store, a retail business house, was located on one side of said street, and a hotel and library were located on the other side, and a large number of automobiles were parked next to the curbs of said street, and from this evidence, aside from the judicial notice of the nature of the locality, which the court may take, we may infer that that portion of Shattuck avenue to which this controversy relates was in the business district of said city. Along this portion of Shattuck avenue the evidence shows the train of defendant was being operated at dark, or at the dusk of the evening, and at the rate of speed estimated to be 30 miles per hour without any headlight, and without giving any warning of its approach either by ringing a bell or sounding a whistle. We are satisfied that proof of these uncontradicted facts is sufficient to show negligence on the part of the defendant in the operation of said train.

[3] The record shows, however, that the ground upon which the motion for nonsuit was granted was, not that plaintiff had failed to show negligence on defendant's part in the operation of said train, but that the evidence on behalf of plaintiff showed as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe the train before stepping upon the track in front of it while in the act of crossing Shattuck avenue. The sole question, therefore, presented on this appeal is whether the plaintiff was as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.

[4] "Negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn from the evidence." Wahlgren v. Market Street Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 663, 62 P. 308, 309, 64 P. 993; Jansson v. National Steamship Co., 189 Cal. 187, 192, 208 P. 90. "Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury." Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 336, 208 P. 125. In the light of the rule of law as expressed above, let us examine the acts of the plaintiff as revealed by the evidence just prior to and at the time he met his injury. After leaving his place of business for the purpose of going to his hotel, he looked across Shattuck avenue on three different occasions. First, when he was on the sidewalk in front of Pex's candy store; then when he had passed around the automobile parked in front of the store; and again from the rear of the Key Route street car on track 1, which had just arrived from Berkeley. On each of these occasions he saw the Southern Pacific train on the third track, south of Bancroft way. On the first two of these occasions when he saw it the train was standing. On the third occasion he testified he could not say whether it was moving or not, but it appeared to be standing still. The train was then approximately 175 feet south of the point on the track where the plaintiff would cross it on his way to his hotel. The plaintiff was from 25 to 30 feet from this same point. Observing that the train facing him had no headlight, he assumed that it was traveling from him instead of in his direction. For this reason he made no further attempts to observe its movements, but walked briskly the distance of from 25 to 30 feet in a north-westerly direction, and was struck by the train when he was about in the middle of the track. He heard no sound from the train of any nature before it struck him, and he did not see it until it was on top of him. While he testified that he looked to the south and west after leaving point "S-3," where he last saw the train south of Bancroft way, he, of course, did not look in the direction in which the train was during this time, or he would have seen it. There was nothing to obstruct his view or to prevent his seeing the train had he looked. His testimony indicates that, after leaving point "S-3," he considered himself safe from any danger from cars or trains passing over said avenue, and was observing the automobiles as they traveled up and down the westerly side of Shattuck avenue over which he would pass in going to his hotel after he had left the four car tracks on said avenue. Do these facts present a question concerning which the minds of reasonable men might differ? Appellant had the right to the use of the street equally with the respondent. "Being between the tracks of an electric railroad upon a public street is not negligence per se. The street is for the use of the public, although the car, which can be operated only on the track, has the better right to that part of the thoroughfare, to which pedestrians must yield when necessary. The rights of a company operating street cars are otherwise not superior to those of persons who may be walking on the street." Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 161 Cal. 53, 56, 118 P. 237, 238. See, also, Runnels v. United Railroads, 175 Cal. 528, 166 P. 18; Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 603, 185 P. 851, 10 A. L. R. 291. In O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 141 P. 809, this court, on page 48 (141 P. 811), said:

"The streets of a municipality are for the use of the traveling public and the right of a street car company is only to use it in common with the public. The fact that the company has been granted a right to lay tracks and operate cars along the streets gives it no exclusive right to travel even over that portion of a street covered by its tracks. Other vehicles have a right to travel over the entire street, including the space between the tracks. Nor is this right restricted to the times when other portions of the street may be crowded or in bad condition. Nor is a traveler in doing so in any sense of the term a trespasser. As a member of the public he is entitled as a matter of right to use the entire street subject only to the limitation that, as the use of the street by the car company is confined to its tracks, a traveler may not unnecessarily interfere with or obstruct a car in its movement thereon. The car company is entitled in the interest of the public service to a free and unobstructed passage at all times of its cars over its tracks when necessary, and when such movement is being made free vehicles must yield a clear right of way to it for that purpose. Shea v. Potrero and Bay View R. R. Co., 44 Cal. 414; Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275 [55 Pa. 908]; Scott v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 152 Cal. 610 [93 P. 677]; Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 161 Cal. 53 [118 P. 237]. Hence, within the rule of these authorities, negligence on the part of the plaintiff cannot be raised from the mere fact that he was driving in proximity to the track of the defendant because he had a clear legal right to do so subject to the limitation that we have stated."

Furthermore, appellant was within his rights in passing over Shattuck avenue between blocks. Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 P. 743. On page 482 of this opinion (143 P. 747), the court said:

"As to foot passengers, the old common-law freedom of use of the king's highway has not been modified in this state by any positive enactment. So that it still remains the law that foot passengers have the right to use and traverse the highway at all its points, being chargeable only for the exercise of a due amount of care, which due amount of care, in its quantum is governed by the circumstances attending the use which the pedestrian actually makes. Thus in this state, even in populous streets of cities, pedestrians are not restricted to the crossings in traversing a street, but may cross it at any point."

[5] However, in crossing the street at a point other than at the regular crossing, and in a diagonal route, the exercise of greater degree of care was enjoined upon appellant than if he had used the established crossing. Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493.

[6] The case presented by the evidence before us is not one in which the pedestrian, without any heed or care as to the dangers he might encounter in crossing a busy street, walked blindly into the path of a passing train. On the other hand, the evidence of plaintiff shows that from the time he left his place of employment for the purpose of crossing Shattuck avenue his attention was directed to the objects in the street which might interfere with his safety in crossing it. Before stepping onto the street, he made observations as to cars and other vehicles.

After passing behind the automobile parked in front of the candy store, he again looked over Shattuck avenue. At this time a local Key Route car stopped in front of him, and, after walking around it, he, for a third time, looked for any danger that might beset his traveling across the street. The only thing he observed at this time was the defendant's train, which he thought was standing still on the third track below Bancroft way. From the fact that no headlight was showing on the train, he assumed that it was moving in an opposite direction from the place where he would cross said track. Believing that no danger was present from this train, he continued his trip across the street, and directed his attention to the automobiles which were passing over that part of the street which he would cross when he left the four car tracks thereon. It will thus be seen that he at least attempted to give his attention to his safety when crossing said street. He had the right to assume that those in charge of the respondent's train would operate it in a reasonable and careful manner. This was held in O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 50, 141 P. 809, 812, where the court lays down the rule as follows:

"The foot passenger or driver of a horse has a right to expect that those in charge of street cars will operate them in the manner and run them at the speed which is customary at the particular place, and that they will give the usual warnings and signals, and take the usual precautions to avoid injury to others."

[7-9] Appellant had the right to assume, while crossing said street, that the motorman in charge of respondent's train would sound a warning bell or whistle as he crossed Bancroft way, a cross street. Lawyer v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., supra, page 56 (118 P. 238). He undoubtedly had a right to assume that respondent's train was equipped with a proper headlight, and that, if said train was approaching the point where he was about to cross its track, the light from said headlight would be reflected along and upon the track where he was about to pass. It was not an unreasonable assumption on his part to assume, as he saw no headlight upon the train, that the train was not traveling in the direction where he would cross its track. Whether under these circumstances appellant was warranted in attempting to cross defendant's track without again looking to see whether the train was approaching is the question presented by the foregoing evidence. That this question is one of fact for the jury and not one of law for the court we have but little doubt. As bearing upon this question we refer to the language used by this court in Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 554, 182 P. 281, 283:

"Whether, if she saw the automobile, respondent would have been warranted in going toward the street car without further watching the automobile approach, relying upon a compliance by the appellants with the requirements of the ordinance, was a question upon which men's minds might well differ, and hence it was properly a case for the jury."

If it is such a question, then whether appellant was guilty of contributory negligence should have been left to the determination of the jury, and not to the court. In O'Connor v. United Railroads, supra, this court used language which we think aptly applies in the present action, as follows:

"While it is true that one cannot rely entirely and wholly upon the care of another and neglect the precautions which in a particular situation he should exercise, still, when he has a right to trust to the reasonable expectation that another will discharge some duty peculiar to such situation, it is proper that such fact should be taken into consideration by the jury in connection with such precaution as the plaintiff did take, and the jury determine therefrom whether or not under the circumstances his conduct was negligent or not."

We would also call attention to the following language from the case of Scott v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 611, 93 P. 677, 679:

"In a crowded street it is often necessary and not inconsistent with reasonable prudence for a person to cross the street in front of street cars, in motion or at rest, at a point so near that it would be prima facie an act of negligence, if attempted at another place where the streets are less crowded and the cars usually run faster. The rights and obligations of all persons using a public street are, in this respect, reciprocal. Each may rightfully expect that the other will, at the proper time, discharge his proper duty towards others. He cannot rely wholly on the care of others, nor, on that account, neglect to use the precautions which the particular situation demands of him. But he frequently must, to some extent, depend on others in such situations, and his conduct must be considered in view of that fact in determining whether or not it is negligent. His care, or want of care, in such cases is generally a matter to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances surrounding him at the time."

To the same effect is Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 277, 55 P. 908. These authorities appear to us to be decisive of the question before us and to hold unquestionably that the case as made by plaintiff's evidence was one for the decision of the jury and was not one which should have been decided by the court.

[10] Respondent relies with some considerable assurance upon the testimony of appellant that he knew of the practice of the Southern Pacific Company to stop its north-bound trains south of Bancroft way and its south-bound trains north of Bancroft way. Undoubtedly appellant testified to such knowledge, but it was still a question for the determination of the jury as to whether or not it was a want of ordinary care on the part of the appellant not to have kept in mind such element of danger while attempting to cross said street. Oles v. Kahn Bros. (Cal. App.) 253 P. 158. In the recent case of Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 503, 205 P. 1078, 1080, which was brought by husband and wife to recover damages for injuries sustained by the wife through falling into an excavation made in the street by the employees of defendant, and left in an unguarded condition, it was sought to show that the wife, who was injured during the nighttime, knew of said excavations and was therefore guilty of negligence in the use of the street in proximity thereto. This court held, however:

"Even assuming that their observation of the work done was more or less extensive during the day, it was for the jury to say whether it was a want of ordinary care for Mrs. Meindersee not to have the open excavation in mind when she returned home at 11 o'clock that night, for it has been repeatedly held that even with full knowledge of such danger one may be injured and yet be in the exercise of due care."

[11] Although the appellant had knowledge of the practice of the Southern Pacific Company to stop north-bound trains on the south side of Bancroft way, still when he observed the train standing on the south side of Bancroft way without any headlight, and concluded that it was a south-bound train, this practice of the company to stop north-bound trains south of Bancroft way may not have occurred to him at the time. This was not necessarily negligence on his part, for as it was said in Meindersee v. Meyers, supra, at page 504 (205 P. 1081):

"Forgetfulness of a known danger will not always operate to prevent such recovery, for to forget is not negligence unless it shows a want of ordinary care. Generally the question is one for the jury."

The following cases enunciate the same rule: Roseberry v. Edwards F. Niehaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481, 483, 137 P. 232; Jacobson v. Oakland Meat, etc., Co., 161 Cal. 425, 430, 119 P. 653, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1194; Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 126, 40 P. 108, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114; Oles v. Kahn Bros. (Cal. App.) 253 P. 158; Hayward v. Downer, 65 Cal. App. 450, 451, 224 P. 265.

It follows from the foregoing that the trial court erred in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit. For this reason we are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1927.

1. Waters and water courses ⇨226—Motive of directors of irrigation district in passing resolutions changing boundaries of divisions held immaterial (Irrigation District Act, § 15d [as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10]).

Motive of directors of irrigation district in passing resolutions attempting to change boundaries of divisions of district under Irrigation District Act, § 15d (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10), was immaterial if they had power to pass them.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨226—Relative importance of area and population in division of irrigation district rests in directors' discretion (Irrigation District Act, § 15d [as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10]).

Where no division of irrigation district can be made which would equalize both area and population, question of which element shall be considered as more important must rest in discretion given to directors of district by Irrigation District Act, § 15d (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10).

3. Waters and water courses ⇨226—Courts should sustain irrigation district directors' action changing boundaries of divisions in absence of abuse of discretion (Irrigation District Act, § 15d [as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10]).

Courts should sustain action of directors of irrigation district in changing boundaries of divisions of district under Irrigation District Act, § 15d (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10), unless plain abuse of discretion appears from records.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨226—Change in numbering of divisions of irrigation district held not abuse of discretion of directors (Irrigation District Act, § 15d [as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10]).

Change in numbering of divisions of irrigation district by directors acting under Irrigation District Act, § 15d (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10), allowing change in boundaries, held not abuse of discretion, where change was not arbitrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by J. H. McKim and others against the Imperial Irrigation District, organized and existing under and by virtue of the Act of March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254), and amendments and supplements thereto, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Chas. L. Childers and D. B. Roberts, both of El Centro, for appellants.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, Ault & Anderson, of Calexico, and Philip Sterry, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This appeal is by the defendants from a judgment declaring null and void certain resolutions of the board of directors of the defendant Imperial irrigation district by which said board attempted to change the boundaries of the divisions of said irrigation district in purported exercise of the discretion vested in said board by the California Irrigation District Act. (Laws 1897, p. 254, as amended). The judgment further decreed that the general irrigation district election, held on or about the 4th day of February, 1925, and conducted in conformity to the divisions attempted to be effected by said resolutions, is void and of no effect, and as a consequence thereof the purported election of the defendants Mark Rose, C. W. Brockman, and Thomas Blair, as directors of said irrigation district for divisions 5, 1, and 3, respectively, each is void.

The plaintiffs allege they are property owners in the irrigation district. A demurrer to the first alleged cause of action was sustained, and no amendment was made. The second cause of action, after setting forth the relation of the parties, the organization of the district, etc., charges that the resolutions changing the boundaries of the district were passed by three directors, voting, therefor, without any belief on their part that such changes ought to be made; that said directors did not vote in favor of such resolutions in good faith, and "did not vote to change and establish or change or establish the divisions as purported to be changed in said resolutions, because they in truth and fact did find or claim that it was necessary for the convenience of any electors or for the best interests of said defendant district, and that they did not in truth and fact in good faith establish the divisions as purported to be established in said resolutions on any basis of the same being as nearly equal in area and population as might be practicable; that in truth and fact the new claimed and purported division as set forth in said two resolutions did not create divisions more equal in area and population than were the said five divisions as established by said board of supervisors, and that the said divisions as purported to have been established by said resolutions are not in truth and fact more equal in area and population or as equal in area and population as may be practicable." There are other allegations of a similar nature.

The Imperial irrigation district was formed under the California Irrigation Act in 1911. At that time the area of the district was about 511,000 acres and the population less than 15,000. Upon the organization the district was divided into five divisions, and these continued practically unchanged until the resolutions of November 25th and 26th, 1924, as alleged in the complaint. At the time of these resolutions, the population of the district had grown to over 50,000, and the divisions were grossly unequal in area and population; division No. 4, for instance, containing five times as much land and nearly twice as many people as division No. 1. This unsatisfactory condition was brought about by the inclusion of about 100,000 acres of land in the district, the natural growth of population and the extension of canals over the district. The resolution of the board of directors of November 25th endeavored to change the divisions, and the resolution of the succeeding day merely amended the former one by changing the numbers of two of the divisions. These resolutions were passed under the power given by the following provision of the California Irrigation District Act:

"The board of directors, when they deem it advisable for the best interests of the district, and the convenience of the electors thereof, may at any time, but not less than sixty days before an election to be held in the district, change the boundaries of the divisions or election precincts of the district or of both; provided, such changes shall be made to keep each division as nearly equal in area and population as may be practicable. * * * Section 15d (as added by St. 1917, p. 758, § 10).

[1] At the outset of the trial the court recognized the rule that the motive of the directors was immaterial in passing the resolutions in question if they had the power to pass them, and refused to admit testimony regarding the motives of the directors. These rulings were in harmony with the cases of Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 P. 1089, 14 L. R. A. 459, 25 Am. St. Rep. 230, Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148, and State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 53 N. W. 35, 117 L. R. A. 145, 35 Am. St. Rep. 27.

It follows that the findings of the trial court upon the motives and intent of the directors are immaterial and are not sustained by the evidence. They merely repeat the allegations of the complaint concerning these matters, and are directed to matters which the trial court expressly excluded from consideration.

We come next to a consideration of the finding of the trial court to the effect that the changes effected by the resolutions in question did not "keep or make each or any of said divisions as nearly equal in area and population, or area or population, as may be practicable," and that said resolutions make said divisions less equal in area and population and less equal in population than were the divisions as they existed prior to November 25, 1924. A comparison of the tables and maps in the record conclusively demonstrates that the resolutions did make the divisions more equal in area, and, indeed, respondent concedes this. The portion of the finding directed to that matter is not sustained by the evidence. Upon the question of population, the evidence was not direct and satisfactory. The only information on the subject in the record is a stipulation of counsel that the population was approximately five to one with reference to the registration in the divisions. But, taking this estimate as accurate, it does not appear, upon the whole, that the population was made more unequal. Between certain divisions it was more equalized and between others it was made slightly more unequal.

[2, 3] This brings us to a consideration of the discretion involved in changing the boundaries. The directors were vested with power to change the boundaries "when they deem it advisable," provided such change shall be made to keep each division as nearly equal in area and population as may be practicable. This grants a very broad discretion, and the nature of the district, with its varying features, is such that no absolute rule for division can be formulated. Some sections of the district are much more densely populated than others; some include incorporated cities and others sparsely settled agricultural lands. The absence of any general rules upon the subject and the impossibility of mathematical accuracy in the divisions are made evident by the suggestions of the respondents as to how the district might best have been divided according to their ideas of practicability. It is perfectly obvious, from a survey of the maps and charts and relative scales appearing in the record, that no division can be made which would equalize both area and population. Both these elements must be taken into consideration and equalized as nearly as practicable, and, if equality in one element must be sacrificed somewhat for equality in the other, the question of which element shall be considered as the more important must rest in the broad discretion given to the directors. The directors are not compelled to defend their division as the most nearly perfect one possible, and this is conceded by respondents. Probably no two persons, acting in perfect good faith, would draw the same division lines upon the maps. It is because of this fact that a large discretionary power in the directors is necessary, and it follows as a matter of course that the courts should sustain them in their action unless a plain abuse of discretion appears from the records.

We think, therefore, that in making the changes in boundaries provided for in the resolution of November 25th the board of directors was exercising its authority within the discretion accorded to legislative bodies of this character.

[4] The other question presented by the appeal has reference to the numbering of the divisions carved out of old division No. 4. It was immaterial whether the most northerly division should be designated No. 3 or whether the southerly division should be designated No. 3. In the resolution of November 25th the southerly division was designated No. 3 and the northerly division was designated No. 4. In the amended resolution of November 26th, the northerly division was designated No. 3 and the southerly division was designated No. 4. Since the resolution of November 25th and the amendment thereof of November 26th must be considered as one resolution, it does not appear that there has been any arbitrary change in numbers. It may well be that the effect of the final numbering of these divisions was to insure representation of both of these divisions on the board of directors of the district.

Under the facts of this case, we think the board of directors exercised its authority within the provisions of the governing act.

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 931(4)—Trial court's omission to find on affirmative defense of contributory negligence held not supplied by implication from judgment for plaintiff.

Where trial court omitted to find on the issue of contributory negligence presented by affirmative defense, such omission could not be implied from judgment for plaintiff on the complaint, where neither complaint nor findings asserted that defendant's negligence was sole and proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1071(6)—Failure to find on issue of contributory negligence in giving plaintiff judgment held not reversible error, where there was no evidence of contributory negligence.

While failure to find on issue of contributory negligence when raised by way of affirmative defense usually constitutes reversible error, such failure held not prejudicial when the record failed to reveal any evidence tending to establish contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Ocie Hubbard against the San Diego Electric Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Read G. Dilworth, of Coronado, and V. F. Bennett, of San Diego, for appellant.

D. F. Glidden, of San Diego, and C. W. Noyes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained in a collision between one of the defendant's electric cars and a refuse truck on which the plaintiff was employed by the city of San Diego. At the time of the accident the refuse truck was being operated by one H. W. Preston, with whom the plaintiff was riding toward the city dumping ground. The complaint avers that said accident was caused by and resulted from the careless and negligent operation of the defendant's said electric car. In its answer the defendant denies the charge of negligence and affirmatively alleges that—

"The sole, only, proximate and contributory cause of any such injury or damage was the carelessness, recklessness and negligence of plaintiff."

The action was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment for damages in the sum of $300 was entered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant thereupon prosecuted this appeal from said judgment, and the same was thereafter placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why said judgment should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of the cause upon said calendar, and the entry of the order to show cause, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief on behalf of the respondent had been filed, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. The respondent failed to appear upon the calling of said calendar, and the order to show cause was thereupon submitted.

[1] It is urged by the appellant as a sole ground for reversal of said judgment that the trial court failed to find upon the issue of contributory negligence, which omission, it is asserted, constitutes reversible error. An examination of the record discloses that the trial court found, with certain enumerated exceptions not of importance here, that the allegations of the complaint were true. No finding was made, however, upon the issue of contributory negligence presented by the appellant's affirmative defense. Nor do we think that said omitted finding may be supplied by implication, as in Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 602, 185 P. 851, 853, 10 A. L. R. 291, for in the instant case, as distinguished from the case cited, neither the complaint nor the findings actually made assert that the negligence of the appellant was the "sole and proximate cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff." We are of the opinion, however, for reasons presently to appear, that the judgment herein may be affirmed.

[2] While it is true that there are authorities to the effect that the issue of contributory negligence when raised by way of affirmative defense becomes a material issue upon which a failure to find constitutes reversible error (Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 702, 704, 154 P. 835; Maxwell v. Auto Stage Co., 46 Cal. App. 548, 550, 189 P. 710; Huntington v. Vavra, 36 Cal. App. 352, 354, 172 P. 166), nevertheless, it would appear that in the cases announcing such doctrine evidence had been adduced upon the trial tending to establish said issue of contributory negligence. We are of the opinion, based upon a scrutiny of the record herein, that this appeal may properly be disposed of under that line of authorities which declares that a failure to find upon an affirmative defense does not constitute prejudicial and reversible error when the record fails to reveal any evidence tending to establish such affirmative defense. Mohr v. North Rawhide Min. Co., 177 Cal. 264, 265, 170 P. 600; McKelvey v. Waggy, 157 Cal. 406, 409, 108 P. 268; Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 439, 82 P. 66; Callahan v. James, 141 Cal. 291, 294, 74 P. 853. In Klokke v. Escailler, 124 Cal. 297, 300, 56 P. 1113, 1114, it is declared that—

"In Wise v. Burton, 73 Cal. 175 [14 P. 684] it was said: 'This court will not reverse for want of a finding on an issue with respect to which there is no evidence.' * * *

[3] The inquiry is therefore narrowed to the single proposition of whether evidence was adduced upon the trial tending to establish said affirmative defense. As indicated above, the respondent was not at the time of the accident operating the refuse truck upon which he was riding. He may not, therefore, be directly charged with any negligence which might have accompanied its operation. Moreover, the negligence, if any, of the operator of the refuse truck, may not, under the authorities, be imputed to the respondent. Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 14, 171 P. 1059; Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 309, 156 P. 460; Meyers v. So. Pacific Co., 63 Cal. App. 164, 168, 218 P. 284. The respondent is responsible only for the exercise of ordinary care on his own part. An inspection of the record fails to reveal any evidence of negligence on his part.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Edwin H. Harvey against B. S. Berry for an injunction, in which defendant asked for quieting of his title as affirmative relief. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Choynski, of San Francisco, and W. E. Kleinsorge, of Sacramento, for appellant.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought by him against the defendant to restrain certain asserted acts of trespass upon a certain portion of the property alleged to belong to plaintiff, and to perpetually enjoin any further interference on the part of said defendant with the rights and ownership of plaintiff in said property. The defendant in his answer denies any ownership on the part of plaintiff in the particular strip of land upon which the defendant has entered and asserts ownership in himself therein, and as affirmative relief asks that his title be quieted thereto.

The facts as shown upon the trial and found by the trial court are practically undisputed and may be briefly stated as follows: During the year 1885 Ellen M. Butler was the owner of the record title to a certain lot in the city of Sacramento known as lot 10 in the block bounded by K and L and Twelfth and Thirteenth streets in said city, and running, according to the official records, 80 feet on L. street by a uniform depth. On November 14, 1885, Mrs. Butler conveyed the west 44 feet of said lot to one John N. Young. At the time of such conveyance, the residence of Mrs. Butler was on the easterly portion of said lot 10, which portion thereof was inclosed by a board fence which was located on a line which ran 38.72 feet from the easterly line of said lot 10; and the portion of her home which formed the western bay window thereof extended to a point very near to said fence line. Mrs. Butler, after making said conveyance to Young, continued to occupy the premises to the eastward of said fence line for several years, but in about the year 1892 conveyed the easterly 38 feet of said lot 10 to one Edgar B. Carroll by a deed which was recorded on August 3, 1892, Carroll in the following year conveyed the premises by the same description to Virginia M. Carroll, which conveyance was also recorded. In 1895 the Carrolls united in a conveyance of said premises, also by the same description, to A. J. Johnston by a deed which was recorded on July 9, 1895. In the year 1906 Johnston conveyed the premises by the same description to the plaintiff and respondent herein, which deed was also duly recorded. Each of the foregoing grantees of said premises went in turn into actual occupation of the same and of the whole thereof up to said fence line, the said fence being maintained for its whole length until about the year 1908, when the front portion thereof was removed by mutual consent, and probably for the sake of sightliness, as between the then owners of the foregoing two portions of said lot 10, but without any then existing controversy over the boundary line between their respective properties. The city and also the county of Sacramento assessed taxes against said lot 10, assessing the east 38 feet thereof from and after the year 1892 to the Carrolls and their successors in ownership, which taxes had been paid by them up to the year 1909, when the frontage of that portion of said lot 10 was, upon such assessment, reduced to 36 feet. In the meantime John M. Young had by mesne conveyances transferred the westerly 44 feet of said lot 10 by that identical description to several successive grantees down to the defendant and appellant herein, and upon said westerly 44 feet of said lot 10 taxes have been regularly assessed to and paid by the successive transferees of Young. In the month of February, 1924, the defendant and appellant herein entered upon the strip of land about 3 feet in width which he claimed to own as the easterly 3 feet of his 44-foot portion of said lot 10, but which strip of land lay to the eastward of the aforesaid fence line and upon which a portion of the plaintiff's dwelling stood, claiming the right so to do, and to make excavations thereon for the purpose of the erection of a building upon his 44-foot portion of said lot 10 extending over said strip. Thereupon the plaintiff commenced this action.

The trial court found the foregoing facts, and further found as a fact that the said defendant and his predecessors in interest had never since the 19th day of July, 1892, possessed or used or occupied any portion of said lot 10 except the west 42 feet thereof; but that, on the contrary, the said Edgar B. Carroll and his successors in interest in and ownership of the said easterly portion of said lot 10 have claimed, possessed, and occupied the easterly 38 feet of said lot 10 under color of title and as the owners thereof continuously and adversely against all the world, and particularly against all owners and occupants of that portion of said lot 10 held and possessed by said defendant and his predecessors in interest therein, and have paid all taxes assessed to them thereon. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact, the trial court found that the plaintiff is the owner and in possession of the east 38 feet of said lot 10, and that the defendant is the owner and in possession and entitled to the possession of the west 42 feet thereof, and that the plaintiff is entitled to his injunction as prayed for in his complaint. The appellant attacks these findings and conclusions of law as unsupported by the uncontradicted evidence in the case, and, in support of his contention in that regard, urges that, inasmuch as the original owner of the whole of said lot 10, Ellen M. Butler, had in the year 1885 conveyed to the appellant's predecessor, John M. Young, the westerly 44 feet of said lot 10 by that identical description, her retention of any portion of said 44 feet thereof thereafter must be held to have been permissive on the part of the grantees and not adverse, and that, this being so, the possession of the strip of land now in dispute by her grantee, Edgar B. Carroll, and by his successive grantees down to and including the plaintiff, must also be held to have been permissive and not adverse. The appellant cites in support of this contention the provisions of section 321 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the cases chiefly of Brandon v. Umpqua Lumber, etc., Co., 26 Cal. App. 96, 146 P. 46; Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons, 29 Cal. App. 743, 156 P. 876; De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 30 P. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151; and Tully v. Tully, 137 Cal. 60, 66, 69 P. 700.

The respondent concedes the correctness of the rule laid down in Tully v. Tully, supra, to the effect that the holding over by a grantor of property or of any portion thereof after his grant will not suffice to raise the presumption of a holding adverse to his grantees, but will be presumed to be permissive; but the respondent, notwithstanding such concession, maintains that this principle cannot be given application to the successor of such grantor who receives a conveyance of a definite larger area of the entire premises than that which remained to his grantor after his previous conveyances, and who records his conveyance thereof and goes into actual and exclusive possession of such area under circumstances which must have conveyed notice to his neighbor of the actual and exclusive nature of his possession and claim of ownership thereto, such as, for example, the occupancy of the dwelling, a portion of which covered the area in dispute, or as the maintenance of a division fence upon the line dividing the easterly and westerly portions of the entire premises. The respondent contends that neither the section of the Code above cited nor the authorities relied upon by the appellant are applicable to such a state of facts, but that, as to the Code provisions, he is entitled to the full benefit of sections 322 and 323 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to occupation under a claim of title founded upon a written instrument, and that, as to the decisions construing said provisions of the Code, the case of Cummings v. Laughlin, 173 Cal. 561, 160 P. 833, presents a complete analogy to the case at bar and is decisive of the instant controversy.

We are satisfied from an examination of the foregoing cases and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure that the contention of the respondent herein must be sustained. The cases of Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons and Brandon v. Umpqua Lumber, etc., Co., supra, bear no true analogy to the facts of the case at bar. In the first of these cases the original title to the premises in question was nothing more than a lease thereof from the municipality of San Francisco for a long term of years. The grantees under the lessee received nothing more than a quitclaim conveyance from each to each carrying only the title which his immediate grantor had under the original lessee and upon which the claim of an adverse possession could not be built up as against the state. In the latter of the foregoing cases the foundation of the claim of adverse user rested on an easement or license to pass over the premises of the respondent given to one Hilton for the convenient operation of his lumber business for a limited number of years and thereafter continued in use by his successor in interest, the Umpqua Lumber Company. The trial court held that such continued use by the latter had none of the qualities of an adverse user, and that there was an entire absence of those significant circumstances of hostile assertion usually found where adverse possession is asserted. On the other hand, the case of Cummings v. Laughlin, supra, upon which the respondent relies, presents several significant identities to the facts of the case at bar. In that case there was an overlapping of description in the first and second deeds of the original grantor. He had nevertheless marked out what he conceived to be the boundary between the two tracts thus conveyed and had planted a line of trees along such boundary. His successor in interest under his second deed and his grantees had gone into possession of the land conveyed to them up to said boundary, and exercised exclusive dominion over it for a long series of years, and paid all the taxes which were assessed against him and them thereon. The court held that the plaintiff's title by adverse possession had been fully sustained. We think the foregoing case is decisive of the case at bar, and hence that the trial court was not in error in confirming the plaintiff's claim of ownership of the strip of land in dispute by adverse possession.

The judgment is affirmed.

MALMGREN et al. v. SOUTHWESTERN AUTOMOBILE INS. CO. (two cases).
(S. F. 11460, 11683.)

Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1927.

1. Venue ⇨7—Place of performance of automobile indemnity policy, as regards venue of action thereon, held county where injury should occur or judgment be obtained against assured (Const. art. 12, § 16).

Place of performance of insurance policy to indemnify assured against loss from liability imposed by law on account of bodily injuries to any person from assured's automobile, as regards venue of action thereon, held county where injury should occur and in which judgment against assured should be obtained, under Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation or association may be sued where contract is made or to be performed or where liability arises.

2. Insurance ⇨152(3)—Statutory provisions rendering indemnity carrier of insolvent assured liable to persons injured by automobile are part of policy (St. 1919, p. 776).

Provisions of St. 1919, p. 776, providing that no policy of insurance against loss or damage from automobile, suffered by another person, for which assured is liable, shall be issued, unless providing that insolvency of assured shall not release insurance carrier from liability, and that action may be brought against insurance carrier after judgment against assured, are as matter of law part of every policy of indemnity issued by company engaged in automobile liability indemnity insurance, inuring to benefit of the injured persons.

3. Pleading ⇨32—Stating legal effect of indemnification contract held proper pleading in injured person's suit against insurance carrier of insolvent debtor.

Setting forth legal effect of indemnification contract in injured person's suit against judgment debtor's liability insurance carrier is an approved method of pleading.

4. Insurance ⇨629(1)—Complaint of person injured by automobile against owner's indemnitor held proper pleading of statutory contractual relation (St. 1919, p. 776).

Complaint of person injured by automobile in suit against owner's indemnity insurance carrier, setting forth basic essentials of action, legal effect of indemnification contract, insolvency of assured, and demand for payment of judgment, sufficiently pleaded the contractual relation created between insurer and complainant under St. 1919, p. 776, providing that injured person may bring action against insurance carrier after judgment against insolvent assured.

5. Insurance ⇨612(1)—Return of execution unsatisfied is not condition precedent to action against indemnitor after judgment against assured (St. 1919, p. 776).

Return unsatisfied of execution on judgment against assured for negligently causing bodily injury by automobile is not prerequisite to commencement of action by judgment creditor against insurance carrier under St. 1919, p. 776, rendering indemnity insurance carrier liable to third persons upon inability of assured to pay judgment.

6. Insurance ⇨591½—Statutory provisions, making indemnitor of insolvent assured liable to persons injured, cannot be modified by policy provisions (St. 1919, p. 776).

St. 1919, p. 776, providing that indemnity insurance carrier shall be liable to third persons suffering injuries from negligence, who obtain judgment against insolvent assured, is founded on principles of public policy, and cannot be enlarged, circumvented, defeated, or modified by any provision in insurance contract.

7. Insurance ⇨311(1)—Clause in statute that third person may bring action against indemnitor "subject to limitations" of policy does not bind person to waiver of statutory benefits (St. 1919, p. 776).

Under St. 1919, p. 776, providing that indemnity insurance carrier shall be liable to persons suffering injuries from negligence of assured after judgment, where assured is insolvent, the clause that an "action may be brought * * * on the policy subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person," does not bind the person to waiver of benefits of the statute, but refers to matters concerning which insurer and assured could legally contract.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by E. J. Malmgren and another against the Southwestern Automobile Insurance Company, a corporation, upon a policy of indemnity insurance. From an order denying motion to change place of trial and from the judgment defendant prosecutes separate appeals. Order and judgment affirmed.

Kelby & Lawson and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, and Leon French, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Two separate appeals are here presented. It is agreed that they may be considered together. The first, numbered S. F. 11460, is taken from the order denying appellant's motion for a change of the place of trial, and the second, numbered S. F. 11683, is from the final judgment entered in said action. The facts necessary to an understanding of the grounds of said appeals will be revealed as the discussion of the cases proceeds.

Grace Elizabeth Malmgren, wife of complainant E. J. Malmgren, recovered a judgment in the superior court of the county of Alameda in the sum of $5,000, against one J. Arthur Eddy, for bodily injuries inflicted upon her in the county of Alameda as the result of the careless and negligent manner in which said Eddy drove and operated an automobile owned by him. The judgment became final before the instant suit was filed. Appellant, a corporation engaged in a general automobile insurance business, with its principal place of business in the county of Los Angeles, was the insurance carrier of said Eddy. The latter being insolvent and unable to respond in damages or to pay any part of said judgment, the present action was brought in the county of Alameda against appellant corporation upon a policy of indemnity insurance issued by it to said J. Arthur Eddy to indemnify him against loss from the liability imposed by law upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries suffered by any person as the result of an accident occurring and caused by reason of the use, ownership, or maintenance of said automobile, as provided by an act entitled:

"An act relating to actions against an insurance carrier when the insured person is insolvent or bankrupt, or without property sufficient to satisfy execution on account of loss or damage insured against, and requiring policy to be exhibited in certain cases." Stats. 1919, p. 776.

The portion of said statute which bears upon the question presented by these appeals reads:

"No policy of insurance against loss or damage resulting from an accident to, or injury suffered by another person and for which the person insured is liable, * * * shall be issued or delivered to any person in this state by any domestic or foreign insurance company, authorized to do business in this state, unless there shall be contained within such policy a provision that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the person insured shall not release the insurance carrier from the payment of damages for injury sustained or loss occasioned during the life of such policy and stating that in case judgment shall be secured against the insured in an action brought by the injured person or his heirs or personal representatives, in case death resulted from the accident, then an action may be brought against the company, on the policy and subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person, his heirs or personal representatives as the case may be, to recover on said judgment. Upon any proceeding supplementary to execution, the judgment debtor may be required to exhibit any policy carried by him insuring against the loss or damage for which judgment shall have been obtained."

Article 12, § 16, state Constitution, provides:

"A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases."

[1-4] It may not be doubted that the contract of indemnity was to be performed in whatever county the injury should occur and in which a judgment against the assured should be obtained. It is appellant's contention that no contractual relation is alleged or shown to exist between the injured party and the appellant. The provisions of the statutes, as above quoted, are, as a proposition of law, a part of every policy of indemnity issued by a company or corporation engaged in transacting the kind of indemnity insurance business which appellant was authorized by the law of the state to transact. It was a contractual relation created by statute which inured to the benefit of any and every person who might be negligently injured by the assured as completely as if such injured person had been specifically named in the policy. The complaint sets forth the general basic essentials of the action, and paragraph III thereof alleges the legal effect of the indemnification contract. This is an approved method of pleading. Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton, 149 Cal. 195, 86 P. 193. Paragraph V alleges that the insolvency and inability of the assured to pay said judgment or any part thereof existed on the day the injuries were inflicted and continuously thereafter, and a demand was made upon appellant and it refused to pay the same. The contractual relation which the law created between the insurer and third parties is unquestionably apparent from an inspection of the complaint.

[5-7] It is contended by appellant that its liability could not accrue under the provisions of the policy until an execution issued upon the judgment obtained against the assured, or judgment debtor, was returned unsatisfied by reason of the insolvency or bankruptcy of said assured. The statute of this state, which is the final word on this issue, does not make the return of the execution unsatisfied a prerequisite to the commencement of an action upon the policy. The statute of the state of New York has such a provision, and appellant had caused to be incorporated in its policy the language of the New York statute verbatim. The substantive law of this state cannot be enlarged, circumvented, defeated, or modified by any provision which the insurer may have elected to place in its contract in derogation of or in conflict therewith. The statute is founded upon principles of public policy, and an anomalous situation would be created if the rights of third parties, for whose protection the law was adopted, could be hindered, delayed, or defeated by the private agreements of two of the parties to a tripartite contract. If appellant's contention be sound, then it could, with equal justification, require the question of the assured's bankruptcy to be adjudicated by a competent tribunal before it would be obliged to recognize his insolvency or bankruptcy, or impose other conditions precedent to the injured person's right of action in derogation of express provisions of the law's mandate. We see no merit in the contention. Schoenfeld v. N. J. Fidelity & Plate Glass Insurance Co., 203 App. Div. 796, 197 N. Y. S. 606, relied upon as an authority in the instant case, is merely declaratory of the New York statute (Consol. Laws N. Y. c. 28, § 109), which provides that a cause of action does not accrue to the injured person until an execution issued upon the judgment against the assured has been returned unsatisfied by reason of insolvency or bankruptcy. No such language or language equivalent thereto is found in the statute of this state and neither appellant nor this court is given authority to interpolate the provision of the New York law into a California statute. The clause in the statute which provides that an "action may be brought against the company, on the policy and subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person," was not intended to defeat its purpose upon the theory that an action brought "on the policy" binds the injured person to a repudiation or waiver of the benefits of the statute expressly adopted for his protection, but it clearly has reference to those matters concerning which the insurer and assured could legally contract.

It may be pertinent to observe that not less than 40 days prior to the filing of the complaint herein respondents caused a writ of execution to be issued and directed to the sheriff of Alameda county. The day the sheriff made his return, indorsed wholly unsatisfied, is not noted. The writ was issued August 8, 1924, and bears as its filing date December 15, 1924. The complaint was filed September 18, 1924. Between the day of the issuance of said writ, to wit, August 8, 1924, and the day the complaint was filed, September 18, 1924, there was ample time for the sheriff to have made a legal return of the writ and thus overcome appellant's objection. No record was made as to when the return was made. But, however this may be, the undisputed record evidence is to the effect that the return of the sheriff was made at least 50 days before trial day. In the light of these facts it would require clear and unequivocal language to impose as an unalterable condition precedent to the commencement of an action the return of the writ of execution unsatisfied. Conceding that the return of the writ by the sheriff indorsed unsatisfied is inferentially a condition precedent to the bringing of the action, appellant's objection in the instant case is fully met by Cordes v. Hammond, 55 Cal. App. 55, 203 P. 131, and cases therein cited, wherein it is held that an allegation of the insolvency of a judgment debtor, followed by proof thereof, is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the statute providing for a return of the writ of execution by the sheriff unsatisfied before suit may be commenced. In the instant case the insolvency of the assured or judgment debtor was fully pleaded at all times named in the complaint, and proof of the fact was indisputably established by his own testimony.

The order denying the motion for a change of the place of trial from the county of Alameda is affirmed; the judgment appealed from is also affirmed.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walton J. Wood and Kirby S. Mahon, Judges.

Actions by Anna M. O'Connell against Daniel O'Connell, who filed a cross-complaint. From a decree setting aside an interlocutory decree for defendant and from orders denying his motion for a new trial, dismissing proceedings for a bill of exceptions, and other orders, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeals. Motion to dismiss the first appeal denied, and motion to dismiss the second and third appeals granted.

Daniel O'Connell, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The questions herein presented arise upon the motion of the respondent to dismiss certain appeals. The record contains the papers and proceedings in two separate actions, which are themselves so entangled, and which are so much further entangled in the transcript herein, as to require some orderly statement of the sequences of this litigation in order to a proper determination of the motions to dismiss the several appeals referred to in said transcript.

Anna M. O'Connell commenced an action for divorce against Daniel O'Connell on February 29, 1922, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant appeared in said action by demurrer on June 3, 1922, and, upon the overruling of the same on September 8, 1922, he filed his answer on October 7, 1922, denying the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, and also setting forth certain affirmative defenses thereto. The defendant also at the same time presented a cross-complaint, wherein he prayed for a divorce from his wife, and also asked for certain other affirmative relief relating to property of the parties in said action. The plaintiff responded to said cross-complaint in an answer filed October 26, 1922, denying the averments of the several counts therein, and reiterating her prayer for the granting of a decree of divorce in her favor. A trial was had upon the issues thus presented, wherein, as it appears from the recitals of the interlocutory decree, neither the plaintiff and cross-defendant nor her attorneys appeared, and wherein the court, after taking evidence offered on behalf of the defendant and cross-plaintiff, made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thereupon, and on June 3, 1924, made and entered its interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the defendant and upon his cross-complaint. Thereafter, and on May 20, 1925, an order was made by the trial court setting aside and vacating said interlocutory decree of divorce upon the agreement in writing of the parties to that effect as recited in said order. Thereafter, and on June 5, 1925, the defendant and cross-plaintiff gave notice of a motion to set aside and vacate the aforesaid order, which motion was based upon the latter's alleged rescission of the agreement upon which said order had been entered. He also in the same document gave notice of a motion to have said court make and enter a final decree of divorce in favor of himself as cross-plaintiff and in accordance with the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and interlocutory decree which had theretofore been made and entered in said action. These latter motions came on for hearing before the court on June 30, 1925; whereupon, and after hearing thereon, the court made its order vacating, annulling, and setting aside its prior order made upon May 20, 1925, by which it had vacated its interlocutory decree made and entered on June 3, 1924. In the meantime the original plaintiff, Anna M. O'Connell, had commenced another action in equity to set aside the interlocutory decree which had been made and entered in favor of the cross-plaintiff in her original action, to which action the said cross-plaintiff in said original action appeared and answered. This latter action had come on for trial and been tried on July 10, 1925, and on July 23, 1925, the trial court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law therein, and on the same date made and entered its decree therein, setting aside the interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the cross-plaintiff which it had theretofore made and entered in said original action. The court in said decree expressly recited that its purpose in making the same was to restore the parties to the same position as if said interlocutory decree had never been entered in said action. The trial court also and on the same date made and entered its order denying the application for a final decree of divorce, which had theretofore been made by the cross-plaintiff in the original action. On August 17, 1925, the defendant in the second action above referred to gave and filed his notice of appeal from the judgment which had been made and entered in said last-named action on July 23, 1925. On September 1, 1925, the defendant and cross-plaintiff gave and filed a notice of appeal from the order of the trial court denying his motion for a final decree of divorce. On September 22, 1925, the defendant and cross-plaintiff in the original action gave and filed his notice of appeal from seven separate orders which had been theretofore made in the second action above referred to, namely: (1) From an order denying his motion for the transfer of said action for trial before another judge; (2) from the order overruling the demurrer to the application for an injunction; (3) from an order refusing to strike out a certain affidavit which had been theretofore filed by the plaintiff in said action; (4) from an order issuing a certain special injunction restraining the defendant from doing certain acts during the pendency of the action; (5) from a preliminary injunction which had been made and entered by the court in said action; (6) from an order of said court denying the motion to dissolve said injunction; (7) from an order to show cause why the defendant should not be punished for contempt. On August 10, 1925, the defendant had given and filed in said second action a notice of intention to move for a new trial, which motion came on for hearing on September 18, 1925, before said court, and was upon the last-named date denied. The defendant also in the meantime presented a motion to retax costs, which the court had in due course denied. On October 2, 1925, the defendant gave and filed his notice of appeal from the order denying his motion to retax costs. On October 19, 1925, the defendant gave and filed his notice of appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial. All of the said matters are embodied in the single transcript filed herein. The transcript contains in the body thereof a certificate entitled "Clerk's certificate to judgment roll," which apparently refers to the judgment made and entered on July 23, 1925, in the second action and to certain documents which, according to the certificate of said clerk constitute the judgment roll in said action. The documents thus referred to are apparently the usual documents and files which should properly constitute a judgment roll, and said certificate must be held to refer to, and to certify only to, the correctness of the copies of the documents embodied in the judgment roll. At the close of the transcript there is a further certificate on the part of the clerk entitled "Clerk's certificate to transcript," which is in the usual form of a certification that the papers and orders contained therein are full, true, and correct copies of originals on file in his office. The transcript contains no other certificate or certificates than those above referred to.

Having thus disentangled these numerous appeals, and identified the two separate proceedings to which they respectively relate, we may now proceed to consider the respondent's motion to dismiss, which is the only matter thus far submitted for our consideration. For the purpose of determining said motion the transcript herein may be viewed in either one of two aspects: (1) As a transcript on appeal from the judgment and also from the order denying a new trial in the second of the above identified actions; or (2) as a transcript intended to embrace the record on appeal in both of the above-named actions. The respondent has apparently viewed the transcript in the first of these aspects, since her motion to dismiss the appeal or appeals relates only to the second of the aforesaid actions and to the appeals taken by the defendant and appellant therein. The respondent in her motion to dismiss expressly confines the same to action number 158293 in said superior court, which was the action brought by the respondent to set aside the interlocutory decree of divorce granted in the former action for divorce. The respondent herein moves to dismiss:

"(1) The appeal from the judgment and decree rendered in the above entitled action.

"(2) The appeal from the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial in the above entitled action.

"(3) The appeal from the order of the court dismissing the proceedings for a bill of exceptions to be used on the first two mentioned appeals."

[1-3] Taking up these several motions in their order: (1) The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment and decree rendered in said second action must be, and is hereby, denied, for the reason that the record therein discloses that there is a judgment roll and clerk's certificate thereto in said action, which judgment roll is embraced between folios 483 and 586, inclusive, in said transcript, and the presence of which judgment roll and certificate thereto in proper form would suffice to support the appeal from the judgment therein and to defeat the respondent's motion to dismiss said appeal. (2) The respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial in said action must be, and is hereby, granted, for the reason that the said order was not an appealable order. (3) The appeal from the order of the court dismissing the proceedings for a bill of exceptions to be used upon the two last-named appeals must be denied for the reason that we can find in the record herein no such proceedings for a bill of exceptions and no such order of the trial court dismissing the same, and no appeal from any such order.

If, as suggested, this transcript is to be viewed as a transcript on appeal in the action to which the respondent's foregoing motions relate, there would remain no other portion of the transcript to be considered upon defendant's appeal from the judgment than that comparatively small portion thereof of which has been identified as being the judgment roll in said second action. If, on the other hand, this transcript is to be treated as a transcript on appeal in the first of the separate actions above referred to, and to which the first eight appeals of the defendant and cross-plaintiff in said first action relate, it is sufficient at this time to say that the respondent has not in the instant proceeding asserted the insufficiency of such transcript or moved to dismiss said appeals.

Principal of school, employed by contract for school year, may be dismissed by board of trustees during school year for cause, after fair and impartial public hearing, under Pol. Code, § 1609, subd. 5(j), though he was not "permanent teacher."

3. Schools and school districts ☞142—Evidence held to support verdict denying damages to discharged principal of school, because disqualified to act as such (Pol. Code, § 1609).

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by W. J. Alexander against the Manton Joint Union School District in Tehama and Shasta Counties. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. J. Cheatham and James T. Matlock, both of Red Bluff, for appellant.

Fred C. Pugh, of Red Bluff, and Curtiss E. Wetter, of Corning, for respondent.

HART, J. This cause has previously been considered by this court upon an appeal by the defendant from the judgment entered upon a directed verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. Alexander v. Manton Joint Union School District in Tehama and Shasta Counties, 73 Cal. App. 252, 238 P. 742. At the second trial, the verdict of the jury, by which the cause was tried, was in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. The plaintiff has appealed from said judgment.

The plaintiff, a teacher of the defendant under a contract with the latter, was dismissed as such teacher upon charges preferred by the trustees of said district. This action was instituted by plaintiff, under the authority of section 1609, subd. 5, of the Political Code, to secure a judicial determination of the question whether the charges were true or false, and thus, if the charges were determined to be false or unfounded, obtaining a judgment nullifying the action of the defendant in dismissing him from his employment as teacher of its school.

The issues made by the pleadings are stated in the opinion of this court by Presiding Justice Finch on the former appeal as follows:

"The complaint alleges that on or about the 12th day of May, 1923, the plaintiff and the board of trustees of the defendant district 'entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff was employed as principal in the said Manton joint union school district at a salary of $2,000 per year payable as follows: $200 per month for 10 months, beginning such payments on October 3, 1923; * * * that pursuant to said agreement plaintiff performed the duties of principal of said Manton joint union school district continuously from the 10th day of September, 1923, to the 10th day of March, 1924, at which time the said board of trustees wrongfully and without any cause discharged plaintiff and refused to permit him to perform the duties of principal any longer; * * * that under said agreement said board of trustees have paid plaintiff the sum of $1,200 and no more, and by reason of the discharge of plaintiff as aforesaid, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $800."

"The answer admits the employment and the performance by the plaintiff of services thereunder up to the 10th day of March, 1924, as alleged in the complaint; denies that the board of trustees 'wrongfully * * * or without cause, or at all, discharged plaintiff on the 10th day of March, 1924;' alleges that the board of trustees, 'on the 24th day of March, 1924, dismissed plaintiff for unprofessional conduct, incompetency, evident unfitness for teaching, and persistent violation of and refusal to obey the school law of California and reasonable rules prescribed for the government of public schools in the county of Tehama;' and admits that 'plaintiff is entitled to be paid his salary under the provisions of his contract of employment for the period from March 10th to March 24th.'

"As a further and separate defense, the answer alleges that 'during the school year of 1923, and to and including the 10th day of March, 1924, plaintiff was guilty of * * * unprofessional conduct, incompetency, evident unfitness for teaching, persistent violation of and refusal to obey the school laws of California, and the reasonable rules prescribed for the government of public schools of the county of Tehama; that on the 12th day of March, 1924, charges were duly preferred in writing against plaintiff * * * for the causes in paragraph II hereof set forth, a copy of which charges is hereto annexed * * * and made a part hereof;' that a copy of such charges and a notice of the time and place of hearing to be had thereon were duly served upon the plaintiff; that said hearing was had March 24, 1924, and 'witnesses were called and sworn and gave testimony in proof of said charges and * * * said board of trustees upon the affirmative vote of a majority thereof, all of whom had been present throughout the entire hearing sustained said charges and dismissed plaintiff as principal of said school.'"

On February 25, 1924, the trustees caused to be served upon plaintiff a notice, signed by three of the members of the board of trustees, to the following effect:

"You are hereby notified that your services will not be required after March 10, 1924."

On March 12, 1924, the plaintiff was served with a second notice, signed by the same trustees, and which read as follows:

"You are hereby again notified that our action on February 25, 1924, asking and demanding your dismissal, is final, and your services discontinued from that date. You will therefore be governed accordingly."

The plaintiff was either at the time of the giving of the last-mentioned notice, or at least upon the same day, served with a copy of the following charges preferred against him by the trustees, the same being dated March 12, 1924:

"You will please take notice that the board of trustees of Manton joint union school district of Tehama county, Cal., request and demand your resignation and dismissal as principal of said Manton joint union school district, for the following causes and upon the following grounds committed and suffered to be done by you for the school year 1923-1924, in the manner following, to wit:

"Upon unprofessional conduct committed by you, for cursing and using profane and opprobrious language towards and addressed to a trustee of said district in the presence of said trustee, and in the presence of the pupils of said district on the school grounds of said school, on February 19, 1924.

"By continuously disobeying the orders, and requests of said board of trustees during the school term of 1923-1924, to wit: To maintain order on the school grounds and see that the rights of the smaller pupils were respected. By not forbidding vulgar and profane language on the school grounds. By refusing innumerable times to accept or obey any orders for the benefit and welfare of the school from the trustees.

"Incompetence by reason of defective hearing, and being unable thereby to hear and understand ordinary conversation, and thus unable to hear recitations or make corrections when necessary to the classes under his instructions, and being also prevented thereby from hearing vile and obscene language used in the school room.

"Refusal to obey reasonable rules prescribed for government of said public school by refusal to co-operate with any of the educational agencies of the offices of the superintendents of schools of Tehama and Shasta counties. By refusing to allow pupils to participate in the benefits of the county library, the said district allowing $160 for said purpose.

"By failing to co-operate with county nurse and attendance officer in putting over the health program and attendance program prescribed by the county board of education. By ignoring and refusing to discuss the program of the music supervisor of Tehama county. By refusing to make any report to the attendance officer of absent pupils.

"By refusing to discuss school problems with the superintendent of schools of Tehama county regarding the benefit and welfare of the school, and by waving an iron ramrod over her head, and stated he would not listen to what said superintendent had to say, notwithstanding the fact that said superintendent had been requested to talk on said matters by said board of trustees.

"And you are further notified that the hearing of the above charges will be heard before the board of trustees of said District at the schoolhouse in said district on the 24th day of March, 1924, at 11 a. m. of said day."

The foregoing charges were signed by three of the trustees.

The trustees of defendant apparently assumed that the notice to plaintiff, dated February 25, 1924, declaring his dismissal as a teacher and demanding his resignation operated ipso facto to effect a dismissal, for, upon the giving of said notice, they immediately appointed a successor to plaintiff, who likewise took charge of the school as the principal thereof, in the place and stead of the plaintiff.

The time fixed for the hearing of the charges in the notice of March 12th given to the plaintiff was the 24th day of March, 1924. A trial of the plaintiff upon the charges was held upon said day, with the result that the plaintiff was dismissed from further service as a teacher of said school.

Plaintiff, among other contentions, maintained at the first trial and on the appeal from the judgment in the action as thus tried:

"That the court was without jurisdiction to determine the truth or falsity of the charges; and that, since the board had given plaintiff notice of dismissal without a trial and had placed another teacher in charge of the school, it had no authority to try him thereafter, because he was no longer a teacher in the school."

The court below, at the former trial, seems to have taken that view of the case, and accordingly directed the jury to find for the plaintiff. This court, in disposing of the former appeal, disapproved the theory upon which the case was then determined, in the following language:

"If the trustees have authority to dismiss a teacher for cause without a trial, then in case of a wrongful dismissal he would undoubtedly have a cause of action on his contract, and in such action the court would have jurisdiction to determine, as in other alleged breaches of contract, whether there was just cause for his dismissal. If the trustees have not such authority, then the attempted dismissal of plaintiff was abortive, and the subsequent trial of the charges against him was a proper procedure for the termination of the contractual relations between the parties. If the trustees had attempted to dismiss plaintiff, after a trial upon charges preferred against him, but upon insufficient notice, or without any notice of the hearing, it would hardly be contended that they might not thereafter treat their attempted dismissal as a nullity and proceed anew to a hearing after a sufficient notice thereof. No reason appears why they could not pursue a similar course where no charges had been preferred, no notice given and no hearing had."

Supporting the foregoing views, the opinion cited and quoted an excerpt from the case of White v. Wohlenberg, 113 Iowa, 236, 84 N. W. 1026, a case which, in the facts, is parallel to this.

The opinion also called attention to the following provision of subdivision 5 of section 1609 of the Political Code:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law."

The opinion, referring to the foregoing provision, among other things, said:

"Section 1609 prescribes the grounds and the proceedings for the dismissal of a teacher for cause. It would be difficult to give the provision quoted any meaning other than that, upon the discharge of a teacher for any alleged cause, he is entitled to maintain an action in court to determine the truth or falsity of the charges preferred against him."

For the reasons stated in the foregoing excerpts from our opinion, and for errors growing out of the rulings of the court regarding the question of the admissibility of certain proffered testimony, the judgment entered on the former trial of the action was reversed.

[1] To support the present appeal, the points above referred to, with other points, are urged, but the disposition of the former appeal embraces the law of the case as to all points, at least those fundamentally affecting the merits of the case, which it was necessary to decide to properly determine the appeal and which were decided therein.

For a reversal of the judgment with which we are presently concerned, the plaintiff also urges: 1. That subdivision 5 (j) of section 1609 of the Political Code, upon which the charges against him purport to be founded, has exclusive reference to the dismissal of "permanent teachers"; that, since he was not a "permanent teacher," but was by contract with the trustees employed by them as a teacher for a definite or determinate period of time—that is, for the school year only—the proceeding before the trustees purporting to constitute a public hearing of the charges was wholly nugatory or of no legal force or effect. 2. That section 1609 of the Political Code is unconstitutional and consequently void. 3. That the verdict is not supported by the evidence. 4. That the court erred in refusing to grant plaintiff's motion to strike from the answer certain of its allegations, and also erred in certain rulings upon the evidence. 5. That the court's charge to the jury involved in a certain particular an erroneous statement of the law.

[2] The point first stated is concluded by the decision of this court on the former appeal. As will be observed from the last above given extract from the opinion, we, in effect, held that the procedure for the dismissal of teachers, as prescribed by section 1609, applied to all teachers, whether permanent or employed only for the school year, or whether principal or subordinate in degree of authority. The conclusion thus arrived at is in perfect accord with the provisions of section 1609 relative to the dismissal of teachers. Paragraph (i) of the fifth subdivision of said section expressly vests the board of trustees of the school district with the power "to dismiss probationary teachers during the school year for cause only, as in the case of permanent teachers." It is clear that the plaintiff was only a probationary teacher or a teacher employed for the school year. Certainly he was a principal of the school, and principals are expressly included among the teachers mentioned in subdivision 5 (j) of section 1609 against whom charges may be preferred, and who may, if the charges are sustained, be dismissed by the board of trustees upon a public hearing thereof. Section 1609, subdivision 5 (j), specifically sets forth the grounds upon which a permanent teacher, or a principal, whether permanent or probationary, may be dismissed, and the two paragraphs immediately following subdivision 5 (j) prescribe the procedure to be pursued to effect such dismissal, if, under the proofs, a dismissal is justly to be ordered. The grounds of dismissal as enumerated in the first paragraph of said subdivision are "immoral or unprofessional conduct, incompetence, evident unfitness for teaching, persistent violation of or refusal to obey the school laws of California, or reasonable rules prescribed for the government of public schools."

The counsel for the plaintiff has not pointed out wherein section 1609 of the Political Code offends any provision or mandate of the state Constitution, and, therefore, as the section, so far at least as are concerned the provisions affecting the questions involved in the present controversy, does not appear to be out of gear with the Constitution, we will not assume the burden of subjecting the section to a critical analysis (which, without the aid of counsel, would probably be required) to ascertain whether in any respect it does not square with some particular provision of our organic law.

[3] The next consideration to which attention is invited involves the contention that the verdict of the jury is not afforded support by the evidence. An examination will show, as thus we have been convinced, that there is no force to this contention. The written charges filed before the trustees against the plaintiff, together with notice to the latter that the same would be heard on the 24th day of March, 1924, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., at the schoolhouse of said district, were introduced in evidence. The notice was dated March 12, 1924, and was personally served on the plaintiff on said day by M. L. Bouton, constable of Sierra township, which embraces a portion of the Manton joint union school district. Bouton was subsequently appointed by the county superintendent of schools as a member of the board of trustees of said district, to fill a vacancy on said board. He testified that he was present as such trustee on the 24th of March, when the hearing of the charges was had; that the plaintiff did not attend the hearing, although, when he served him with the notice and a copy of the charges, the plaintiff was at his cabin, which was situated not more than 75 yards from the schoolhouse. Mads Neilsen, clerk of the board of trustees, testified that he was present at the hearing; that testimony in support of the charges was taken, and that, on the conclusion of the taking of the testimony, the board, after considering and discussing the testimony, by a vote of four to one of the trustees, found the charges to be true. At the trial of this action, Neilsen testified that plaintiff had ordered magazines and other periodicals for the use of the school without authority from the trustees so to do; that, upon instruction from the board, he notified plaintiff to countermand the order for said publications; that, on one occasion, he was urgently asked by certain persons residing near the school to go to the school grounds and put a stop to fighting and the use of profane language which were being indulged in between and by the pupils; that he went to the school grounds while a recess of the school was pending and found that the complaint thus made against the conduct of the male pupils was well founded; that he spoke to plaintiff about the matter and remarked to him (plaintiff) that he was not maintaining proper discipline over the boys while they were on the grounds during the recess periods, to which plaintiff replied by calling the witness a "d——n liar." Miss Lang, county superintendent of Tehama county during the plaintiff's employment as principal of the Manton high school, testified that the plaintiff's management of the school was not in accord with instructions given by her as to the course of study outlined, in that, under his method, there was not that co-ordination between his school and the Red Bluff high school which would entitle the pupils earning the same to the high school credits; that, in her interview with the plaintiff, she attempted to impress upon him the "absolute necessity" of such co-ordination, so that the pupils would not lose the credits to which as such they were entitled; that she called his attention to the fact that the pupils had not received such credits; that the plaintiff became very angry with witness, and, at the same time, having a "ramrod" in his hand, "he waved it over my head and in front of my face." Miss Lang testified to other acts of insubordination on the part of plaintiff with reference to the curriculum of his school and as to the unauthorized ordering by him for the school of certain magazines, the bills for which she refused to approve, and proceeded: That in the fall of 1923 she called for the assembling of a teachers' institute for Tehama county, it being her legal duty as county superintendent of schools to do so in each year (Pol. Code, § 1560), that she gave the plaintiff due legal notice of the time and place of the holding of the institute, and that he failed to attend, giving no reason, so far as she could remember, for his absence therefrom. The section of the Political Code last mentioned makes it the duty of every public school teacher of the county to attend the annual institutes, unless prevented for some valid cause or reason. The witness, as did other witnesses, testified that the plaintiff's power to hear was so much impaired that he was not always able to understand what others would say to him in the ordinary conversational tone of voice and that questions propounded to him generally had to be repeated to him before he could understand them. In fact, the plaintiff, while being examined as a witness at the trial of this action in the court below, admitted that he was "hard of hearing," and the manner of his answers to questions there propounded to him by counsel clearly enough appears in the record before us to substantiate that statement. Miss Lang testified (there being no objection to the question eliciting that testimony) that (as obviously is true) chronic auricular nerve trouble to the extent of seriously impairing the sense of hearing constitutes a disqualification in a person as a teacher of public school. A number of pupils of the school testified that certain other pupils conducted themselves in school, while it was in session, in a disgraceful manner; that some of the offending pupils, during the school sessions, had been heard to call the plaintiff opprobrious names, such as "d——n fool"; that, in fact, they addressed or referred to him during the school sessions in language even more scurrilous and unfit to be repeated herein. It was shown that, immediately after the attempted but abortive order of dismissal and the notice thereof under date of February 23, 1924, and after the legally futile attempt by the board of trustees, on making said order and giving said notice, to appoint and install a successor to plaintiff as principal, the latter induced a number of the pupils to absent themselves from the school and attend a school conducted by him at his residence, near the schoolhouse. The theory upon which plaintiff proceeded in pursuing that course was, manifestly, that the notice of his dismissal of February 23, 1924, was legally ineffective. But it is not necessary further to review herein the testimony presented by the defendant in support of the charges upon which plaintiff was dismissed by the trustees as principal of the school. It is enough to say that the testimony tending to show that plaintiff was wholly disqualified for the proper performance of the duties of a principal of a public school; or, for that matter, to discharge the duties of a subordinate teacher in such school, amply supports the verdict. Substantially the same testimony was presented before the board of trustees in its investigation of the charges against the plaintiff, which resulted in the order of dismissal.

The motion to strike out certain parts of the answer and the objections to certain evidence were predicated upon the general proposition that the notice of dismissal of February 23d, to take effect on March 10th, legally operated as a dismissal of plaintiff, and that the trial of the charges on March 24th, in pursuance of the notice given plaintiff on March 12th, was hence nugatory and without effect. The theory of that proposition was and is that (as we have seen the counsel for plaintiff contends) there is no procedure prescribed by law for a public hearing of charges against a probationary teacher and his dismissal for cause upon such a hearing; that, therefore, the allegations of the answer setting up the proceedings before the trustees on March 24th, eventuating in his dismissal by the trustees, were immaterial and should have been stricken out, and, consequently, evidence of acts and conduct of the plaintiff as a teacher subsequent to the date of the service upon him of the notice of dismissal of February 25th, and which tended to substantiate the charges set forth in the notice of March 12th, was not only immaterial and irrelevant, but prejudicial to the rights of the accused at the trial. These points are disposed of adversely to the position of the plaintiff thereon by the earlier discussion herein. The objection by plaintiff to the following part of the court's charge to the jury has likewise been disposed of:

"Said trustees were authorized by the law to dismiss the plaintiff as principal of said school during the school term for cause and after a fair and impartial public hearing."

There are certain other objections to the court's rulings as to the legal propriety of certain evidence which do not merit special notice herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBBS v. PETERS et al. (Civ. 4265.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 18, 1927.

Frauds, statute of §118(3)—Vendor's letters, offering to execute deed on unfulfilled condition, and declining to sign deed sent her, held not "memorandum" of new contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 1698).

Vendor's letter to bank, indicating willingness to execute deed on payment of certain sum within stated time, which lapsed without acceptance of offer, and her undated letter to title company stating, in reply to letter inclosing deed for signature, that all transactions concerning property must be done through bank, which would instruct her when deed was to be signed, held not a note or memorandum, sufficient under Civ. Code, § 1624, to constitute written contract required by section 1698 to alter such a contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Louise H. Gibbs against Jack Peters and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Morin, of Pasadena, for appellant.
Ray C. Eberhard and Floyd M. Hinshaw, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. This is an action to quiet title. Plaintiff was the owner of a certain parcel of real property. She and one of the defendants Peters entered into a certain agreement in writing, whereby she agreed to sell the property to Peters and he agreed to buy it. The contract provided for the payment of the purchase price in certain monthly installments. Peters assigned to defendant Sharpe his interest in the contract, and the latter promptly paid the installments due under it up to a certain time, whereupon, under date November 6, 1920, plaintiff wrote to a certain bank a letter in which she said:

"This is to authorize you to accept of Mr. John Sharpe $1,200 and to cancel his debt to me on [the real property mentioned]. Providing this note to be placed in your hands and stated amount $1,200 be placed to my account in your bank not later than 1:30 p. m. on Monday of Nov. 8, 1920."

Sharpe, however, received notice of the proposition embraced in this letter so late that he was unable to pay into the bank, within the time limit fixed by the letter, the amount named in it, but he did lodge the money with a certain title company. Thereafter certain conversations were had between plaintiff and Sharpe, and following that the title company, under date November 15th, wrote plaintiff a letter, in which it was said:

"Inclosed find grant deed, Gibbs to Sharpe which kindly sign and have acknowledged before a notary public and return to this office together with your demand for use of same, immediately. We have been holding funds to pay for this instrument for several days and the other parties to our escrow are becoming impatient over the delay caused by your failure to call at this office and sign the deed as originally arranged. Kindly give this matter your immediate attention. * * *

To this letter plaintiff, by an undated note, answered thus:

"In reply to yours of Nov. 15 would say: All transactions concerning [the real property already mentioned] must be done through [the bank above referred to]. I have communicated with them concerning this matter and they will instruct me when a deed is to be signed. I also hold a copy of the original agreement with Mr. Sharpe which he has not fulfilled."

Under date November 17th the title company wrote the bank the following letter:

"We are in receipt of a letter from Louise H. Gibbs * * * advising that all matters pertaining to a deed from Mrs. Gibbs to Mary A. Sharpe * * * must be done through your office, as you hold for collection the contract of Mrs. Gibbs covering above property, in favor of Jack Peters. We are inclosing herewith a deed, which would ask that you kindly have Mrs. Gibbs sign and have acknowledged and return to this office and we will promptly remit the stipulated amount of $1,200 as per agreement of the parties concerned. As we are unable to close this escrow on account of the long delay in waiting for this deed, would thank you for your prompt attention to the matter. However, we cannot pay for the deed until the instrument is delivered to this office which, however, seems to be contrary to Mrs. Gibbs' demands."

The president of the bank then wrote appellant, in a letter dated November 18th:

"I am inclosing herewith grant deed covering property formerly sold to Mr. Jack Peters. The title company advises us that you have agreed to accept $1,200 in settlement of your contract. If that is true, please advise us to that effect and return the inclosed deed properly executed before a notary public."

Appellant answered this letter by a memorandum written at the bottom of the sheet which contained it. She said:

"The above statement was true Nov. 8 but when Mr. Sharpe failed to comply to my request to have $1,200 in your care not later than Nov. 8 I found that I would be obliged to collect that amount from another source at a great loss to me. I do not need the money now, so we will let it remain as it is on monthly payments."

This communication ended the negotiations between the parties. Sharpe, apparently electing to stand upon the letters, together with such oral negotiations as ran along with them, discontinued the payment of the installments called for by the contract of sale, and thus put himself in default. On December 16, 1921, more than a year after the negotiations were terminated, appellant filed her complaint in the present action. It was in the usual form of a complaint to quiet title. Sharpe in his answer denied the allegations of appellant's pleading, and set up an affirmative defense, in which he alleged the assignment of the contract of sale by Peters to himself, and averred that he was the owner of the property involved "under and by virtue" of it. Decree went for defendant Sharpe, and this appeal by Mrs. Gibbs is the result.

Respondent Sharpe asks an affirmance of the judgment on the ground that he was entitled to a deed from appellant under the negotiations which took place between them. Appellant insists that the right to a deed does not exist because of the language of section 1698 of the Civil Code:

"A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement and not otherwise."

Respondent counters with the contention that the writings signed by appellant, notably the undated letter in response to the communication of the title company written on November 15, 1920, amounted to a new agreement between the parties, and that they were sufficient to operate as such, under the language of the opening sentence of section 1624 of the same Code to the effect that certain contracts are invalid "unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent."

We can see nothing in the writings signed by appellant which constitute a note or memorandum of any contract, no matter what was attempted to be agreed to during the oral negotiations between the parties. In her letter of November 6th to the bank appellant indicated a willingness to execute a deed upon the payment, within a stated time, of a certain sum of money. This offer was not accepted, and all proceedings under it expired by lapse of the time set. Her undated letter to the title company shows neither that she agreed, nor had theretofore agreed, to extend the time fixed in her first letter, or that she agreed, or had theretofore agreed, to execute a deed upon any consideration whatever, except upon a compliance with the terms of the original contract of sale made to Peters. In truth, her letter shows no promise whatever, nor is it a note or memorandum of any promise she had already made. It is unnecessary to refer to other defects in the paper when it is sought to be considered as an effective note or memorandum within the statute.

Judgment reversed.

GARDINER v. HOLCOMB et al. (Civ. 5199.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 15, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨432(12)—Evidence held not to sustain finding that director's use of corporate notes as collateral in borrowing money for corporation was unauthorized.

Evidence held not to sustain finding that neither corporation nor president never delivered or authorized delivery or use of corporate notes by corporate director as collateral security for purpose of borrowing money for corporation.

2. Appeal and error ⇨989—Appellate court will inquire into findings only to ascertain if supported by evidence.

Appellate court is precluded from making any further inquiry of findings of trial court other than to ascertain if there is any evidence of substantial character, and not inherently weak or improbable, which supports the finding.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Trial court's findings must be supported by evidence, and mere conclusion or general statement is insufficient.

Findings of trial court must be supported by evidence and against positive and direct evidence of a fact a mere conclusion or general statement will not meet the definition of substantial or any evidence.

4. Subrogation ⇨41(6)—Evidence held not to sustain finding that corporate president signed note without knowledge that corporate notes were pledged as collateral, as affecting his right on paying note to hold collateral furnished by fellow indorser.

Evidence held not to sustain finding that corporate president, at time of becoming surety on note, had no knowledge that notes of the corporation were pledged as collateral, as bearing on his right on payment of note to recover against collateral furnished by fellow indorser.

5. Bills and notes ⇨237—Forbearance to sue on note secured by collateral corporate notes held sufficient consideration to render corporate president signing renewal note maker for value as concerned accommodation indorser.

Forbearance by holder of note secured by corporate notes as collateral to proceed with right of action against corporation and guarantors including corporate president held a sufficient existing and moving consideration sufficient to render the corporate president signing renewal note a maker for value, and not an accommodation party or surety, so far as concerned person signing such renewal note as accommodation party only.

6. Bills and notes ⇨49—"Accommodation paper" is bill or note signed without consideration for purpose of accommodating some other person (Civ. Code, § 3110).

"Accommodation paper," under Civ. Code, § 3110, is a bill or note to which the drawer or maker has put his name without consideration for purpose of accommodating, by a loan of his credit, some other person who is to provide for the bill or note when it falls due.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodation Paper.]

7. Bills and notes ⇨49—Accommodation paper is usually in consideration of benefits expressly or impliedly promised.

Accommodation paper is usually in consideration of benefits expressly or impliedly promised, rather than as a favor to maker of note, and, if maker receives consideration directly from payee, it is not accommodation.

8. Bills and notes ⇨49—Where person lending his credit to aid maker seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate object of his own, act is not for "accommodation."

While a party's intent may be to aid a maker of note by lending his credit, if he seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate objects of his own, and not simply to aid maker, the act is not for "accommodation."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodate—Accommodation.]

9. Bills and notes ⇨49—Corporate president, signing renewal note secured by collateral corporate notes guaranteed individually by directors, held not "accommodation maker."

Where corporate notes guaranteed by individual indorsements by directors were pledged as collateral security to note given by one of directors for purpose of procuring funds of corporation, corporate president, subsequently signing renewal of such note, held not an accommodation maker, since he received a valuable consideration equally with directors executing note.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodation Maker.]

10. Bills and notes ⇨237—Accommodation indorser is not liable for contribution or otherwise to one signing note not as accommodation party.

Indorser for accommodation only for purpose of lending credit cannot be held liable either for contribution or otherwise, where other person signing note which was secured by collateral notes of corporation of which he was president, which note was guaranteed individually by directors, was not accommodation party.

11. Contribution ⇨1—Person paying only equitable share cannot require contribution.

One who has paid no more than what he in equity and good conscience might have paid cannot require contribution.

12. Bills and notes ⇨49—Accommodated party may not sue accommodation party.

Party for whose accommodation paper was made may not sue accommodation party.

13. Bills and notes ⇨49—Person signing note for valuable consideration cannot seek recovery from other person signing purely as accommodation party.

Corporate president having signed note secured by collateral corporate note in turn guar-anted by directors individually, having signed note for valuable consideration, and being accommodated thereby, can seek no recovery from other person signing note purely as accommodation party.

14. Subrogation ⚡31(2)—Corporate president, paying note indorsed by him, held not entitled to hold collateral of accommodation indorser pledged also to secure individual note of director also paid by president and thereafter repaid to him.

Where corporate president, signing note executed by director and secured by collateral corporate notes guaranteed by directors individually, paid off such note, and also another note of director, he was not entitled to hold other collateral security deposited by accommodation indorser, because of paying such individual note of director, where such note has been discharged and collateral attached thereto released.

15. Husband and wife ⚡268(1)—Wife held not liable to extent of separate holdings for money appropriated by husband on theory that it became part of community.

Wife held not independently and individually liable to extent of her separate holdings for money appropriated by husband on theory that it necessarily became a part of the community, since to establish such principle of law would be to destroy wife's capacity to hold public property at all.

16. Subrogation ⚡2—Indorser, paying note, cannot recover on collateral pledged by accommodation party thereto.

Where corporate president, signing note secured by collateral corporate notes, paid amount due thereunder, he was not entitled to recover against collateral pledged by accommodation party to such note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action in interpleader by J. R. Gardiner against Wilhelmina Johanna Holcomb, N. Frank Morse, and another, wherein defendants named filed cross-complaints. From a judgment in favor of defendant N. Frank Morse against defendant Wilhelmina Johanna Holcomb, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Wilhelmina Johanna Holcomb appeals. Reversed.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bishop & Wellington, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

Marks & Launer, of Fullerton, and J. A. Gardiner, of Santa Ana, for trustee.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by Wilhelmina Johanna Holcomb, defendant, cross-defendant, and cross-complainant, from a judgment rendered against her and in favor of N. Frank Morse, defendant, cross-defendant, and cross-complainant, which said judgment awarded to N. Frank Morse the sum of $11,319.49 paid into court by plaintiff, and determined that appellant had no right or claim thereto. The order of the court, denying appellant's motion for a new trial, is also before us for review.

Plaintiff, Gardiner, commenced this action in interpleader. He asserted that he held a contract for the purchase of certain lands from defendants Wilhelmina Holcomb and Meta Zeyn and one C. E. Holcomb; that, pursuant to the terms of said contract, he was obligated to pay a certain sum of money; and that defendant N. Frank Morse claimed some interest in the contract and the payments due thereunder. The said plaintiff asked that he be permitted to pay into court the sums due and that the various parties defendant litigate their claims thereto. Thereafter it was agreed by all parties that plaintiff pay to the clerk of the superior court all moneys remaining due on the contract and receive his deed for the premises. And it was further agreed and stipulated that of the moneys so paid the defendant Zeyn be paid one-half without further suit and that she be dismissed from the proceedings. Both of these stipulations were executed. The amount remaining was $11,319.49, and the issue in the trial court, and likewise here, is between Wilhelmina Johanna Holcomb and N. Frank Morse. Each of these named claims the fund and they have set up their claims through various pleadings. While one C. E. Holcomb was named as a party to the original contract, it was agreed that he had no interest therein and was but a nominal party.

To avoid needless repetition and possible confusion, the defendant Wilhelmina J. Holcomb will be hereinafter referred to simply as Mrs. Holcomb, and the original contract of purchase and sale entered into between the plaintiff, Gardiner, and the various defendants, will be referred to hereinafter as the Gardiner contract. And it may be noted without further repetition that C. E. Holcomb is and was at all of the times embraced within the history of the transactions involved the husband of Mrs. Holcomb.

In order that there may be a clear understanding of the points here for determination, it is necessary to detail at some length the facts of the case as presented in the trial court.

C. E. Holcomb and N. Frank Morse, with others, were the directors and owned almost the entire capital stock outstanding of the Pacific Mausoleum Company, a corporation, which will hereafter be referred to as the corporation. This corporation had been engaged in business for some years, and during the years from 1915 to 1919 had considerable difficulty in securing funds to carry on its business or to progress as outlined by its directorate. Much indebtedness had accrued and the need for funds was acute. Accordingly in April, 1919, at a regular meeting of its stockholders, the corporation decided to borrow the sum of $80,000, and to execute a trust deed upon its property for that amount. On the same date and following the meeting of the stockholders the directors of the corporation held a special meeting and took up this matter of raising funds. It was by them decided, and the decision evidenced by a resolution spread upon the minutes, that the corporation proceed to negotiate a loan in the sum of $80,000, and that such loan should be secured by a deed of trust upon certain property of the corporation. From the minutes it appeared that negotiations had been carried on through C. E. Holcomb, a director, and he had arranged that a person named Jacobs and another Lyons should receive a bonus for placing the loan. The resolution provided that the loan of $80,000 should be evidenced by 16 notes each in the amount of $5,000, and that as security for the total amount the corporation should execute a trust deed to be placed upon certain property in Oakland, Cal. It was a part of the resolution that said notes and each of them be further secured by the individual indorsements of the directors of the corporation. Accordingly the corporation did execute, through its president and secretary, the 16 notes each in the amount of $5,000, and upon each note was indorsed the unconditional guaranty of C. E. Holcomb and N. Frank Morse and three other directors. The notes of the corporation were signed by Morse, as president; and one Pomeroy, as secretary, and each note was dated April 5, 1919, and payable 12 months after date. The payee named in the notes was C. E. Holcomb. These notes, executed as aforesaid, were then sent to the corporation's assistant secretary in Oakland for the purpose of consummating the proposed loan through Lyons and Jacobs. The record in the case stops with the statement that the proposed deal did not go through, and the corporation was left where it started. In some manner the 16 notes were then delivered to Mr. Holcomb. Within a short time the said Holcomb sold one of the notes for its face value, $5,000, and the proceeds of the sale were turned over to the corporation. Thereafter on June 30, 1919, the said C. E. Holcomb borrowed from the First National Bank of Los Angeles the sum of $40,000, and as security for the payment of the loan made and delivered to the bank a promissory note, and deposited with the bank as collateral security for the payment of the said note 10 promissory notes of the corporation, each in the amount of $5,000, and being 10 of the 16 notes hereinbefore referred to. In December of 1919 the note of C. E. Holcomb became due and the same was renewed by him.

In June, 1920, the bank notified Holcomb that it considered the security for his indebtedness to be inadequate and demanded that he furnish more collateral or greater security, with the alternative that the bank would proceed to enforce payment of the note theretofore given. At this juncture C. E. Holcomb approached Mrs. Holcomb and requested that she sign the note with him, telling her that the notes of the corporation were pledged and that no liability would be fastened upon her, as the notes of the corporation had all been indorsed by the directors. Without consideration of any sort and for the purpose of lending her credit to the maker, Mrs. Holcomb joined in the execution of a new note to the bank for the $40,000. As heretofore detailed Mrs. Holcomb was a one-half owner of the Gardiner contract and of the proceeds thereof. This ownership was separate in her, having come to her through inheritance, and there being no claim or evidence that the contract or the proceeds thereof or the property involved therein in any respect lost its character as separate property or ever was dedicated to or became merged in the community of Mrs. Holcomb and C. E. Holcomb, her husband. Upon joining in the note she pledged therewith the Gardiner contract, by assignment to the bank, as further security for the note. C. E. Holcomb likewise solicited Morse to go on this same $40,000 note at the time of renewal in 1920, explaining to Morse that the bank required further security under threat of enforced collection. Thereupon Morse became surety on the note, and the note with the bank was then as to the bank the note of C. E. Holcomb, Mrs. Holcomb, and Morse. In May, 1921, Morse paid the note and also another note that C. E. Holcomb had with the bank in the sum of $6,000, taking from the bank an assignment of all of the collateral deposited. Here it may be stated that while the collateral deposited was security of all of the C. E. Holcomb indebtedness, yet the $6,000 note was otherwise secured, and Morse was paid off on this and that note delivered up and does not enter into the instant controversy. The collateral retained by Morse was the Gardiner contract and the 10 corporation notes before described.

On this state of facts Morse contends that he became the owner of the Gardiner contract and entitled to the proceeds thereof, in so far as the amount otherwise due Mrs. Holcomb is concerned.

The facts as narrated hereinbefore are the generally admitted facts leaving out the facts over which a controversy arises. Therefore, before taking up the questions of law applicable, it is further necessary to make determination from the findings or otherwise of other material facts.

The court found in finding I that neither the corporation nor N. Frank Morse ever delivered or authorized the delivery to or use of said 10 notes by C. E. Holcomb as collateral security for the purpose of borrowing money for the corporation from First National Bank of Los Angeles. Neither did said C. E. Holcomb have authority to make any assignment or transfer thereof or representations concerning the same for that purpose. And in finding II, that neither the bank nor Morse ever had notice of the misuse and appropriation of said 10 notes, or of funds borrowed by said C. E. Holcomb, until after the signing and delivery by the parties of the renewal note to the bank. And in finding V, that both Mrs. Holcomb and Morse signed the note in question as cosureties, and neither individually received any property or thing for the placing of their names on said notes. Appellant attacks these findings and each of them as being unsupported by the evidence.

With respect to finding V it would appear that this is in part a conclusion of law, as well as a finding of fact, and possibly a direct finding as to the capacity in which the parties signed might have been omitted. The entire case centers about this finding, and if this one particular finding is sustained, it would determine the case. It is a mixed question of law and fact and will be so treated.

We feel it needless, and it would perhaps necessitate much repetition, to take up each of these disputed findings and review the evidence applicable to each. The record discloses that there is little real conflict in the facts, and by a brief review of the evidence, in addition to what already appears, the conclusion will be manifest.

After the execution of the 16 notes referred to hereinbefore the evidence is uncontradicted that all of the officers and directors of the corporation knew that the plan proposed had fallen through. They knew that these notes were not going to be used to negotiate any loan in Oakland for the amount of $80,000, and that this scheme of financing was abandoned. This was in April, 1919. Then in the month of May, following, the corporation received from C. E. Holcomb the sum of $5,000 as proceeds from one of the notes delivered to a new party. The secretary of the corporation somewhat evasively testified that this in itself would not indicate that the original plan was abandoned, because it might have been that the parties with whom the original negotiations were planned might have been able to take part only of the amount. On this same point Morse, the president of the corporation, testified practically to the same effect, but added further that the board of directors in regular meeting had authorized the sale of this one $5,000 note. C. E. Holcomb testified that after the original plan had failed he explained to the other directors that the only way money could be obtained was on the personal note of himself secured by these notes as collateral, and that he was given the notes and told to get the money. Morse testified that he was at all times the president of the corporation, as well as one of the directors; that the corporation and its directors looked to C. E. Holcomb to finance the building operations and to finance the corporation and to supply money from time to time when necessary; that previous to the time he (Morse) signed the note in question he knew that 10 $5,000 notes had been turned over to C. E. Holcomb to raise money at various banks; and that the minutes of the corporation seem to have called for the 10 $5,000 notes to be sold or disposed of at a discount.

Morse further testified that the 16 $5,000 notes were issued for the purpose of taking up the outstanding obligations of the company, and that C. E. Holcomb was about the only one who appeared to be in a position where he might be able to finance the company, and the way he financed it was by his securing loans for the company at the various banks.

[1] Again Morse testifies that the corporation did deliver the said 10 notes to C. E. Holcomb; that the latter did receive the said promissory notes as trustee for said corporation, and did promise that he would negotiate the said notes for the use and benefit of said corporation, and would pay to said corporation all money received by him from his negotiating or selling said notes or any of them; and that the board of directors had authorized Holcomb to sell the notes.

The only evidence to sustain the finding is evidence to the effect that no specific authorization appears in the minute books of the corporation, coupled with the bald statement of the secretary that he knew of no authorization, and likewise the general statement of Morse that, as far as he knew, the minutes never showed Holcomb authorized to negotiate or sell the notes other than as in the first resolution stated.

As to the necessity of formal resolution or the requirement as to the minutes showing the fact, reference may be had to Leitch v. Marx, 21 Cal. App. 208, 131 P. 328; Cyclops Iron Works v. Chico Ice Co., 34 Cal. App. 15, 166 P. 821.

[2] On the question of the conclusiveness of the findings of the trial court we may concede that the rule of law governing appellate procedure precludes this court from making further inquiry than to ascertain if there is any evidence of a substantial character, and not inherently weak or improbable, which supports the finding, and, if such be disclosed, the finding should stand irrespective of what evidence there might be opposed to the finding.

[3] However, without regard to the qualifications of the rule, but accepting it in all its strength, there is still the necessity that there be some support for the finding, and that, as against the positive and direct evidence of a fact, a mere conclusion or general statement will not serve to meet the definition of substantial or any evidence. See Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 152 Cal. 574, 93 P. 377, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 1159; 2 Cal. Jur. 918 et seq.

We conclude that finding I is not supported by the evidence and that there is no substantial evidence to support it.

[4] As to finding II to the effect that Morse never knew that the notes of the corporation were pledged as collateral when he signed the $40,000 note in question, much the same evidence is applicable to this finding. The finding has its only support in the bare statement of Morse that he had no knowledge of this fact. On this we have the testimony of C. E. Holcomb that he explained this fact to Morse prior to his going on the note; also the testimony of Morse as hereinbefore detailed covering the activities of Holcomb and his connection with the corporate finances and banks. And in addition we have the physical fact of the note itself containing the statement that the notes were held as collateral. From the record before us there is no contention that the fact of the 10 notes being collateral did not appear on the face of the note before signature by Morse. Morse admits that he read the note and that he signed it, and then simply adds that he had no knowledge that the notes were part of the collateral. It is inferred that possibly the notes were changed after signature, but there is no evidence even suggesting such a course.

We conclude that finding II is not supported by the evidence. This court will, of course, decline to make findings, but we thus review the findings made preliminary to a discussion of the controlling finding, to the end that the views expressed herein may not be restricted by findings that might conflict therewith.

The main issue in the case goes to the character and liability of the parties signing the $40,000 note in question as between themselves. The appellant contends that Mrs. Holcomb was purely an accommodation party and that C. E. Holcomb and Morse were the accommodated parties. Respondent contends that both Mrs. Holcomb and Morse were sureties for C. E. Holcomb, granting possibly that they were both accommodation parties.

At the time Mrs. Holcomb and Morse went on these notes the situation may be thus summarized: The corporation Pacific Mausoleum Company had issued 16 notes secured by deed of trust, payable to C. E. Holcomb. The purpose in view was the raising of money to meet the obligations of the company then due and to provide funds to some extent for carrying on the corporation's business. Both C. E. Holcomb and Morse, as directors, together with the other directors, individually guaranteed the payment of each of these notes. While it was planned that the money could be raised from a certain source, the source failed, and the notes were given to C. E. Holcomb to negotiate. Incidentally it might be noted that C. E. Holcomb and Morse each owned approximately 12,000 shares of the stock of the company out of a total of 113,000 shares issued. The total stock owned by the directors guaranteeing the notes was 44,995 shares. Morse knew at all times that C. E. Holcomb was negotiating these notes with various banks and also of his own guaranty thereon. C. E. Holcomb, in procuring the money evidenced by the $40,000 note, had pledged 10 of the notes in question, and the bank with whom the pledge was deposited as security was threatening enforced collection and foreclosure of the pledge. With these facts known to Morse, as the evidence discloses, he signed the renewal note and thereafter paid the same.

As to Mrs. Holcomb it is conceded that she received nothing, was not a stockholder in the corporation, and comes squarely within the definition of an accommodation party.

[5] The court found as a fact that of the $40,000 realized from these notes the sum of $18,000 was paid to the corporation and that C. E. Holcomb appropriated to his own use the balance. It might be here noted that C. E. Holcomb claimed that the said balance was due him from the corporation for a prior indebtedness. Whatever may have been the true condition, the corporation was not a party to this action, nor was the bank; and surely we cannot anticipate what defenses might have existed as against enforcement of the corporation notes and the guaranty attached to each. The bank holding these 10 corporation notes, in the event of default of the promissory note of C. E. Holcomb, for which they were collateral, had an undoubted right of action against the corporation and against the guarantors on the notes; and the finding of the court in this action does not in any way determine the corporation's liability or the liability of the guarantors. And with this right of action the forbearance to proceed was a sufficient, existing, and moving consideration, sufficient to render Morse a maker for value, and not an accommodation party or a surety, as far as concerns Mrs. Holcomb.

[6] Accommodation paper is a bill or note to which the drawer or maker has put his name without consideration for the purpose of accommodating by a loan of his credit some other person who is to provide for the bill or note when it falls due. Civ. Code, § 3110; 8 Cor. Jur. p. 252.

[7, 8] Accommodation paper is not often issued gratuitously; on the contrary, it is usually in consideration of benefits expressly or impliedly promised rather than as a favor to the maker of the note. If a maker receives consideration directly from the payee it is not an accommodation. While a party's intent may be to aid a maker of a note by lending his credit, if he seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate objects of his own and not simply to aid the maker the act is not for accommodation. Thompson v. Whitney, 17 Hawaii, 107 et seq.

Accommodation paper means commercial paper made, accepted, or indorsed for the benefit of another, without consideration. It is made for the purpose of a loan of credit to the person accommodated. A loan of credit is the universal test of the character of the paper. In re Quality Shop (C. C. A.) 205 F. 266.

[9, 10] From these references to the general characteristics of accommodation paper it is clear that Morse was not an accommodation maker on the note here involved. It seems hardly to be questioned that he did receive a valuable consideration equally with C. E. Holcomb. In support of this conclusion the following cases are cited: Cushing v. Gore, 15 Mass. 69; Interstate Trust Co. v. Irwin, 138 La. 325, 70 So. 313; Reed v. Pueblo First Nat. Bank, 23 Colo. 380, 48 P. 507; Backer v. Grummett, 39 Cal. App. 101, 178 P. 312. Indeed, it seems so obvious from a mere recital of the facts that Morse was merely substituting his own obligation as well as that of C. E. Holcomb. Such being the situation, and it being conceded that Mrs. Holcomb had no interest either in the corporation note nor as a stockholder of the corporation, and being purely an indorser for accommodation and for the purpose of lending her credit to the transaction, she cannot be held liable either for contribution or otherwise.

[11] The principle underlying contribution is purely equitable in origin and application; and it is well-settled law that one who has paid no more than what he in equity and good conscience might have paid cannot require proportionate contribution under the facts here. Backer v. Grummett, 39 Cal. App. 101, 178 P. 312; American Bonding Co. v. Nat. Bank, 99 Am. St. Rep. 480; Allen v. Perrine, 103 Ky. 516, 45 S. W. 500; Brown v. Sheldon State Bank, 139 Iowa, 83, 117 N. W. 289.

[12] In Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 137 P. 9, is announced the general doctrine, likewise applicable to the case at bar, that the party for whose accommodation the paper was made may not sue the accommodation party.

[13] Mrs. Holcomb being purely an accommodation party, and Morse having signed the note for a valuable consideration, and being accommodated within the rules governing, it follows that he could seek no recovery from her. It may be here added that the trial court made a finding of fact that it did not appear that Pacific Mausoleum Company was not able to pay all the notes.

There are other points raised by appellant which it becomes unnecessary to discuss. However, respondent makes various contentions to support the judgment, and we may briefly dispose thereof.

[14] It appears that when Morse paid off the $40,000 note the bank held also another note of Morse in the amount of $6,000, and that under the collateral deposit the Gardiner contract was liable as security for this note. Before the bank would release the collateral Morse was obliged to pay off the $6,000 note. Respondent urges that he holds the Gardiner contract thus received by him and is entitled to the proceeds thereof irrespective of the other note. There are two answers to this. The lesser note has been discharged and the collateral attached thereto has been released and the note delivered up to the maker; also the amount remaining due thereon was only $2,000, and even if unpaid the liability of the Gardiner contract would still be far less than the amount here in controversy.

Another point urged by respondent is based upon a finding of the court that, of the $40,000 secured by C. E. Holcomb, the sum of $18,000 was given to the corporation, and that the remaining $22,000 went into and was used for the benefit of the community property of himself and Mrs. Holcomb, and that at the time C. E. Holcomb borrowed the said sum of $40,000 he was a director of the Pacific Mausoleum Company, and that at all times subsequent thereto the said C. E. Holcomb held and now holds stock in said company as the community property of himself and Mrs. Holcomb.

[15] Little aid can be given respondent from this finding, even conceding that it is supported in fact. It is conceded, however, by all sides that the only support of the finding is the presumption that all property not owned by either spouse at the time of marriage, or subsequently acquired by gift, devise, bequest, or inheritance, etc., is community property. We are not going to review the history of the community idea at this time. The Supreme Court, in the recent case of Stewart v. Stewart, 249 P. 197, has settled and determined just what the rights of the wife are in respect to the community; and the law as announced there precludes consideration of the liability of Mrs. Holcomb under the finding here discussed. It is apparent that duties and rights are correlative; and if it were the law that the separate property of the wife were liable in every transaction wherein a presumption arose that the community property may have been benefited, then the doctrine of Stewart v. Stewart needs instant revision. To hold that, because C. E. Holcomb appropriated money of the corporation, necessarily it became a part of the community, and that, therefore, it follows that the wife is independently and individually liable to the extent of her separate holdings.

would be establishing a new principle of law, and one destructive of the wife's capacity to hold separate property at all.

If the respondent seeks to make Mrs. Holcomb a principal of the note in question by reason of the fact that her husband was a director and stockholder, and that the stock was community property, then a complete new theory is interjected into the case, because if Mrs. Holcomb becomes a principal by reason of her community interest in the stock it surely follows that Morse would be a principal by reason of his individual interest. It then follows that the note has been discharged, and the present action fails.

[16] Finally, respondent contends that he is not seeking any recovery from Mrs. Holcomb by way of contribution, but that he stands upon the claim that he has paid the note as surety and is entitled to the collateral, regardless of the status of the one who owned the collateral or who might have pledged the same; in other words, his contention is that, regardless of the fact that Mrs. Holcomb may be an accommodation party, and conceding the law to be that the party accommodated cannot recover against the accommodation party, nevertheless, the respondent can retain the collateral that Mrs. Holcomb pledged by way of further accommodation. Illustrating, if A. is purely an accommodation maker with B. for the accommodation of B. and without consideration, and pledges collateral for the payment of B.'s debt, then B., upon payment, can retain the benefit of A.'s collateral. We deem this contention unworthy of discussion.

Many other questions have arisen out of the facts of this case and have been urged by the respective parties. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the same, as all of them hinge upon the determinations here made.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed and likewise the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

WILLETT et al v. SCHMEISER MFG. CO.
et al. (Civ. 5788.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 8, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1040(12)—Overruling demurrer to one defendant's counterclaim for price of goods sold only by it held not prejudicial, though complaint for money loaned charged defendants jointly.

In action for moneys loaned, plaintiffs were not prejudiced by overruling of demurrer to counterclaim solely in favor of one defendant, though complaint charged both defendants jointly, where court concluded from evidence that plaintiffs loaned no money to other defendant, and that counterclaimant only sold plaintiffs goods which were basis of counterclaim.

2. Set-off and counterclaim ⇨42—Counterclaim solely in favor of defendant, which alone sold goods on which based, held permissible in action for moneys loaned, though complaint charged defendants jointly (Code Civ. Proc. § 438).

Where plaintiffs, suing for moneys loaned, loaned none to individual defendant, and corporate defendant only sold goods to plaintiffs, counterclaim solely in its favor for price thereof was permissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, though complaint charged defendants jointly.

3. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—In view of presumption, failure to make certain findings cannot be considered on judgment roll appeal.

Alleged errors in not making certain findings cannot be sustained on appeal based on judgment roll; it being presumed, in favor of judgment, that no evidence was introduced which would have sustained such findings.

4. Trial ⇨396(3)—Findings as to when leveler was delivered and accepted and purchase price became due held not outside issues presented by counterclaim for price.

Findings that defendant, on January 27, 1922, sold and delivered to plaintiffs one leveler for agreed price, and that plaintiffs accepted delivery, and purchase price became due on March 1, 1922, when satisfactory trial was completed and term of credit expired, held not outside issues presented by counterclaim for price alleging sale and delivery within two years before June 12, 1922, to be paid for nine days after trial, which was had more than 60 days before June 13, 1922.

5. Appeal and error ⇨931(3)—Trial court will be deemed to have inferred facts supporting judgment from facts found, and appellate court will not draw contrary inference therefrom.

Trial court's findings will be construed to uphold, rather than defeat, its judgment thereon, and, when other facts supporting judgment may be inferred from facts found, such inference will be deemed to have been made by court, and appellate court will not draw therefrom any contrary inference.

6. Appeal and error ⇨544(1)—Whether court should have made finding giving allowances as for credit terms on goods sold cannot be considered on appeal on judgment roll.

Whether court should have made finding giving plaintiffs allowances as for terms of credit on levelers, for price of which defendant counterclaimed, cannot be considered on appeal based on judgment roll; record showing no evidence of any term of credit.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Plaintiffs, recovering nearly $50 more than entitled to, were not prejudiced by absence of finding entitling them to $3.25 interest.

Plaintiffs, given judgment for nearly $50 more than they were entitled to, in action for moneys loaned, were not prejudiced by error, if any, in not finding them entitled to credit terms on sale of goods for price of which defendant counterclaimed, where they were thereby deprived of no more than $3.25 interest on amount of their loans.

8. Appeal and error ◊704(2)—Party claiming that findings contradicted pleadings should bring up evidence.

Party claiming that findings improperly contradicted pleadings should bring up evidence, so that court of review can see whether any errors were committed.

9. Sales ◊365—Findings that levelers were delivered on January 17th and 27th, and that buyers accepted delivery March 1st, held not contradictory.

Findings that levelers, for price of which defendant counterclaimed, were sold and delivered to plaintiffs on January 17th and 27th, and that plaintiffs accepted delivery on March 1st, held not contradictory, though not clear as to date of delivery.

10. Sales ◊365—Findings that articles were delivered within two years "last past," and delivery accepted on certain date, held to show delivery before filing of counterclaim for price; reference being to date of filing complaint.

Findings, signed December 29, 1923, that defendant sold and delivered articles, for price of which it counterclaimed, within two years last past, and that plaintiff accepted delivery on or about May 1, 1922, held not insufficient to support judgment on counterclaim as not showing delivery before filing thereof; language being referable to date of filing of complaint June 12, 1922.

11. Set-off and counterclaim ◊55—Debtor's noninterest-bearing claim should be set off against creditor's interest drawing claim as of date of maturity.

Debtor's noninterest-bearing claim should be set off against creditor's interest drawing claim as of date it became due and owing.

12. Interest ◊47(1)—Filing of counterclaim for price of articles sold constitutes "demand," required to entitle seller to interest (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 1).

Filing of counterclaim for price of articles sold to plaintiffs constitutes demand, required by St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 1, to entitle seller to interest, as of date of filing.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Walter M. Willett and another against the Schmeiser Manufacturing Company and another. From the judgment entered, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. C. Lowell, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Grant & Bailey, of Woodland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action to recover a judgment for moneys loaned. The defendants appeared separately and answered. The Schmeiser Manufacturing Company in its answer set up a counterclaim in three different counts. A trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. Findings were made in favor of the plaintiffs on their two separate causes of action, and in favor of the defendant the Schmeiser Manufacturing Company on its counterclaim, and against the plaintiffs and in favor of the defendant T. G. Schmeiser. A judgment was entered in accordance with the findings, and the plaintiffs have appealed on the judgment roll. The appellants enumerate sixteen alleged errors. They may be classified as follows: (1) That the trial court erred in overruling their demurrer to the counterclaim of the defendant corporation; (2) in failing to make certain findings; (3) that it made certain findings outside of the issues; (4) that certain findings contradicted the pleadings; (5) that certain findings are conflicting; (6) that the findings do not support the judgment; and (7) that the judgment in favor of the Schmeiser Manufacturing Company should not have included interest prior to the date of the filing of the counterclaim by that company. We will discuss the several points as classified by us in the order stated.

[1, 2] The plaintiffs assert that their complaint was an action by them charging the defendants jointly. They assert that the counterclaim was for a claim solely in favor of the company, and, as such, that it was not permissible because it did not run in favor of both defendants. It is not at all clear that plaintiffs' complaint charged the defendants jointly. Conceding, solely for the purposes of this decision, that it did and that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer interposed by the plaintiffs, the alleged error was without prejudice. As will hereinafter appear, on the trial, and after hearing the evidence, the trial court reached the conclusion that T. G. Schmeiser was not loaned any moneys by the plaintiffs, and that it was the company and not T. G. Schmeiser that sold the plaintiffs the goods, wares, and merchandise which were the basis of the counterclaim. Therefore the action was one in which the counterclaim was permissible. Code Civ. Proc. § 438; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 114, 9 P. 180, 11 P. 599.

[3] The alleged errors to the effect that the trial court failed to make certain findings cannot be sustained on this appeal. As recited above, the appeal is based on the judgment roll. On such a record it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that no evidence was introduced which would have sustained the findings which the plaintiffs claim should have been made.

[4] The appellants claim that the trial court made findings outside of the issues. We think it did not do so. The record is not a model, but it can be understood. The counterclaim in legal effect alleges:

"That within two years prior to June 12, 1922 (the date the action was commenced), the defendant sold and delivered to the plaintiffs one leveler for the agreed price of $1,085 to be paid for in cash nine days after trial had; that the trial was had more than 60 days before June 13, 1922; that the price has not been paid, and is now due and payable."

On those subjects the findings are: That on or about January 27, 1922, defendant Schmeiser Manufacturing Company sold and delivered to the plaintiffs one leveler for the agreed price of $1,085; that plaintiffs accepted delivery on March 1, 1922 (that is, on that date a satisfactory trial had been completed and the term of credit expired); that the purchase price became due and payable March 1, 1922. A similar set of facts is presented as to the other leveler. Similar reasoning is applicable.

[5-7] As to this branch of the case the rule to be followed is stated as follows:

"The findings of the trial court are to receive such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat its judgment thereon, and whenever, from the facts found by it, other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court, and upon an appeal from that judgment, this court will not draw from those facts any inference of fact contrary to that which may have been drawn by the trial court for the purpose of rendering such judgment." Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 77, 31 P. 742, 744 (22 L. R. A. 257).

If we have erred in the foregoing reasoning, the error rests in this, that the date of acceptance is a term narrower than we have used, and that the trial court should have made a finding giving the plaintiffs an allowance, as for a term of credit, of nine days on the ten-foot leveler and two weeks on the other leveler. To that suggestion there are two answers. In the first place, on the record before us we do not know that there was any evidence produced showing any term of credit. In the second place, assuming that the trial court erred when it found that the date of acceptance and the due date coincided and that the plaintiffs should have been allowed the terms of credit as pleaded, then the fact would be that the plaintiffs have, by such findings, been deprived of interest for a maximum period of two weeks on $1,100 (the amount of their loans) at 7 per cent. or a total sum of not to exceed $3.25. However, as we shall presently see, they were given a judgment that was nearly $50 more favorable to them than it should have been, and they have not been prejudiced by the error.

[8] The plaintiffs claim that certain findings contradicted the pleadings. That is frequently true. However, if a party would claim that the findings improperly contradicted the pleadings, that party should bring up the evidence that a court of review can see whether any errors were committed.

[9] The plaintiffs call to our attention the fact that, as to the levelers the trial court found that they were "sold and delivered" January 17, 1922, and January 27, 1922, respectively. They then note that it also found that "plaintiffs accepted delivery" of the levelers on March 1, 1922. Thereupon they argue that the findings are contradictory. That does not necessarily follow. The findings may not be clear as to the date of delivery, but they are not contradictory.

[10] The same condition of the pleadings and of the findings exists as to the remaining implements which are the subject matter of the counterclaim. However, the plaintiffs attack the findings as to the sales of those implements as insufficient to support the judgment. The findings as to the items mentioned in finding No. 5 and finding No. 6 are framed in the same form. Each one is "that within two years last past the defendant Schmeiser Manufacturing Company sold and delivered (naming articles). That plaintiff accepted delivery of (naming articles) on or about May 1, 1922. * * *" The complaint was filed June 12, 1922. The findings were signed December 20, 1923. The plaintiffs contend that the foregoing record does not show a delivery before the filing of the counterclaim. It certainly does. The language used was referable to the date of the filing of the complaint—not to the date the findings were signed. Metropolis, etc., Sav. Bank v. Barnett, 165 Cal. 449, 453, 132 P. 833.

[11, 12] This brings us to the point last discussed in the briefs. How was the item of interest to be computed? In the first place, there is an old rule, which must be borne in mind, and then there is a new rule, which must also be borne in mind. The old rule is as follows:

"The claim of the debtor not bearing interest, should be set off against that of the creditor drawing interest, as of the date of the time it became due and owing." Waterman on Set-Off (2d Ed.) § 663.

As found by the trial court, the two loans of the plaintiffs, $100 made in February 27, 1922, and $1,000 made March 1, 1922, each bore interest at seven per cent. As found by the trial court, the price on each leveler was "due and owing" on March 1, 1922. The total was $2,085. On the date last mentioned the amount of the loans made by the plaintiffs, principal and interest, was $1,100.06. The difference between those totals was $984.94. Until demand made by it the defendant was not entitled to interest. Stats. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 1. However, the filing of its counterclaim constituted a demand as of the date it was filed, June 30, 1922. Burks v. West, 67 Cal. App. 745, 752, 228 P. 541. On that date there was due defendant $984.94, the balance above mentioned, and also the cost of the other implements included in the counterclaim, $1,950 or the total sum of $2,934.94. The findings were signed December 20, 1923. The interest, on the balance due, $2,934.94, at seven per cent. for the period elapsing between the date the counterclaim was filed and the date of the findings, would be $302.44, and the total amount of principal and interest would be $3,237.38. However, the trial court allowed the defendant only $3,191.76. The judgment was more favorable to the appellants than the record warranted.

We find no prejudicial error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

STEWART et ux. v. SPANO. (Civ. 4408.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 12, 1927.

1. New trial —138—On failure to notify of entry of judgment held to prevent running of time for filing notice of intention to move for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 659).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, where notice of entry of judgment was not given, time within which notice of intention to move for new trial could be filed never commenced to run.

2. Appeal and error —345(1)—Failure to give notice of intention to move for new trial within 60 days after entry of judgment held to bar appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 939).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, time for taking appeal from judgment runs from actual entry of judgment and not from notice thereof, and, if notice of intention to move for new trial is not filed within 60 days after entry of judgment, right of appeal is forever lost, regardless of fact that time within which notice of intention to move for new trial never commenced to run, under section 659, because of failure to give notice of entry of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by T. G. Stewart and wife against Joseph Spano. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Joseph A. Allard, of Pomona, Allen J. Mitchell, of Los Angeles, and Nichols, Cooper, & Hickson, of Pomona, for appellant.

Ralph E. Homann, of Los Angeles, and Isaac Jones, of Ontario, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. There is pending in this action a motion to dismiss the appeal. The moving papers show that the judgment from which the appeal is attempted to be taken was entered July 12, 1922; that on July 14 notice that the judgment had been signed by the judge who tried the action was mailed by respondents' counsel to appellant's counsel; that on November 14 a notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed by appellant; and that the notice of appeal from the judgment was filed on February 15, 1923.

[1, 2] It will be observed that the record fails to show that notice of the entry of judgment was ever given. Therefore the time within which a notice of intention to move for a new trial could be filed never commenced to run. Code Civ. Proc. § 659. Nevertheless, no proceedings for a new trial were pending here within the meaning of the provision contained in section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that the time within which to appeal from a judgment does not expire until the lapse of a certain period after disposition is made of a motion for a new trial. This provision has no application to a case in which the notice of intention is not given until more than 60 days after the entry of judgment. In such a situation the right of appeal is forever lost at the expiration of the 60 days, as under other language of section 939 the time for taking an appeal from a judgment runs from the actual entry thereof, and not from notice of such entry. ORTON et al. v. DABNEY. (Civ. 4833.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. April 12, 1927.

1. Appeal and error —1050(1)—Overruling objection to question as calling for conclusion held not ground for complaint, where circumstances show conclusion correct.

The circumstances so strongly supporting the "conclusion" that error in overruling objection to question as calling for "conclusion" becomes unimportant, it is not available as ground of complaint.

2. Mines and minerals —75—Application for, and extension of, mining lease held part of single agreement, so former is not superseded by latter (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Written offer or application by lessee for extension of mining lease and the written extension held, under the circumstances, to be parts of single agreement, so that offer is not superseded under Civ. Code, § 1625, as a mere part of negotiations.

3. Mines and minerals —75—Waiver in application for extension of mining lease of right to notice of termination of lease held to control in interpretation of more general term of extension.

Specific provision in application for extension of mining lease that, if drilling has not been started by certain date, lease shall be void, and lessee will deliver quitclaim without notice, controls in the interpretation of the more general terms of the extension, the two being parts of single agreement.

4. Evidence 416—To determine whether instruments were parts of same contract resort may be had to circumstances of execution.

Where it cannot be determined from inspection whether several instruments were intended to be parts of single contract, resort may be had to evidence of the circumstances under which they were executed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action by Clarence Orton and others against Henry R. Dabney. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

YORK, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against him in favor of the respondents quieting title to certain real property, and also a judgment in the sum of $1,130 as and for rent under an oil lease covering such real property.

The respondents, or, in some instances, their vendors, had executed a so-called community oil lease to the appellant, for which they had received approximately $9,000. Subsequently the respondents, in consideration of appellant agreeing to pay $10 per month per lot, executed what purported to be an extension of that lease. Appellant contends the respondents have no cause of action, and were entitled to no relief because respondents had failed to give appellant a written notice of his failure to perform and of their intention to enforce a forfeiture for that failure; appellant contending that the giving of 30 days' notice was a condition precedent to the right of respondents to declare the lease forfeited and re-enter the land. Appellant raised the question by demurrer to the complaint, and by objecting to the introduction of any evidence at the time of trial. The demurrer was overruled, as was the objection. The exact day of the month the original lease was signed does not appear in the record, except that the lease upon its face purports to be signed "on the — day of February, 1921."

The complaint recites the ownership of the property, the making of the lease—setting it out in hæc verbæ—and in said complaint they set out the execution of an extension of said lease wherein and whereby the period for commencing drilling operations under said lease was extended to the 23d day of March, 1922; and they allege further in the complaint that no drilling operations were commenced upon the said real property before or on the 23d day of March, 1922, and that no drilling operations had been commenced since the 23d day of March, 1922. The complaint was verified upon the 22d day of May, 1922, and filed the same day. Evidence as to the contents of such extension was introduced at the time of the trial, and, although there was objection thereto, the trial court found against all of the contentions of the appellant, and same was properly admitted, for the reason that there was introduced in evidence a letter signed by appellant stating that on, to wit, October 4, 1921, the date for drilling under the original lease had expired; that, after the receipt of this signed statement, the extension referred to was obtained apparently upon the strength of the statements made in the letter or offer signed by the appellant. The undisputed evidence shows that the appellant failed to commence drilling operations within the time limited under the offer and extension granted, or at all, and his interest to the land was ended before the suit was filed. But the lease, having been recorded, cast a cloud upon the plaintiffs' title, and it was necessary for them to file suit to quiet title in order that it might appear of record that the contingency upon which the lease had been given, and upon which it had terminated, had occurred; yet the appellant had refused to deliver, and had not delivered, a quitclaim deed, as he agreed to do in the extension and offer. The objection to the offer which was introduced as Exhibit 2 herein was predicated on the ground that it was an attempt to vary the terms of the written instrument introduced as Plaintiffs' Exhibit 3. It was a part of the written negotiations entered into between plaintiffs and defendant after the failure of defendant to drill under the original lease; the only thing done by defendant in connection with the drilling being merely the deposit of certain lumber upon part of the property covered by the lease, which lumber was later removed on account of the failure of defendant to pay for same. The evidence in this case therefore practically shows an abandonment by defendant. Read together with the lease, the offer preceding the extension and the extension itself allow us to reach no other conclusion than that it was intended that the lease and all terms thereof should become null and void, if drilling operations were not actually started within the time limited; that is, that all rights of defendant were absolutely terminated upon his failure to commence drilling by March 23, 1922. The extension reciting the facts as to ownership of land more than covers any objection that might be made upon the ground that notice was to be given of the signing of 75 per cent. of the owners of land described in the lease. No question was raised in appellant's brief as to the validity of the judgment of $1,130, and therefore we make no special comment as to the appeal from that portion of the judgment.

And particularly as to any question of necessity for notice, and as to any question of a showing of satisfactory title vested in the lessors to not less than 75 per cent. of the lots included in block 1002, Vista Del Mar Tract, Huntington Beach, Cal., it is a matter that is fully covered by the recitals in the so-called "extension for lease" in evidence, including both the Plaintiffs' Exhibits 2 and 3, which the trial court for the reason heretofore given properly held were to be construed together—and such lease and such extension, read together, do away with any necessity for either notice of failure to drill or question of title, as therein is recited the full data as to ownership, and it is therein provided that drilling must be started on a day certain, and payment of rental must be made as therein set out. And the drilling was not commenced as specified, or at all, and default was made in payment of rental due.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

CONREY, P. J. I concur in the judgment. Concerning the facts as stated in the main opinion, it should be added that the witness J. H. Stewart testified that the lumber was not placed on the leased land. Also, since the extension agreement, which was signed by defendant as well as by the plaintiffs, contained a recital that the extension was to run from the 23d day of September, 1921, this was an admission that the time limited by the original lease for beginning of work by lessee had expired at that date; and was an implied admission that the showing of "satisfactory title," necessary to start time running on the original time limit for beginning of work by lessee, had been completed at least 90 days before September 23, 1921.

It was provided in the lease as follows:

"In the event lessee shall fail to fully perform any covenant or condition hereof on his part to be kept, performed or observed, and except as hereinafter provided, and the lessors desire to enforce a forfeiture on account of such failure to perform and observe, the lessors shall give the lessee notice in writing of such failure to perform and observe, and of lessors' desire to enforce a forfeiture by reason thereof, and if within thirty (30) days thereafter lessee has not remedied the breach so complained of, or performed and observed, the requirement the breach of which is so complained of, then the lessee shall, at lessors' option, forfeit all rights in and to this lease, and this lease shall terminate and be at an end. * * *

The lease also contained an agreement concerning a possible extension of the lease in terms as follows:

"It is further agreed, however, that the time for the commencement of such work may be extended at the election of the lessee for an additional period, not to exceed three (3) months, in consideration for which extension the lessee shall pay the lessors the sum of ten ($10.00) dollars per month per lot. It is further mutually agreed between the parties hereto that if drilling operations for oil are not actually started on the premises within the said three (3) months, or said extended period of three (3) months additional time above mentioned, this lease and all the terms herein shall become null and void with no further effect on the lessors hereto."

It will be noted that the agreement subsequently made for extension of the lease was for a period of 6 months, and was not merely limited to the originally contemplated extension of 3 months. The extension agreement says:

"And whereas, the final date allowed for commencing drilling operations under said lease was September 23, 1921, and whereas, Henry R. Dabney is desirous of securing an extension of said lease for an additional period, not to exceed six months from September 23, 1921, under the same terms and conditions and rentals as specified under the lease above mentioned, * * * we hereby renew said lease and grant an extension of the time in which drilling operations are to be commenced, up to and including the 23d day of March, 1922; it being understood and agreed by all of the parties hereto that the lease above mentioned is to continue and hold in force the same as the original time with regard to all other terms and conditions mentioned therein and stipulated therein to be performed, including the rental and royalty to be paid."

The principal contention and ground of appeal by appellant is that, by reason of the terms of the original lease, together with the terms of the extension agreement, the right of the lessors to enforce forfeiture and termination of the lease on account of the failure to commence drilling operations on or before March 23, 1922, is conditioned upon the giving of notice of the desire of lessors to enforce such forfeiture, just the same as if, without any agreement of extension of the lease, the lessors had attempted to enforce the forfeiture by reason of failure to begin drilling operations within the period of time specified in the original lease. Respondents, on the other hand, contend that, by the terms of the extension agreement, the lease on and after March 23, 1922, became null and void by operation of the extension agreement itself; and further contend that their interpretation of the lease and extension agreement is confirmed and made certain by reason of a written offer addressed to J. H. Stewart, by means of which appellant applied for, and obtained, the extension agreement. For the purpose of establishing their interpretation of the extension agreement, appellants offered in evidence, and the court, over the objection of respondent, received in evidence, the said written offer, together with testimony explaining the circumstances under which said written offer was made.

From this evidence it appears that J. H. Stewart, who was one of the lessors, not only represented the lessors in the negotiation for said extension agreement, but also was paid a sum of money by appellant to assist appellant in obtaining such extension. In this written offer, dated October 4, 1921, appellant said:

"It is further agreed that the provision in the parent lease regarding the 'failure to fully perform any covenant or condition to be kept' under said lease by me shall have no effect as to the final date under which drilling operations are to be started under said extension. In other words, on March 23, 1922, if drilling operations have not been started, this lease or extension of lease is to be null and void, without privilege of a period of grace or without any recourse, and I agree to deliver a quitclaim deed on said date to said demised property without any notice from the landowners if I have not started drilling operations by that time."

[1] Stewart used this written offer in his negotiations with the lessors, and they all saw it before they signed the extension agreement. In order to more conveniently distribute this information to the numerous lessors, appellant gave Stewart several copies of said written offer. Stewart testified that, based on this offer, he and the other owners granted the extension. Appellant objected to the question calling for this statement, as a question calling for the conclusion of the witness. Technically, this was a good objection, at least as to the other owners, but the circumstances so strongly support the "conclusion" that the error in the court's ruling becomes unimportant.

[2-4] Appellant contends that the admission in evidence of said written offer was directly in violation of section 1625 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument." As illustrating the point, appellant cites, among other cases, Newhall v. Burns, 31 Cal. App. 549, 161 P. 14, wherein this court said: "Where an agreement extending the time for making payment of an instalment of the purchase price of real property expressly provided that the agreement was 'subject to all of the terms, covenants, and conditions' of the original contract of sale, such provision had the effect of carrying into such agreement all of the terms and conditions of the original contract, including the provision that time was of the essence of the contract, and no express declaration in such agreement to that effect was essential."

So here it is argued that, as the extension agreement, after providing for the time to which the lease was extended, provided that the lease was to continue in force "the same as the original time with regard to all other terms and conditions mentioned therein and stipulated therein to be performed," the condition and requirement of notice preceding forfeiture, as stated in the original lease, is equally applicable to the term as extended.

While the general rule is as stated in section 1625 of the Civil Code and in the decisions cited by appellant, their application to the present case is controlled by the fact that the written offer or application for extension of the lease, and the written extension itself, when executed under the circumstances to which I have referred, are but parts of one single contractual transaction; each of them being, and by the parties intended to be, part of the agreement. The written offer signed by appellant directly and specifically declared a waiver by appellant of his right to notice of termination of the lease in case he failed to start drilling operations within the time limited. This waiver should control in the interpretation of the more general terms of the extension agreement as signed by the lessors. The decision on this point should be governed, and, in my opinion, it is governed, by the rule that several contracts relating to the same matter, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be taken together. As was said in Torrey v. Shea, 29 Cal. App. 313, 316, 155 P. 820, 821, the question as to whether or not several instruments between the same parties were contemporaneously executed and intended by the parties thereto to cover a single transaction oftentimes cannot be ascertained from an inspection of the instruments themselves; "and consequently, if the intention of the parties be either not expressed or doubtfully expressed, resort may be had to extrinsic evidence which will show the circumstances under which the several instruments were made, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties concerning the scope and effect of the several instruments." See, also, Greathouse v. Daleno, 57 Cal. App. 187, 206 P. 1019; Spotton v. Dyer, 42 Cal. App. 585, 588, 184 P. 23; Merkeley v. Fisk, 179 Cal. 748, 754, 178 P. 945.

For the reasons above stated, I concur in the judgment of affirmance herein.

One, retired from police department of Los Angeles at half pay when salary as chief of police was $400 per month, held not limited to half that sum, but entitled to increase in pension when salary of chief was raised to $500 per month.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Mandamus by Charles A. Jones against P. J. Cooney and others, substituted for O. M. Souden and others, to require defendants, as the Fire and Police Pension Department of the City of Los Angeles, to increase petitioner's pension. Judgment for petitioner, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Claude H. McFadden, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John B. Haas, and John D. Home, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment which resulted from the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate in the court below.

The following facts are taken nearly verbatim from the statement of the case appearing in appellant's opening brief:

Charles A. Jones, the respondent herein, for many years was a member of the police department of the city of Los Angeles. On or about the 4th day of January, 1922, he was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting chief of police in said city, at which time he was regularly retired from further service in said police department; that at the time of his retirement he had served more than 20 years in said police department, and at said time there was in effect an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which, among other things, provided as follows:

"Whenever any member of the police department, as defined in section 13 hereof, shall have served for twenty (20) years or more in the aggregate in any capacity or rank whatever, said commission shall, upon his written request, or without such request if it be deemed for the good of said department, order and direct that such person be retired from further service in the police department. From the date of making such order, or from the date such order becomes effective, the services of such person in the police department shall cease, and such person so retired shall thereafter during his lifetime be paid from such fund a yearly pension equal to one-half of the amount of the salary attached to the rank or position which he may have held in said police department at the time of such retirement. Such pension shall be payable in equal quarterly installments.

It also appears:

That at the date of respondent's retirement the salary attached to the rank of chief of police was the sum of $400 per month; that after the retirement of respondent, to wit, on the 8th day of November, 1922, there was adopted by the electors of the city of Los Angeles an amendment to the charter of said city, which said amendment, among other things, contains the following provision:

"* * * The provisions as herein in this charter contained shall apply to all members of the fire and police departments as in this section defined, and to all members of said departments who have heretofore been granted pensions: Provided, however, that all pensions granted heretofore and still in operation shall remain and continue to operate the same as when granted."

That on the 13th day of November, 1923, there became effective as an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles an ordinance increasing the salary of the chief of police of said city from $400 to $500 per month; that on June 12, 1924, respondent presented to the official body of the city of Los Angeles, having jurisdiction thereof, to wit, to the fire and police pension department of the city of Los Angeles, composed of appellants herein other than Ned T. Powell and John S. Myers, and to said Ned T. Powell as treasurer, and to John S. Myers as auditor, of the city of Los Angeles, a demand for the sum of $328.33, which sum respondent claimed as due to him between the 13th day of November, 1923, and the 12th day of June, 1924, because of the increase as aforesaid in the salary of the chief of police of said city of Los Angeles; that thereupon the said fire and police pension department rejected respondent's demand, and the said Ned T. Powell, as treasurer of the city of Los Angeles, refused to pay the same, and the said John S. Myers, as auditor of the said city of Los Angeles, refused to audit said demand, on the ground that respondent was not entitled to the sum as set forth in said demand, and that respondent was entitled to only one-half of the sum of $400 per month and was not entitled to one-half of the sum of $500 per month, said latter sum at said time being the amount of the salary of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles, as provided in the ordinance to which reference heretofore has been had herein; that thereafter respondent instituted an action in mandamus to compel appellants to allow, audit, and pay the claim of respondent as aforesaid, which action resulted in a judgment that a peremptory writ of mandate should issue requiring appellants to approve, audit, and pay said demand of respondent. As hereinbefore noted, this appeal is from that judgment.

The question is not a new one in this jurisdiction. Either directly or in principle it has been ruled upon adversely to each of the contentions of appellants in each of the following cases: Aitken v. Roche, 48 Cal. App. 753, 192 P. 464; Rumetsch v. Davie, 47 Cal. App. 512, 190 P. 1075; Whitehead v. Davie, 189 Cal. 715, 722, 209 P. 1008; Klench v. Board of Pension Fund Commissioners (Cal. App.) 249 P. 46; Home v. Souden (Cal. Sup.) 250 P. 162.

Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the attention of this court has been attracted to no case decided by any court in this state which detracts from the line of authority as announced by the cases to which reference has been had. It would serve no useful purpose to restate the reasons for such decisions which have been so ably presented.

Relying, therefore, upon such authorities, it is ordered that the judgment be and it is affirmed.

RUTLEDGE et al. v. BARGER et al.
(Civ. 3240.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 15, 1927.

1. Forcible entry and detainer § 11(1)—Demand for surrender of premises is unnecessary before commencement of action of forcible entry (Code Civ. Proc. § 1159).

In action of forcible entry under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159, no notice or demand for surrender of premises is necessary before action is commenced.

2. Forcible entry and detainer § 4—Breaking of lock to enter building held to constitute forcible entry.

Allegations and proof showing that defendants broke lock in order to enter building held sufficient to show forcible entry.

3. Landlord and tenant § 112(2)—In lessees' action of forcible entry, lessors' acceptance of payment of money due for water held to waive default.

In action of forcible entry against lessors, lessees' payment and lessors' acceptance of money due for water held to waive default in such payment.

4. Landlord and tenant § 76(3)—Requirement of lessors' written consent to assignment by lessees held waived by accepting rentals with knowledge.

Lessors, by accepting rentals due and payable under lease with knowledge of assignment, held to waive necessity of written consent to such assignment required by terms of lease.

5. Husband and wife § 214—Forcible entry judgment against husband and wife as lessors held justified, though wife did not actively participate in actual entry.

In action of forcible entry against lessors, judgment against defendant wife, as well as husband, held justified, in view of record, though she did not actively participate with him in forcible entry.

6. Trial § 66—Reopening case, on plaintiffs' unsupported motion, for introduction of further evidence, held not abuse of discretion.

Reopening case, on unsupported motion of plaintiffs, for introduction of further evidence, held not abuse of discretion, where defendants were not prejudiced, since it was within discretion of court to reopen case on its own motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by W. P. Rutledge and others against C. A. Barger and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

P. J. Wilkie, of Sacramento, for appellants.
Elliott, Atkinson & Sitton and W. A. Latta, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action of forcible entry upon real property consisting of a lot and a store building thereon. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for restoration of possession and for damages. The defendants have appealed from the judgment.

The evidence shows and the court found that in December, 1923, the defendants, as owners, leased the property to W. P. Rutledge and James Tully (plaintiffs herein) and William Fehr and C. C. Thomson, for a term of three years; that the lessees went into possession under the lease and conducted a grocery and general merchandise business in the building; that in December, 1925, Fehr and Thomson transferred their interest in the property and business to the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs "ever since said transfer have held said premises and paid to the defendants, and said defendants with knowledge of said transfer accepted, all rentals due and payable under said lease; and said plaintiffs up to the 18th day of June, 1926, have held and occupied the said store and premises as tenants pursuant to the terms of said written lease; that on or about the 18th day of June, 1926, during the temporary absence of plaintiffs from said store building the said defendants did wrongfully, unlawfully, forcibly, and without right, and by force and violence, break open the doors of said store building and tear off the lock on said doors, and by forcible means and methods entered upon said real property then in the actual undisturbed and peaceable possession of plaintiffs, and did oust and eject plaintiffs from possession thereof"; that the "defendants removed from said store building all the goods, wares, and merchandise therein contained belonging to plaintiffs and deposited them in the rear of the adjoining premises"; that by reason of the acts of defendants the plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $314.72.

Appellants contend that the court erred "in overruling defendants' demurrer to the complaint, * * * in denying defendants' motion for a nonsuit, * * * in reopening the case on the unsupported motion of the plaintiffs, * * * in denying defendants' motion for a new trial."

[1, 2] In support of the first ground it is urged that the "complaint attempts to set up a cause of action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer, under the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure," and that it does not allege that the plaintiffs demanded a surrender of the premises before the action was commenced. It is clear that the action is one of forcible entry, defined by section 1159 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No notice or demand was necessary. 11 R. C. L. 1169. It is contended that there was no show of force, threat, or intimidation alleged. It is alleged and the uncontradicted testimony shows that the defendants broke the lock in order to enter the building. This was sufficient to constitute a forcible entry. California Products, Inc., v. Mitchell, 52 Cal. App. 312, 314, 198 P. 646.

[3] Appellants contend that the plaintiffs were in default at the time of the forcible entry, and that, therefore, the defendants, under the terms of the lease, had the right to take possession of the premises. Plaintiffs had paid all installments of rent as they became due, but they had failed to pay for water used by them. On the day of defendants' entry they demanded such payment and the plaintiffs paid the same. King testified that such payment was made and accepted prior to defendants' entry. By accepting the payment the defendants waived the default.

[4] The lease contained a covenant against assignment by the lessees without the written consent of the lessors. Such written consent was not given, but Mrs. Barger was employed by plaintiffs in their business and Mr. Barger was "in and out" of the store after Fehr and Thomson had transferred their interests to the plaintiffs. During all that time King was in charge of the store and each month he paid the rent to Mr. Barger; the checks given in payment thereof being signed by King. The evidence is sufficient to support the finding that "said defendants, with knowledge of said transfer, accepted all rentals due and payable under said lease." They thus waived the necessity of a written consent to the transfer. 16 R. C. L. 838.

[5] The evidence does not show that Mrs.

Barger actively participated in the forcible entry. Appellants contend that, therefore, the judgment against her is unauthorized. The defendants are husband and wife. The lease recites that the property in suit is "owned by said first parties." Mr. Barger acted for the lessors in all matters pertaining to the lease. The defendants answered jointly. The answer contains no denial by Mrs. Barger of responsibility for the acts of her husband, and the efforts of both defendants at the trial were directed toward the justification of such acts. It does not appear from the record that any contention was made at the trial that Mr. Barger was not acting for both defendants in forcibly taking possession of the premises, but the only inference to be drawn from the evidence is that he was so acting for both. Under such circumstances, the court was justified in holding both defendants liable for the damages suffered.

[6] It was not an abuse of discretion to reopen the case for the introduction of further evidence. It does not appear that the defendants were prejudiced thereby. The character of the showing made by the plaintiffs in support of their motion to reopen the case is immaterial, in view of the fact that the motion was granted, because it was in the discretion of the court to reopen the case on its own motion. Badover v. Guaranty Trust, etc., Bank, 186 Cal. 775, 777, 200 P. 638.

Defendants moved for a new trial, but offered nothing in support thereof, except the record of the trial. What has already been said, therefore, disposes of appellants' contention that it was error to deny a new trial. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Joe Berrata against W. L. Sales, individually and as Mayor of the City of Petaluma, and others, to prohibit enforcement of a zoning ordinance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, for appellants.

E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment in an action instituted to prohibit the defendants from enforcing a certain ordinance numbered 284, charter series, entitled, "An ordinance establishing certain districts or zones and regulating the use of property and the location of various industries and business or commercial establishments in the city of Petaluma," and the defendants appeal.

The city of Petaluma is a municipal corporation, operating under a freeholders' charter, effective in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1799). On November 19, 1923, the city council of the city of Petaluma adopted an ordinance creating a planning commission, according to the provisions of the act of the Legislature of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 708), and as amended by an act approved May 27, 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 772). See, also, act of the Legislature, approved May 31, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1419). Thereafter, said commission reported to the city council a draft of a proposed zoning ordinance and also a map of the several proposed zones. On the 20th day of July, 1925, the proposed ordinance was introduced in the city council of said city of Petaluma and the zoning map just referred to filed with the city clerk. Thereafter, and on the 23d day of October, 1925, the city council ordered that said proposed ordinance be published once in full in the Petaluma Argus, a newspaper of general circulation and the official newspaper of the city of Petaluma; that said ordinance was published on the 26th day of October, 1925; that on the 2d day of November, 1925, said purported ordinance was adopted by the city council of the city of Petaluma.

The trial court held the proposed zoning ordinance void on two grounds: (1) That the procedure provided by the act of the Legislature, approved May 31, 1917, relative to the adoption of zoning ordinances by municipalities, was not complied with; and (2) that the proposed ordinance was not published in full, as required by section 12 of article 6 of the Charter of Petaluma.

The charter of the city of Petaluma, approved by concurrent resolution of the California Assembly on the 14th day of February, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1799), contains the following relative to the powers of the city: Section 19 of article 3:

"To exercise police powers and make all necessary police and sanitary regulations, and to adopt ordinances and prescribe penalties for the violation thereof."

Other sections specifying the powers of said council are also set forth, and then in the same article we find section 68, reading as follows:

"In the absence of any procedure for carrying out or effectuating any granted or implied power or authority, the general law of this state where applicable and where not inconsistent with any express provision of this charter shall prevail and shall be followed."

Section 12 of article 6 specifies that no ordinance shall be passed by the council within 5 days after its introduction, " * * * nor until its publication at least once in full in the official newspaper of the city of Petaluma," etc.

[1] The charter of the city of Petaluma contains no sections relative either to the power or procedure in adopting zoning ordinances, but assuming, without deciding, that section 19 of article 3 granted this power, irrespective of the act of the Legislature referred to, which also purports to grant to municipalities such power, the omission in the charter of any procedure for adopting such an ordinance renders section 68 of article 3 applicable, and by the terms of said section the procedure provided for in the act of the Legislature becomes the procedure that must be followed by the city council of the city of Petaluma in adopting such ordinances.

[2] The trial court found that the procedure mapped out in the act of the Legislature was not followed, in that no notice was ever given by the city council, as required by the act of the Legislature referred to. This is apparently conceded by the appellants, but the contention is made that under section 19 of article 3 of the City Charter, granting to the city council the power to make all necessary police regulations, etc., a zoning ordinance can be adopted without following the procedure provided by the general law. We do not need to discuss whether, under section 19 of article 3 granting police powers to the city council, authority is conferred to adopt a zoning ordinance, but from the omission in the city charter to provide any procedure therefor, we must hold, as above stated, that the general law prevails, and, unless the procedure there specified is substantially followed, the proposed ordinance does not become effective. It needs no citation of authority to support the statement that notice of the proposed passage of a zoning ordinance limiting the use of property which, otherwise, naturally attaches to the property in question is a substantial matter and is one of which property owners are entitled to notice. The property owner, as has been so frequently said in other cases, is entitled to have his day in court.

[3] As hereinbefore stated, the trial court held that the proposed ordinance was not published in full, as required by section 12 of article 6 of the Charter of Petaluma. The transcript in this particular shows the following:

"Ordinance No. 284. Section 1. For the purpose of regulating and restricting the location of dwellings, businesses, commercial establishments and industries, and for the purpose of designating the location of properties to be used for certain specified purposes, the city of Petaluma is hereby divided into, and there are hereby established, districts or zones designated on a certain map to be known as 'the official zoning map of the city of Petaluma,' and it shall be unlawful, except as herein otherwise provided, to erect, construct, alter or maintain buildings, or make use of properties, or carrying on trades or callings, within the city of Petaluma except as provided by this ordinance and specified on the said official zoning map of the city of Petaluma. Said 'the official zoning map of the city of Petaluma' is filed with the city clerk of the city of Petaluma and is hereby referred to and made a part of this ordinance."

Subdivision (a) of section 1 provides a district to be known as a residence district or zone coincident with the city limits of the city of Petaluma.

Subdivision (b), relating to business or commercial districts, reads:

"A business or commercial district or zone is hereby created and designated on the official zoning map of the city of Petaluma."

The official zoning map of the city of Petaluma was not published. It will be seen from the quotations which we have set forth of the proposed zones that no streets are mentioned, and, so far as the published ordinance is concerned, it cannot be ascertained therefrom where the commercial district or business or zone created by the ordinance exist in the city of Petaluma.

On the part of the appellants it is insisted that the reference to a map on file with the city clerk is a sufficient publication, and to support this contention the case of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 P. 81, is cited. A reference to that case, however, shows that there is a wide distinction between the facts there considered and the facts in this case. In the case of Chase v. Trout, the question as to the sufficiency of a resolution of intention preliminary to ordering a street improved was held sufficient. In that case, the resolution, after naming the streets to be improved, contained, as provided by law, a description of the work, to wit:

"The [said] street" was to "be graded, graveled, and guttered in accordance with the plans and profiles on file in the office of the city engineer and specifications on file in the office of the city clerk of the city of Los Angeles. * * * That a cement curb be constructed along each line of the roadway of said street, [etc.] 'that a cement sidewalk five feet in width be constructed along each side of said street,' etc."

The court held that there was a substantial compliance with the law requiring publication, as it gave to the property owners a notice that the street or streets upon which their property abutted were to be improved, materials to be used were mentioned, and the improvements generally to be made. Here there is nothing contained in the ordinance showing the residence streets or blocks or the business streets or blocks. In the case of Park v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., 37 Cal. App. 112, 173 P. 615, the court had before it, in considering a street improvement proposal, a question almost identical with that which we are here considering. The resolution of intention providing for the work failed to name the streets, but referred to a map, and the court said:

"In construing this portion of the proceeding the purpose of the provision that the streets shall be named in the resolution of intention must be taken into account. That purpose seems to be the giving of information to the property owners as to the intention of the city council to improve the street in front of their property, or some other streets, the expense of which will be made a burden upon their property by taxation."

The resolution of intention was held to be fatally defective for failure to name the streets upon which the improvements were to be made and the burden of taxation imposed.

In the recent case of O. T. Johnson Corporation v. City of Los Angeles, 198 Cal. 308, 245 P. 164, decided in 1926, the Supreme Court held that an ordinance concerning the opening and improving of streets and fixing the burden of taxation was fatally defective for failure to contain the names of the streets, and that the omission to name the streets constituted a failure to comply with a jurisdictional requirement.

The power of municipalities to adopt zoning ordinances and the extent to which such ordinances may limit or prohibit business has been argued at length by counsel, but, from the fact that the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed for the reasons herein stated, whatever we might say as to such questions would be wholly unnecessary to the decision in this case, and could only be classed as obiter, we refrain from any consideration thereof.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

WEBB v. CASASSA et al. (Civ. 3035.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1927.

1. Sales ⇨181(11)—Evidence, in action for breach of contract to deliver grapes, held to support finding against defendants on cross-complaint alleging plaintiff's failure to procure cars for shipment.

In action for breach of contract to deliver grapes to plaintiff for shipment and marketing and in payment for shook purchased from plaintiff, evidence held sufficient to support finding against defendants on cross-complaint alleging plaintiff's failure to perform agreement to procure necessary cars for shipment.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨438(10)—Lessee of vineyard on shares held not necessary party to action against lessor's executors for breach of contract in singular number to deliver grapes to plaintiff (Civ. Code, §§ 1659, 1660).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1659, 1660, lessee of grape vineyard for half of returns was not necessary party to action against lessor's executors for breach of contract in singular number to deliver grapes to plaintiff for shipment and marketing and in payment for shook sold to lessor, though contract was executed by both lessor and lessee.

3. Assignments ⇨129—Assignor of account as collateral security held proper party plaintiff in action for breach of contract.

One, assigning account against defendants as collateral security, still had interest in property assigned, and hence was proper, though not necessary, party plaintiff in action for breach of contract.

Objection that plaintiff was not real party in interest, and hence could not sue for breach of contract, because of his assignment of account against defendants, was one of nonjoinder of necessary parties, which must be presented by demurrer or answer, under Code Civ. Proc. § 434.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by H. E. Webb against Armand Casassa and another, executors of the last will and testament of Domenico Casassa, deceased, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

H. T. Kyle, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. During the year 1923 Domenico Casassa was the owner of a vineyard near Santa Rosa, which he had leased for that year to A. Finocchio, the returns from the vineyard to be divided between the parties to the lease. In August of that year Casassa and Finocchio entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, designated as a "grape shipping contract," and providing, among other things, as follows:

"The undersigned grower hereby authorizes and instructs H. E. Webb, * * * as his agent to arrange for the loading in cars of the grapes hereinafter specified, to procure loading materials, to employ loading labor, to arrange for state and federal inspection, and to market said grapes upon the terms hereinafter stated. * * * The grower agrees to harvest said grapes properly and to deliver them into cars at any shipping point to be designated by the said Webb within reasonable hauling distance from above-mentioned premises."

The agreement provided for the payment to the plaintiff of a commission for his services. It was signed by Casassa and Finocchio and also by the plaintiff. Casassa and Finocchio executed another instrument, reading as follows:

"In consideration of the sale and delivery of certain shook to me by H. E. Webb of the agreed value of $437.50, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby sell and agree to deliver to the said Webb—delivery to be made f. o. b. cars, in containers and condition as provided in a certain grape shipping contract * * * heretofore made by me with the said Webb—such quantity of the grapes described in said grape shipping contract * * * as shall amount in net value, at the current platform price at time and place of shipment, to the said above-mentioned sum agreed upon as the purchase price of said shook. Delivery under this sale shall comprise all of the grapes picked by me during the 1923 season beginning with the first, until sufficient quantity shall have been delivered to discharge this contract.

"No. 3,500 at 12½¢.

"[Signed] D. Casassa, Grower.
A. Finocchio."

No grapes were delivered to the plaintiff under either contract, but Casassa and Finocchio sold their grapes to other persons. The plaintiff delivered shook to them as provided for by the second contract. The complaint alleges that Casassa and Finocchio refused to perform the terms of the first contract, to plaintiff's damage, and also that they refused to pay the amount specified in the second contract, and prays for judgment in accordance with such allegations. Copies of the contracts are attached to and made a part of the complaint. The answer does not deny the execution of the contracts. It does deny the alleged purchase of grape shook. It admits that no grapes were delivered to the plaintiff, but alleges that—

The "plaintiff was not to receive such grapes until arrangements had been made for cars in which to ship the same, and that the said plaintiff failed and neglected when said grapes were ready for shipment and market to procure necessary cars for the shipment thereof, and by reason thereof the said D. Casassa and the said A. Finocchio were compelled to and did sell the grapes * * * at a loss of $900, more or less."

Substantially the same facts are alleged by way of cross-complaint, and judgment for defendants is demanded in the sum of $900. Casassa died subsequent to the transactions stated and a claim against his estate was presented by the plaintiff for the amount herein demanded, but the same was not allowed by the defendant executors.

The court found that Casassa and Finocchio refused to deliver their grapes to the plaintiff, as provided in the first contract, but that "the amount of profit which this plaintiff would have gained from a full performance of said contract upon both sides does not appear"; that Casassa and Finocchio purchased from plaintiff "3,500 grape shook at the agreed price and value of 12½ cents apiece, aggregating the sum of $437.50; * * * but the said Casassa and Finocchio never did deliver any grapes to this plaintiff, and never did pay any part of the agreed value of said shook." The court found against the defendants on their cross-complaint. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $437.50, the agreed price of the shook. The defendants have appealed from the judgment.

[1] The evidence is not only sufficient to support the finding that the allegations of the cross-complaint are untrue, but wholly insufficient to support a finding that they are true. There is evidence to the effect that the shipping season for grapes, in the Santa Rosa district, opened about September 20, 1923; that rain fell on the following day and for a few days thereafter; and that "the grapes, after being rained on, would not reach their eastern destination in a marketable condition." Finocchio testified:

"Q. Did you and Mr. Casassa go to see Mr. Webb? A. One time. * * * I went down there Sunday morning, and he said he was going to open in a few days. * * * After that I waited, and about four or five days, and I went down there myself, and I don't find nobody. * * * And I waited four or five days more, and I go again, and I don't find nobody. * * * I didn't see him no more."

Appellants say that the Sunday referred to by the witness was September 16th. Defendant Domenico W. Casassa testified:

"I went * * * with my father to see Mr. Webb on account of the grapes were right to ship. * * * He * * * told Mr. Webb * * * he wanted to know what he was going to do about the grapes; that the grapes on hand now were ripe and he wanted to know what he was going to do about them. So Mr. Webb said that he had not found any price on the eastern market yet, and as soon as he could possibly find any prices that he would let my father know. * * * After three or four days * * * I met him (Webb) at his home again. * * * I asked him then what his intentions were; that my father wished to know. And he said until then he hadn't none, but in a day or so he could find out, and would let my father know."

The witness testified that the time he and his father went to see Webb was five or six days before the first rain. Mrs. Webb testified that five or six days after the heavy rain Mr. Casassa, Sr., and either Finocchio or Casassa's son, called at plaintiff's place of business, and—

"Mr. Casassa wanted to know when Mr. Webb would be ready to ship again, and Mr. Webb told him just as soon as the grapes were dry and in marketable condition, he would be glad to ship.

And he told him that he must leave them on the vines a few days to let them dry out thoroughly. * * * And then Mr. Casassa asked what the market price was, and Mr. Webb told him. * * * It was very low; I think it was between 35 and 40 f. o. b. And Mr. Casassa shrugged his shoulders, and said that he thought he could do better, and that he would wait awhile. And Mr. Webb says, 'Just as soon as your grapes are ready, let me know, and I will take care of you.' * * * He left, saying he would notify Mr. Webb."

Plaintiff offered himself as a witness, but, on objection by defendants, based upon the provisions of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he was not permitted to testify. There is nothing in the foregoing testimony to show a failure of performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiff. It appears rather that the growers acquiesced in plaintiff's suggestion that the shipment of grapes be delayed. Neither does it appear that shipments were unreasonably delayed.

[2] Appellants contend that the shook contract is joint and not several and that, therefore, Finocchio is a necessary party. Since Casassa and Finocchio were both interested in the crop of grapes in question, they both received the benefit of anything done for their preservation and preparation for market. "Where all the parties who unite in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, whether past or present, their promise is presumed to be joint and several." Civ. Code, § 1639. The contract in question is in the singular number throughout. "A promise, made in the singular number, but executed by several persons, is presumed to be joint and several." Civ. Code, § 1660. Appellants rely on the case of Farmers' Exchange Bank v. Morse, 129 Cal. 239, 61 P. 1088. There is nothing in that case to sustain their contention. The presumptions mentioned in sections 1639 and 1660 are disputable. In the case cited the obligation was expressly joint and, of course, the express intention of the parties overcame the presumption that the promise was joint and several.

[3, 4] Plaintiff's account against the defendants was assigned in writing to the California Pine Box Distributors, as collateral security. That company thereafter instructed the plaintiff to collect the account, but made no written assignment thereof to him. Appellants contend that, because of such assignment, the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and therefore cannot maintain this action. The fact of such assignment was not set up as a defense in the answer, although the defendants had been notified of the assignment before the suit was commenced. The assignment was by way of security only, and the plaintiff still had an interest in the property assigned, and was, therefore, a proper party plaintiff, though not a necessary party. Stackpole v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 181 Cal. 700, 702, 186 P. 354; Allen v. Chatfield, 34 Cal. App. 785, 788, 163 P. 1149. Conceding that the California Pine Box Distributors should have been made parties to the action, appellants' objection "is one of nonjoinder of necessary parties and must be presented in the manner prescribed by the Code for presenting such an objection." Stackpole v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., supra, page 704 (186 P. 355); Code Civ. Proc., § 434; Pye v. Eagle Lake Lumber Co., 66 Cal. App. 584, 592, 227 P. 193.

The other contentions of the appellants are so clearly without merit that no specific discussion thereof is deemed necessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

HAWI MILL & PLANTATION CO., Limited,
v. FINN, Sheriff, et al. (Civ. 5452.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 9, 1927.

1. Escrows ⇐13—Completion of escrow by full payment and delivery of mortgages relates back to date papers were placed in escrow.

While no title passes by conveyance of mortgages held in escrow until condition of escrow is so far performed as to entitle grantee to possession of mortgages, completion of escrow by payment in full and delivery of mortgages relates back to date when papers were placed in escrow.

2. Trial ⇐136(4)—Construction of statute of foreign country is fact question for trial court, where controversial question inviting expert testimony.

Construction of foreign law is question of fact for trial court, where founded on unwritten law of foreign country, such as common or civil law, while question arising on statute law of foreign country is one of law, where statute only is before court, and, when construction of statute is controversial question inviting expert testimony, it becomes a question of fact.

3. Appeal and error ⇐101(1)—Court's finding, on conflicting expert testimony, that cable was sufficient written consent to mortgagee's planting of crop on mortgagor's land under Mexican law, will not be disturbed.

Trial court's finding of fact, on conflicting expert testimony, that cable was sufficient consent in writing to mortgagee's planting of crop on mortgagor's land under Mexican Law of Accession, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Replevin by the Hawi Mill & Plantation Company, Limited, against Thomas F. Finn, Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This case involved a dispute over 3,975 bags of coffee, worth about $74,382, grown on nine fincas or coffee plantations in the state of Chiapas, Mexico, during the winter of 1920-21, and brought to San Francisco in April and May, 1921. When the coffee arrived in San Francisco, it was attached and taken from the possession of respondent by the appellant Thomas F. Finn, the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, under writs of attachment in an action commenced by the appellant Geo. A. Moore & Co. on April 26, 1921, entitled "Geo. A. Moore & Co., a Corporation, Plaintiff, v. Hidalgo Plantation & Commercial Company, La Zacualpa Plantation & Harrison Company, Defendants." Respondent filed a third-party claim; the appellant Geo. A. Moore & Co. gave the statutory bond to the appellant sheriff, and the latter refused to deliver back the coffee to respondent. Thereupon respondent commenced the present action in replevin against the appellants Geo. A. Moore & Co., Sheriff Finn, and the surety on the latter's official bond, to recover possession of the coffee. The trial court found in favor of the respondent; found that respondent owned and was entitled to the possession of the coffee; that neither the appellant Geo. A. Moore & Co. nor its attachment debtors, who were defendants in the attachment action, had any ownership or right to possession of the coffee, and entered judgment accordingly. All of the defendants have appealed from these judgments.

The respondent is a corporation in possession and operating some nine fincas or coffee plantations in Mexico. The coffee which is the subject of the controversy was raised by the respondent and another corporation known as the Chiapas Coffee Company on these plantations. The respondent, however, is the successor of that company, taking over all its rights.

There were a number of questions involved and decided by the trial court, but there is one which is determinative of the case, and that is as to the ownership of the coffee. The question of ownership depends upon whether under the Mexican law a mortgagee in the occupancy of real property and cultivating it with the knowledge and consent of the mortgagor is the owner of the crop he raises. The plaintiff in this case was the mortgagee of the plantations upon which this coffee was raised. It and its assignor, Chiapas Coffee Company, were in possession and cultivating them with the knowledge and consent of the mortgagors, and the coffee involved here was part of a crop so raised. The two corporations which were indebted to the appellant Geo. A. Moore & Co. and as whose property the coffee was attached were mortgagors.

The two corporations which the appellant claims are the real owners of the coffee are two California corporations organized by a man named Harrison some time prior to 1908. They were organized by him for the purpose of acquiring and operating plantations in Mexico, and he has always been their president and general manager. These two corporations purchased some nine fincas or plantations in Mexico. The Mexican law, however, prohibited a foreign corporation from holding the legal title to land within a certain distance from the coast, and the fincas involved were within this distance. To avoid the prohibition the legal title to the fincas was taken in two so-called sociedad colectivos or partnerships formed under the Mexican law and constituting each of one of the California corporations and Harrison.

For the purpose of raising funds the California corporations issued a large number of what are called "acre certificates." The certificates specify on their face that the owner thereof is entitled to so many shares not of stock in the company, but in the coffee and rubber plantations belonging to the company. The by-laws provide that each share represents one acre in these plantations. The certificates also specify that in consideration of the payment to the corporation of $400 per share the corporation will plant one acre for each share and harvest and cultivate the same for a certain length of time and the owner of the certificate will be entitled to the profit from the crop grown. The shares or acre certificates so sold called for an acreage nearly equal to the total acreage of the plantations.

In 1908 one of the collectivos or partnerships, together with the California corporation and Harrison, who composed it, executed a mortgage on the fincas which belonged to that particular collectivo in favor of a firm known as Sigmund Robinow & Son, and in 1912 the other collectivo or partnership, together with the California corporation and Harrison, who composed it, executed a mortgage on the plantations which belonged to it in favor of two men by the names of Revuelto and Braun. Later, in 1913, Revuelto acquired by assignment all the rights under the 1908 mortgage in favor of Sigmund Robinow & Son. The situation then after 1913 was that there were two mortgages outstanding on the plantations executed both by the collectivos and by the California corporations and that these two mortgages were owned by Revuelto and by Revuelto and Braun.

Financial difficulties came upon Harrison and his two companies, and proceedings for the foreclosure of the two mortgages were commenced. In 1914 a stipulation in writing was made in the foreclosure proceedings by the mortgagees on the one side and the two collectives or partnerships on the other together with Harrison and his two corporations. This stipulation recited that there were urgent need for further funds to operate the plantations and realize upon their crops and that the only person disposed to advance the necessary funds was Revuelto, one of the mortgagees, who would do so on condition that he be repaid out of the first fruits of the plantations and that he and Braun, the other mortgagee, be authorized to superintend and control the application of the moneys. The stipulation then asked that the court approve the arrangement agreed upon and the court made its order doing so.

It does not appear with certainty whether or not Revuelto entered into actual possession of the plantations at this time. It does appear, however, that he advanced very considerable sums under the arrangement, which, as has been said, entitled him to repayment out of the first fruits of the plantations. It also appears that neither these advances nor the mortgages have ever been repaid and that the plaintiff succeeded to all the rights of Revuelto and Braun. The plantations continued to be operated under the arrangement mentioned until 1916. At that time, if not before, Revuelto, the mortgagee, entered into the occupancy of the plantations and this with the knowledge and consent of the mortgagors. Revuelto and after his death his estate remained in possession of the plantations, operating them and cultivating and harvesting their crops until the spring of 1917. At that time Chiapas Coffee Company purchased the mortgages from the Revuelto estate and Braun and purchased also the credits for the moneys advanced by Revuelto and his estate for carrying on the plantations pursuant to the arrangements detailed. The Chiapas Coffee Company remained in occupancy similarly operating the plantations until January, 1921. At that time it transferred all its rights to the respondent, and the respondent took possession and has been in possession ever since.

It is evident that the acre certificate holders supplied the money with which Harrison's two companies operated and were the parties chiefly interested beneficially through the companies. The two companies getting into financial difficulties, the certificate holders organized themselves into a corporation for their own protection. This corporation was called the Chiapas Coffee Company. The mortgages and claims of Revuelto and Braun were, of course, superior to the rights of the certificate holders, and foreclosure being threatened and in fact commenced, the certificate holders undertook to purchase and finally did purchase those mortgages and claims, paying therefor something in excess of $250,000. This was done in 1917. When the Chiapas Coffee Company purchased the mortgages, it was part of the arrangement that the possession of the plantations should be turned over to the Chiapas Company, and this was done. The arrangement for the purchase of the mortgages by the Chiapas Company and its taking over of possession of the properties was the result of negotiations covering a considerable period of time, to which Harrison, representing himself, his two companies, and the two collectives holding the legal title, was party, and the arrangement made was made with their consent. This is evidenced by two writings appearing in the record, one a letter written by Mr. Harrison to a Mr. W. H. McInerney, who represented the acre certificate holders, dated October 5, 1916, and reading as follows:

"In reply to your letter of even date, and in accordance with a conversation had with you this morning, I wish to confirm the statements made to you at that time, in substance as follows: I will agree to sign a Deed of Transfer of all the coffee properties in the State of Chiapas, Mexico, or all properties, wherever situated, belonging to the certificate holders of the Hidalgo Plantation & Commercial Company, and the certificate holders of the Las Zacualpa Plantation Company and or Hidalgo Plantation & Commercial Company and La Zacualpa Plantation Company, at any time such a document is prepared, subject, of course, to the mortgages outstanding against these properties in the names of Messrs. Revuelto and Braun, Mr. W. S. Fisher and Mr. Jose Revuelto."

The other is a cable which Harrison sent to one Manuel Gris, the attorney in fact of himself and his California corporations in Mexico. The cable is dated February 5, 1917, and reads:

"Business Revuelto Braun finally concluded. Turnover to Graham Ker absolute control properties covered by Revuelto Braun mortgage."

The Graham Ker mentioned in the cable was the agent of the Chiapas Coffee Company in Mexico, and the plantations were turned over to him by the Revuelto estate pursuant to the purchase of the Revuelto and Braun claims and mortgages and with the consent of Harrison and his companies, as indicated in the letter and cable.

[1] That the Chiapas Company purchased the two mortgages in 1917 is not strictly accurate in one sense. The arrangement for the purchase was made in 1917, and the occupancy of the plantations was taken by the Chiapas Company at that time. The full purchase price of the mortgages, however, was not paid, but only a part, and the papers were placed in escrow against payment in full. Such payment in full was later made and the terms of the escrow met.

Appellants contend that the conveyance of the mortgages was not complete until the final payment made in June and July, 1921, respectively, and the mortgages which had been held in escrow delivered, and that therefore title did not pass until such delivery, and consequently neither respondent nor its predecessor was a mortgagee in possession at the time of the harvesting of the crop nor at the time of the levy of the attachment, and cites us to Whitney v. Sherman, 178 Cal. 435, 173 P. 931. The case cited merely holds that no title passes until the condition of the escrow is so far performed that the grantee is entitled to the possession of the deed; that as the escrow was abandoned, the deed was not delivered pursuant to the escrow instructions, and it therefore became effective only at the time of the delivery. While that is true, it is likewise the rule that when the escrow is complete its completion relates back to the date when the papers were placed in escrow (McDonald v. Huff, 77 Cal. 279, 19 P. 499; Marr v. Rhodes, 131 Cal. 270, 63 P. 364), so that in all legal effect the Chiapas Company in 1917 both acquired the mortgages and took possession then, which the mortgagees previously had.

From 1917, when the possession was taken by the Chiapas Coffee Company, all of the money which went into the upkeep and operation of the plantations, including the entire expense of producing and marketing the coffee here involved, was paid by the Chiapas Coffee Company or by respondent. The appellant Geo. A. Moore & Co., on the other hand, claims as a creditor of the collectivos upon an unsecured indebtedness which arose prior to February, 1914. As the coffee attached would not have been produced but for the financing of the plantations by the Chiapas Coffee Company and respondent, the equities of the case are with respondent.

The main question in the case is the construction of certain Mexican statutes. As appellants express it in their brief:

"As we view it, the point involved is really very narrow and very simple, though at first, by reason of the long history, seems complex. It is, whether under the laws of Mexico one who is in physical occupation of land, without claim or right of title, becomes the owner of coffee grown on the land."

The Mexican statute applicable to the controversy here presented is the chapter on "Accession," containing a number of articles. The articles pertinent to the case are as follows:

"Art. 773. The ownership of properties gives a right to all which they produce, or which is united or incorporated with them naturally or artificially. This right is called 'accession.'"

"Art. 789. He who builds, plants or sows in bad faith on the land of another shall lose what is built, planted or sown, without having the right to claim any indemnification from the owner of the soil, or of retaining the thing.

"Art. 792. It is understood that there is bad faith on the part of the builder, planter or sower, when he makes the planting or sowing, or permits, without reclamation that another may do so, with his material on land which he knows is another's, without previously asking the owner for his consent in writing."

[2] The question as to the sufficiency of the consent in writing under article 792 contained in the letter written by O. H. Harrison to W. H. McInerney, who represented the acre certificate holders, and the cable sent by Harrison to Manuel Gris, the attorney in fact of himself and his California corporations in Mexico, to turn over absolute control to Graham Ker (the agent of the Chiapas Coffee Company) of the properties covered by Revuelto and Braun's mortgage, is attacked by appellants. Appellants contend that under the principles of law the construction of this "Title on Accession" is for the court, while respondent contends the determination of a foreign law is a fact for the jury, or for the court, if a jury is waived, which, under a conflict of the evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Numerous authorities have been cited from other jurisdictions, but none from this state. These authorities do not seem to be entirely in accord; however, the authorities seem to agree, at least to the extent that where a foreign law is founded on the unwritten law of a foreign country, such as the common law or the civil law, the question is regarded as one of fact to be found by the trial court as a fact, and where the question to be determined arises upon the statute law of a foreign country and the statute itself is all that is before the court, the question becomes one of law. But when the construction of the statute is a controversial question, as it is in this case, which invites the testimony of experts, it likewise becomes a question of fact.

Appellants criticize the consent in writing, claiming that it is not sufficient, that it does not describe what is to be done under it, etc. If, as appellants contend, the construction of this section is purely a question of law, could this court with the section only before it, and without reading anything into it, hold that the consent means a formal document containing some particular phraseology descriptive of what is to be done under it, or would it not be a more reasonable construction to hold that the section requires merely a writing signed by the party to be charged and that the right of the planter, grower, and cultivator to the crop cannot be acquired through a mere oral agreement?

The question as to the character of the written consent required being the main controverted question in the case, it became necessary to determine the issue. This could be done only by determining the construction placed on the statute by the judicial opinions of the courts of Mexico or by the testimony of experts learned in the law of that country. There being no judicial opinions or decisions and the issue being submitted on the testimony of experts, the question became one of fact. It is not necessary to review the authorities cited, as the question here involved has been passed upon in Compania Trans. de Petroleo v. Mexican Gulf Oil Co. (C. C. A.) 292 F. 846, decided since the instant case was tried, which case is the latest judicial expression on the question and involves the construction of a Mexican statute. In that case the court says:

"Beginning with The Amelia, sub nom. Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cranch, 1 and 38, 2 L. Ed. 15, the law has been as stated by Chief Justice Marshall: 'That the laws of a foreign nation, designed only for the direction of its own affairs, are not to be noticed by the courts of other countries, unless proved as facts, * * * cannot be questioned.'

"We had occasion recently in an admiralty case to restate this now settled principle, and to cite some well-known authorities, Taya's Sons Co. of New Orleans v. Compania Arrendataria (C. C. A.) 280 F. 825. See, also, Hudson River Pulp & Paper Co. v. Warner, 99 F. 187, 188, 39 C. C. A. 452; The Asiatic Prince, 108 F. 287, 289, 47 C. C. A. 325. In 10 Ruling Case Law, 'Evidence,' 319 (cf. Bank of China v. Morse, 168 N. Y. 458, 61 N. E. 774, 56 L. R. A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 676), it is stated: 'There is some controversy whether the proof of foreign laws should be addressed to the court or the jury. It involves, however, no serious conflict, and depends entirely upon the form in which the foreign law is presented. Although what the foreign law is, is usually denominated a question of fact, yet, when it merely involves the construction of a written statute or the interpretation of judicial opinions, it becomes a question of law.'

"We need not pause, however, to mark the line between court and jury in a case confronting the trial court, because here, where the construction of Vera Cruz statutes was a controversial question below, which invited the testimony of experts, the judgment of the court determined as a fact [italics ours] (Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 6 S. Ct. 242, 29 L. Ed. 535; Chicago & Alton R. R. v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 119 U. S. 615, 622, 7 S. Ct. 398, 30 L. Ed. 519) that plaintiffs became the owners of the oil on its being reduced to possession and had a cause of action for the value of the oil taken by the trespasser."

[3] In the instant case three experts were called as witnesses to testify as to whether or not the cable from Harrison constituted a sufficient consent in writing under the Mexican law of "Accession." Mr. Verna Estanol, called by respondent, testified that under article 792 all that is necessary is that the consent is in writing, "but there is no special formality attached thereto," and with reference to the cable sent by Harrison to Manuel Gris, the attorney in fact of himself and his California corporations in Mexico, that such cable "is a consent in writing as required by article 792"; that if an American corporation should be in the actual physical occupancy of some coffee plantations in the state of Chiapas in Mexico and paid all the expenses of planting, cultivating, harvesting, and marketing the coffee from those plantations, and the person or persons in whom the legal title is vested knows of all the circumstances, it would have been acting in good faith according to the Mexican law, because it had been acting with the knowledge and consent of the other party, the owner of the land. Mr. Estanol further testified that the requirement of the "consent in writing" prescribed in article 792 does not apply at all in a controversy other than one between the parties themselves—between the owner of the land and the cultivator of the crop—that the lack of consent in writing only makes a contract void in disputes between the parties, and, further, under the Mexican law, when a transaction has become fully executed, the requirement of a written contract or other writing evidencing the transaction possesses no further materiality, and so, of course, if this construction of the statute be correct, and written consent under the circumstances here presented is not required, article 3194 of the Mexican Civil Code, requiring contracts affecting the possession of immovable property to be registered, has no application.

Mr. Arturo Guajardo and Mr. Manuel G. Salinas, called by appellants, testified to a contrary construction of the statute. The trial court, however, on this conflict in the evidence found for respondent, and such finding, being a finding of fact, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In view of the foregoing, discussion of the remaining points presented would be academic.

The judgment is affirmed.

BUTLER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5634.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 13, 1927.

1. Certiorari ⚡6—Party neglecting to timely appeal from order dismissing action held not entitled to certiorari to require trial court to proceed.

Where party failed to give notice of appeal within time allowed after court's order dismissing action, certiorari would not lie to require trial court to proceed.

2. Mandamus ⚡4(1)—Plaintiff held not entitled to mandamus to require trial of action, dismissed on other grounds than lack of jurisdiction; appeal being proper remedy.

Where trial court dismissed action upon other grounds than for want of jurisdiction, plaintiff held not entitled to mandamus to require court to proceed after time for appeal had expired; appeal being the proper remedy.

Application by Rozellia O. Butler for certiorari and mandamus to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County and Frank C. Collier, Judge, and to compel the court to proceed with the trial of an action for divorce. Writs denied.

William J. Clark, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

CONREY, P. J. This is an application "for a writ of review and a writ of mandamus," and, particularly, to compel the court to proceed in an action of divorce wherein the court has made an order dismissing the action.

[1] It would appear that the petitioner is not entitled to a writ of review, since she had a right of appeal. The petition shows that she did give notice of appeal, but that through some mistake or inadvertence she failed to perfect that appeal within the time allowed by law. I fail to discover anything in the cases cited in petitioner's memorandum of authorities sufficient to sustain Mr. Clark's claim that, in such cases as this, a writ of review will be granted after the right of appeal has been thus lost. The decisions are definitely to the effect that, in any case where the law gives the right of appeal from the order sought to be reviewed, a writ of review will not issue. The case of Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 474, 114 P. 978, which seems to be the leading authority relied upon by petitioner, was a case originating in a justice's court, wherein, of course, there was no right of appeal from the judgment rendered by the superior court dismissing the appeal of the cause to that court.

[2] I am also inclined to the opinion that a writ of mandate should not issue in this case. It is true that in a certain line of cases where courts have dismissed actions and have declined to proceed with the trial thereof, and where the ground of such ruling by the court was that the court did not have jurisdiction of the action or appeal, and where the higher court determined that the lower court did have such jurisdiction, the writ of mandate has issued to compel the court to resume its jurisdiction and proceed with the action on its merits.

I am not at all sure that the petition herein shows that the superior court, in dismissing the action of Butler v. Butler, was proceeding upon the theory or ground that the court was without jurisdiction in the action. Apparently, the dismissal was based, as was the motion for dismissal, upon various grounds other than a want of jurisdiction. This being so, plaintiff's only remedy against erroneous dismissal of the action was the remedy by appeal. The judgment of dismissal stands as a judgment rendered within the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court, and since its validity cannot be tested by a writ of review, neither can the court be required by writ of mandate to proceed with the action—a proceeding which would be in conflict with its order of dismissal.

The petition is denied.

BROWNING v. RIVER FARMS CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 3235.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 15, 1927.

1. Warehousemen ⚡27—Warehouseman held entitled to charge for resacking wheat when sacks broke (Warehouse Act 1909, §§ 21, 22, 30, 34; § 27, as amended by St. 1919, p. 398, § 1; Civ. Code, §§ 1837, 1856, 1858a).

Warehouseman held entitled to charge for resacking wheat when sacks gave way, in view of provision in receipts issued providing for such charges and Warehouse Act (St. 1909, p. 437) §§ 21, 22, 30, 34, and section 27, as amended by St. 1919, p. 398, § 1, and Civ. Code, §§ 1837, 1856, 1858a.

2. Warehousemen ⚡27—Warehouseman held not limited to remedy of selling stored wheat when sacks broke (Warehouse Act 1909, §§ 34, 35).

Warehouseman held not restricted to remedy of selling stored wheat when sacks gave way by Warehouse Act (St. 1909, p. 437), § 34, relative to perishable property, in view of section 35 authorizing warehouseman to resort to other remedies.

3. Warehousemen ⚡27—"Perishable property" which warehouseman may sell does not include wheat in perishable sacks (Warehouse Act 1909, § 34).

"Perishable property," within Warehouse Act (St. 1909, p. 437), § 34, authorizing warehouseman to sell it, relates to property subject to speedily decay, and does not include wheat contained in sacks, since in such case only containers are perishable.

Hiram W. Johnson, Jr., and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to recover the sum of $534.90, paid to the defendant on account of warehouse charges alleged to have been unlawfully made by the defendant for and on account of resacking and reconditioning certain lots of grain deposited by the plaintiff with the defendant, and kept by the defendant in a warehouse belonging to it, situate in the county of Yolo. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The record shows: That in July, 1921, the plaintiff stored in the defendant's warehouse 1,782 sacks of wheat, and in July, 1922, stored certain other sacks of wheat to the number of 1,424, making an aggregate 4,932 sacks of wheat stored by the plaintiff in defendant's warehouse. The wheat remained in the defendant's warehouse until the latter part of May, 1925; that is, a part of the grain remained stored approximately three years, and the portion stored in 1921 remained approximately four years. In the summer of 1923, two years after the storage of grain in 1921 and about one year after the storage of grain in 1922, many of the sacks broke, and the piles fell down, and a considerable quantity of the wheat spilled out over the floor and driveway of the warehouse. That the defendant, as claimed by it, for the purpose of protecting said grain from wastage, resacked a portion of said wheat, furnishing new sacks where necessary, and sewing up old ones, and repiled the wheat where necessary. The present action involves charges for reconditioning and resacking the stored wheat during the years 1923 and 1924, aggregating the sum of $534.90. These charges were made by defendant for labor charges and the cost of furnishing sacks. The trial court found, upon what we think is sufficient testimony, that, in order to preserve the wheat from wastage, resacking and repiling were necessary.

Even though resacking and reconditioning for the purpose of preserving the stored grain were necessary, the appellant contends that the defendant had no right to resack the wheat during the years 1923 and 1924 without express authorization on the part of the plaintiff. It is further contended that the defendant's only remedy was to notify the plaintiff and then sell the wheat, if it were not removed, on the theory that the stored grain was perishable property, as defined by section 34 of the Warehouse Act of the state of California (St. 1909, p. 443). The court found the storing of the wheat, as we have above stated; that the defendant issued warehouse receipts therefor; that the receipts upon their face provided that all resacking charges should be paid by the owner; that the printed and approved tariffs allowed to be charged by the defendant by the Railroad Commission of the state of California were on file with the Railroad Commission and posted in said warehouse of the defendant; that at the time of the acceptance of the wheat by the defendant it was contained in good storage grain bags, that said wheat was allowed to remain by the plaintiff in the warehouse building of the defendant from the time it was stored, partly in 1921 and partly in 1922, until the latter part of May, 1925, that during the summer of 1923, many of the sacks in which said wheat was contained broke, and the piles fell down, and the wheat spilled out over the floor of the defendant's warehouse; that the wheat was stored in sacks and not in bulk, and that, in order to preserve said wheat from wastage, it was necessary to resack the wheat, repair the grain sacks where possible, and repile the same, and that the work and labor performed by the defendant and the materials furnished were necessary for the preservation of the stored wheat; that in 1924 it became necessary to resack a further portion of said wheat; that all the work and labor performed by the defendant and materials furnished in order to preserve said wheat and prevent damage to other grain stored in defendant's warehouse was in the exercise of reasonable care in regard to said wheat; that the work which became necessary to protect said wheat from wastage was not on account of any failure of the defendant to use or exercise proper care in the preservation thereof; that it was due to the extreme length of time in which said wheat was permitted to remain on storage. The record shows that it is unusual for grain to remain stored in warehouses until the receipt of grain from crops of ensuing years; that the usual course is for all the grain to be removed from a warehouse before a new crop comes in, and in most instances the grain is removed before taxes may become assessable thereon in the following month of March.

As stated herein, all the receipts issued by the defendant governing the several lots of grain contained upon the face thereof this statement: "All storage and resacking charges must be paid before delivery of grain," etc.

The necessity for the resacking of the grain having been found by the court, and also that such resacking became necessary without failure on the part of the defendant, and such finding being sufficiently supported, the legality of the charges therefor need only be determined.

The Warehouse Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 437, amended 1919, p. 398, and 1923, p. 676) contains, among other sections, the following:

Section 21:

"A warehouseman shall be liable for any loss or injury to the goods caused by his failure to exercise such care in regard to them as a reasonably careful owner of similar goods would exercise, but he shall not be liable, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, for any loss or injury to the goods which could not have been avoided by the exercise of such care."

Section 22:

"Except as provided in the following section, a warehouseman shall keep the goods so far separate from goods of other depositors, and from other goods of the same depositor for which a separate receipt has been issued, as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the goods deposited."

Section 27 of the same act (amended by St. 1919, p. 398, § 1) further provides as follows (section 27):

"Subject to the provisions of section 30, a warehouseman shall have a lien on goods deposited by the owner or by the legal possessor of the property or on the proceeds thereof in his hands, for all lawful charges for storage and preservation of the goods," etc.

Section 30 requires the receipt to state upon its face the charges which will be claimed against the property.

Section 34 specifies that:

"If goods are of a perishable nature, or by keeping, will deteriorate greatly in value, or by their odor, leakage, inflammability, or explosive nature, will be liable to injure other property, the warehouseman may give such notice to the owner, or to the person in whose name the goods are stored, * * * to remove the goods * * * from the warehouse," etc., and upon failure to do so, the warehouseman may proceed to sell the same.

Section 1837 of the Civil Code, relating to the deposit of goods for keeping, reads:

"If a thing deposited is in actual danger of perishing before instructions can be obtained from the depositor, the depositary may sell it for the best price obtainable, and retain the proceeds as a deposit, giving immediate notice of his proceedings to the depositor."

And section 1858a, Civil Code, specifies further:

"No warehouseman, wharfinger, or other person must sell or incumber, ship, transfer, or remove beyond his immediate control any property for which a receipt has been given, without the consent in writing of the person holding such receipt plainly indorsed thereon in ink."

The record shows that it was necessary to keep the grain stored by the plaintiff in the defendant's warehouse properly sacked in order that it might not be wasted or commingled with other property, that grain stored in warehouses is stored in sacks, and that grain stored by each depositor is separately piled so as to be readily distinguishable.

By sections 21 and 22 of the Warehouse Act, which we have quoted, the warehouseman is made liable for any injury to stored property occasioned by his failure to exercise such care in regard thereto as a reasonably careful owner would exercise in relation to similar property, and that it is necessary for the warehouseman to keep the stored goods separate where a receipt has been issued therefor, so as to permit at all times of identification and redelivery of the stored property, and section 27 gives the warehouseman a lien for all lawful charges for storage and preservation of the goods.

In 40 Cyc. p. 450, the text-writer thus states the rule in relation to charges such as we are here considering. It is there said:

"A contract with a warehouseman may contain an express provision as to the charges and expenses which the bailor is to pay, in which case the contract will govern as to the amount, the items, and the time of payment. In the absence of a special contract, where goods are received by a warehouseman for storage in the usual course of business, there is an implied contract on the part of the bailor to pay the customary charges for storage and expenses, or such reasonable charges as warehousemen of like capacity and facility are entitled to; and this is true even though the warehouseman does not know the identity of the owner until possession is demanded. The warehouseman is entitled to reimbursement of such sums as the customs and usages of trade and commerce require him to expend in order to conserve and protect the property."

[1] In the instant case, the receipts issued, which constitute the contract, binding the warehouseman to redeliver the property to the person entitled thereto, there is written into and a part of the receipt a provision relating to the necessary charges for resacking stored grain. The court also found the existence of a custom relating to such charges, but we think the receipts issued in this case by the warehouseman, and accepted and held for nearly four years by the plaintiff, containing a provision relative to the resacking of the grain in question, justified the court in coming to the conclusion that it was within the understanding of the contracting parties that the costs and expenses of resacking the grain in question necessary for its preservation should be borne by the owner of the grain. It was certainly not within the contemplation of the parties that the grain should remain in the warehouse for such an unusual period of time without any care or attention or without resacking, when necessary to preserve the identity of the stored wheat and to keep it ready for redelivery upon demand. Section 1856, Civil Code, is applicable here. That section reads:

"A depositary for hire has a lien for storage charges and for advances and insurance incurred at the request of the bailor, and for money necessarily expended in and about the care, preservation and keeping of the property stored. * * *

It will be observed that the foregoing section covers two classes of obligations: (1) Advances and insurance incurred at the request of the bailor, which would appear to cover money advances to the bailor upon the security of the property stored; and, secondly, without any request on the part of the bailor, the depositary has a lien for money necessarily expended in and about the care, preservation, and keeping of the property stored. These are obligations resting upon the depositor of goods, the first of which, advances and insurance at his request, the other class, such charges as the bailee or warehouseman necessarily incurs in the preservation of the property. The general rule as to expenses in the preservation of property is thus stated in 6 Corpus Juris, 1131:

"Reimbursement for actual disbursements and necessary and useful expenses incurred in preserving the property bailed, or in fulfilling the objects of the bailment, may be recovered either by a gratuitous bailee or by a bailee where the bailment is for the benefit of both parties."

Likewise, in 27 R. C. L. 1007, it is said:

"The doctrine is firmly settled that every bailee for hire including, of course, a warehouseman who by his labor and skill has imparted an additional value to the goods intrusted to him, has a lien upon the property for his reasonable charges."

A somewhat similar case is found in Bacon v. Fourth National Bank (City Ct.) 9 N. Y. S. 435, where it is held that in an emergency a depositary has the implied authority to incur expenses on behalf of the owner for the preservation of the property, and that an agent has the duty of taking such steps as are reasonably necessary for the protection of his principal's property and for its preservation, and that, having made the outlays for that purpose, he is entitled to reimbursement.

It is further stated the reason for the rule is that a request on the part of the principal is inferred, where the advances are made in the regular course of business, or even on the spur of some pressing urgency not provided for by any rule, since the employer may fairly be taken to have authorized the employee to make the expenditure that a prudent man would conceive necessary for the safeguarding of his interests.

There is some testimony to the effect that some of the grain in question had been infested with weevil, and under such circumstances the law would certainly authorize the warehouseman to take such steps as were reasonably necessary in the resacking and repiling of the grain, to prevent other grain belonging to other people, stored in the same warehouse, from becoming infested.

Our attention has been called to the opinions and orders of the Railroad Commission relative to the charges allowed to be made by warehousemen. In some of the cases, resacking charges have been provided for in the traffic schedule, and in other cases resacking charges have been allowed in addition to the regular tariff charge fixed for the particular warehouse in question, but we find nothing in any of the cases cited or in any of the rules and regulations of the Railroad Commission called to our attention affecting in any way the judgment entered by the trial court in this case.

[2, 3] It is further argued on the part of the appellant that the grain in question comes under the terms and provisions of section 34 of the Warehouse Act relating to perishable property, and that the defendant's only remedy was to proceed to sell the stored wheat. Section 35 of the same act, however, expressly states that the remedy for enforcing a lien provided for in the act does not preclude warehousemen from resorting to other remedies allowed by law. However, the term "perishable property," though a relative term as used in the act, relates to property subject to speedy decay, or, as we find in the law dictionaries as perishable property, "goods which decay and lose their value, if not speedily put to their intended use."

In the instant case it was and is a question of perishable containers and not of perishable property. There is nothing in the record indicating deterioration on the part of the grain. Wastage has a different meaning from deterioration. A perfectly good article of merchandise may be wasted, while other articles of merchandise are of such a nature that, unless speedily consumed, they deteriorate. As an instance we might state, grains do not speedily deteriorate, even though they may be wasted; vegetables and fruits will speedily deteriorate and become valueless.

We do not think the case of Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Saulsbury, 126 Ky. 179, 103 S. W. 254, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431, wherein it was held that corn is perishable freight within the terms of the Kentucky statute, relative to the sale of unclaimed property, applicable to the circumstances here presented. The definition given in the case of Illinois Central Railroad Company v. McClellan, 54 Ill. 58, 5 Am. Rep. 83, holding that corn was not perishable property, is the one we think applicable. It was there said:

"Perishable property, in the commercial sense, is that which, from its nature, decays in a short space of time, without reference to the care it receives. Of that character, are many varieties of fruits," etc.

In Newman v. Kane, 9 Nev. 234, "Perishable property" was defined as that "which is necessarily subject to immediate decay, and does not apply to property like hay, which could with ordinary or reasonable care * * * be preserved."

The property stored by the plaintiff with the defendant could be and was preserved for a period of four years, and all that it required was the ordinary and usual care to prevent wastage, in order that it might be ready for redelivery upon demand by the owner of the warehouse receipts, upon presentation thereof.

The court further found that the defendant held the plaintiff of the condition of the grain and the necessity for resacking, by two letters, one dated January 29, 1924, and one dated June 6, 1924, and that plaintiff took no action in relation thereto.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CLAWSON. (Cr. 1366.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. April 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1927.

1. Rape $\S$ 20—Information charging crime of rape charged "public offense," though faulty in attempt to plead statutory elements thereof (Pen. Code, $\S$ 261).

Information charging commission "of the crime of rape" charged a "public offense," though faulty in attempt to plead some of facts made elements of such crime by Pen. Code, $\S$ 261.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Offense.]

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Trial amendment of information for rape, by adding "with force and violence" overcoming resistance, held properly permitted, in absence of prejudice to defendant (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Where rape case was tried on theory that information properly pleaded force and violence and resistance, and all evidence thereof was received without objection by defendant, who was given free rein in presenting defense of consent, court properly permitted trial amendment, adding words, "and with force and violence," and allegation of resistance overcome thereby, in absence of prejudice to defendant, in view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, and Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Trial amendment of information to conform to proof is permissible, when not prejudicial to defendant's substantial rights (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, which is in accord with Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, and rule that mere technical errors, not affecting party's substantial rights, shall not be employed to defeat justice, permits trial amendment to conform to proof when possible without prejudice to defendant's substantial rights.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 589(1)—Denial of continuance to enable defendant to plead to good amended information held not prejudicial.

Denial of continuance to enable defendant to plead to amended information conforming to every technical requirement of pleading held not prejudicial as denying him constitutional right to plead, as continuance could not have benefited him, and he could plead forthwith on filing of indictment.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 589(1)—Granting continuance to allow demurrer to confessedly good information is discretionary.

Granting of continuance to allow defendant to present a futile demurrer to a confessedly good information is within trial court's discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Raymond W. Clawson was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. P. Henshall, C. M. Booth, and G. B. Harris, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, of San Francisco, for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried before a jury on an information charging rape. From the judgment following the verdict of guilty and from the order denying his motion for a new trial he has appealed on a typewritten record. The grounds of appeal are that the information was improperly amended during the course of the trial, and that the defendant's motion for a continuance to enable him to plead to the amended information was improperly denied.

In the original information the district attorney charged the defendant "of the crime of rape committed as follows: * * * The said Raymond W. Clawson * * * did * * * willfully, unlawfully, feloniously ravish and carnally know * * * without the consent and against the will of said ———." During the course of the trial, after the prosecution had rested and the cross-examination of the defendant was about completed, the court granted the state leave to add the words "and with force and violence" after the word "feloniously," and also the allegation that the prosecutrix resisted and her resistance was overcome by force and violence on the part of the defendant. Objection was made to this amendment by the defendant, and, when the amendment was allowed, the defendant asked that he be arraigned on the amended information, and that he be granted a continuance to enable him to plead thereto. The objection was overruled upon the ground that the entire case had been heard upon the theory that force and violence was properly pleaded, that the amendment was made merely to conform to the proof, and that the facts proved disclosed that the defendant was not prejudiced by the amendment.

[1-3] Appellant premises his attack on the judgment upon the claim that the original information failed to charge any public offense, and that the court, therefore, had no jurisdiction of either the person or the subject-matter. With this we cannot agree. It charged the commission of the crime of rape. It attempted to plead some of the facts which are made elements of that crime by section 261 of the Penal Code, and in this respect, it is conceded, the pleading was faulty. If the question had been raised by special demurrer to the information, there can be no doubt that an amendment would have been properly allowed in the form here made. Here the whole cause was tried on the theory that the information properly pleaded force and violence on the part of the appellant and resistance on the part of the prosecutrix. All the evidence tending to prove these issues was received without objection from the appellant, and he had been given free rein in the presentation of his defense—that the act was committed with the consent of the prosecutrix and without force or resistance. Section 1008 of the Penal Code permits an amendment to be made to an information after the defendant has pleaded “in the discretion of the court where it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant.” This section is in accord with section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution and with the rule of the later decisions that mere technical errors in either pleading or procedure, which do not in any way affect the substantial rights of the parties, are not to be employed to defeat justice, and it would seem to be the clear purpose of the section to permit an amendment of this character to conform to the proof, when that can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. Here the appellant has not suggested how, under any possible conception of the record, he was in any way prejudiced by the amendment.

[4, 5] The objection is also made that the trial court erred in denying appellant a continuance to enable him to plead to the amended information. But here again there is no suggestion of prejudice. The amended information conforms to every technical requirement of pleading, and it is apparent that if a continuance had been granted, it could not have possibly resulted in any benefit to the appellant. The whole argument on this point is that appellant was denied his constitutional right to “plead,” but the way was open for him to plead forthwith on the filing of the indictment. The granting of a continuance to allow him to present a futile demurrer to a confessedly good information was within the discretion of the trial court, and we think that court properly exercised its discretion when it denied the request.

The appellant had a fair and impartial trial; in fact the learned trial judge displayed to the defense unusual consideration and patience. The verdict of the jury was based upon clear and convincing proof, which is not questioned on this appeal. We have carefully examined the entire record, including the evidence, and are satisfied that there has been no miscarriage of justice.

At the time of the oral argument, the presiding justice, deeming himself disqualified under section 170a, Code of Civil Procedure, withdrew from participation in the cause, and the parties thereupon stipulated that any justice or judge who might be assigned to this department prior to the determination hereof might participate therein.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE, by STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS, v. MARBLEHEAD
LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 4997.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 12, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 9, 1927.

1. Eminent domain  191(3)—Complaint held not demurrable for failure to allege that proposed right of way, sought to be condemned, was located in manner most compatible with greatest public good and least private injury (Const. art. 16, § 2; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1241, subd. 2, 1242, 1244).

In proceeding for condemnation of land for road, necessary to completion of system contemplated by Const. art. 16, § 2, complaint held not demurrable for failure to allege that proposed right of way was located in manner most compatible with greatest public good and least private injury, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1242, where it contained elements prescribed by section 1244, in view of section 1241, subd. 2, since choice of land by state or agents must be presumed lawful.

2. Eminent domain  196—Statutory amendment making highway commission's resolutions conclusive evidence of location of road most compatible with greatest public good held applicable at trial, though complaint was filed before enactment (St. 1925, p. 384).

1925 amendment to eminent domain statute (St. 1925, p. 384), providing that resolution of highway commission is conclusive evidence that improvement is located in manner most compatible with greatest public good and least private injury, held applicable at trial of case, though complaint was filed before it was enacted, since it concerns evidentiary effect of resolutions.

3. Eminent domain ⇨223—In condemnation proceeding for road, findings on matters required by statute held not objectionable as outside pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. § 1248).

In proceeding to condemn land for road, findings on matters, required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, to be ascertained, and on which legal testimony was introduced, held not objectionable as outside issues raised by pleadings.

4. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Evidence of market value is admissible as basis for determining compensation in condemnation proceeding.

Basis for recovery of compensation in proceeding for condemnation of land for road is market value of land to be taken, and any relevant and material evidence of such value is admissible.

5. Eminent domain ⇨138—Where part of land is condemned for road, owner may have compensation for damages to residue.

When only part of tract of land is condemned for road purposes, just compensation that Constitution guarantees to owner includes not only value of part taken, but also damages accruing to residue from improvement.

6. Eminent domain ⇨136—Owner of condemned land may recover difference between market value of entire tract before taking and of residue after taking.

Owner of land condemned for road purposes is entitled to recover difference between market value of entire tract before taking and market value of what is left after taking.

7. Eminent domain ⇨124—Market value of land condemned is not enhanced by existence of railroad's easement, where railroad had not attempted to retain right of way by any construction (Civ. Code, § 468).

Where railroad had not attempted to retain right of way by construction, as provided in Civ. Code, § 468, it is proper in proceeding to condemn land for road to conclude that, as matter of law, market value of land had not been enhanced by existence of railroad's easement, since damages must be estimated with reference to use and condition of land at time of condemnation.

8. Eminent domain ⇨223—Findings in condemnation proceeding are not invalid for including unnecessary points.

Validity of findings in proceeding for condemnation of land for road is not subject to attack on ground that they include points exceeding bounds of necessary findings on issues presented, since immaterial matters will be treated as surplusage and disregarded.

9. Eminent domain ⇨223—Court's findings on conflicting evidence in condemnation proceeding are conclusive.

Where evidence in proceeding for condemnation of land for road was conflicting, court's findings will not be disturbed, since all intentions are resolved in favor of its decision on fact questions, if supported by any substantial evidence.

10. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Resident of county for 40 years, engaged in real estate business for 14 years, held qualified to testify to market value of land condemned.

In proceeding for condemnation of land for road, resident of county for 40 years, engaged in real estate business for 14 years, who had viewed defendant's property during week of trial and testified that he knew market value of similar property in county, held qualified to testify as to market value.

11. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Civil engineer who had appraised estates within county held qualified to testify to market value of land condemned.

In proceeding for condemnation of land for road, civil engineer who had appraised estates in county held qualified to testify as to market value.

12. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Resident of county for 45 years, who had dealt in real estate for 6 or 7 years, held qualified to testify to market value of land condemned.

In proceeding to condemn land for road, resident of county for 45 years, who had dealt in real estate for 6 or 7 years and had farmed within county for 25 years, held competent to testify to market value of land condemned.

13. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Banker and farmer residing within county for 52 years held qualified to testify to market value of land condemned.

In proceeding to condemn land for road, resident of county for 52 years, who was banker and farmer, loaned money on ranch property, and had been appointed commissioner to partition 22,000-acre ranch, held qualified to testify to market value of land condemned.

14. Evidence ⇨543(3)—Witnesses called to show market value of lands condemned are sufficiently qualified by showing knowledge and experience regarding lands in neighborhood.

Witnesses called in condemnation proceeding to show fair market value of land need not be experts in severe sense of term, but if they show knowledge and experience regarding lands in neighborhood it is sufficient to qualify them.

15. Eminent domain ⇨202(4)—In condemnation proceeding, evidence of value of lands for particular purposes, such as subdivision, held inadmissible.

In proceeding to condemn land for road, evidence of value of lands in terms of money for particular purposes, such as subdivision, is inadmissible, since market value is ultimate fact to be established and people are not bound to accept owner's theory that lands were suitable for subdivision.

16. Evidence ⇨158(16)—Testimony of president of state highway commission that funds in highway fund were sufficient to pave highway, sought to be condemned, held admissible against objection that budget was best evidence.

In proceeding for condemnation of land for road, president of state highway commission may testify that funds in third state highway fund were sufficient to pave highway, sought to be condemned, as against objection that budget was best evidence, since it cannot be said, as matter of law, that witness' personal knowledge of funds under his control was less authentic than book records of third person made at witness' instance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the People, by the Department of Public Works of the State of California, against the Marblehead Land Company and another, to condemn certain lands for highway purposes. From judgment awarding damages, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. J. Clark and Richard Hartley, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Lorrin Andrews, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff and respondent instituted this proceeding in eminent domain for the purpose of acquiring certain lands in the county of Ventura, alleged in its complaint as being necessary to the completion of a system of state highways contemplated by legislative acts of 1909 and 1915, and by section 2, article 16, of the Constitution of the state of California, adopted July 1, 1919.

The constitutional provision last mentioned directed the preparation of 40,000 suitable state bonds in the denomination of $1,000 each, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, and that they be signed, sold, and paid as provided in said act of 1915, and created funds therein designated as the "third state" highway, interest, revolving, and sinking funds. It was also provided, in part, that:

"The moneys in said 'third state highway fund' shall be used by the state department of engineering for the acquisition of rights of way for and the acquisition, construction and improvement of uncompleted portions of the system of state highways prescribed by the act of the Legislature approved May 22, 1909, known as the 'State Highway Act,' and the act of the Legislature approved May 20, 1915, and known as the 'State Highway Act of 1915,' and certain extensions thereof described in said last-named act, and also for the acquisition of the rights of way for and the acquisition, construction and improvement of the following additional highways as state highways: Barstow to Needles; Oxnard to San Juan Capistrano," —and 29 other sections of the intended highway system.

"Said additional highways to be located on the most direct and practical routes; provided, however, that twenty million dollars of the moneys in said 'third state highway fund,' or so much of said twenty million dollars as shall be necessary, shall be used for the completion of all of the system of state highways contemplated and provided for in said 'State Highway Act' and in said 'State Highway Act of 1915,' and the extensions thereof specified in said last-named act."

The plaintiff alleged that at a meeting held at Sacramento on November 24, 1922, "the California highway commission, acting for and on behalf of the department of public works of the state of California and the state of California, all of its members being present, a majority of the members of said California highway commission passed and adopted a resolution," set forth in the complaint in hæc verba, and which recited, among other things: That whereas said board had theretofore been authorized by the provisions of the Constitution, quoted above, to acquire rights of way for and to acquire, construct, and improve a state highway between Oxnard, in the county of Ventura, and San Juan Capistrano, in the county of Orange; and whereas said department deemed it necessary to proceed with the acquisition of title to strips or parcels of land necessary for such purposes; that said strips or parcels were necessary for such use; that public interest and necessity required such acquisition of the same for public use as rights of way for said state highway purposes; that the use of the lands hereinbefore described as and for rights of way for state highway purposes is a more necessary public use thereof than the use thereof or any part thereof for rights of way for railroad purposes; that, therefore, it be resolved that pursuant to such authority the strips or parcels of land specified were adopted as parts and units in and of the final survey line and location for said state highway, and declared:

"That such acquisition by the state of California of each, every, and all of said described strips or parcels of land as rights of way for integral portions of said state highway is necessary, and that such acquisition, in the manner provided by law, of said rights of way be and the same is hereby declared necessary."

And said resolution authorized the Attorney General to take all necessary steps to condemn the same. It was further alleged that "all facts, matters and things stated in said resolution of said California highway commission were and are true, and there is and at the time of passing and adopting said resolution there was sufficient money in the third state highway fund * * * available to pay for the right of way sought to be acquired by this action"; that bonds to the amount of $24,000,000 had been sold, and the proceeds thereof paid into the state treasury to the credit of said fund.

The portion of the real property here involved, as described in the resolution and complaint, consists of a strip 80 feet in width, 40 feet each side of a center line extending from a point in the westerly line of lot 3, section 27, township 1 south, range 20 west, San Bernardino base and meridian, in Ventura county, to a point on the boundary line between the counties of Ventura and Los Angeles, and is described by metes and bounds, and alleged to be "a part of a single tract of land."

The resolution embraced other lands, lying in Los Angeles county, which were also declared by the highway commission to be necessary integrals of the same highway. It was followed, however, by allegations of the complaint that public interest and necessity required the construction and improvement of a highway upon the lands in Ventura county, therein specifically described, and the plaintiff prayed that the use to which said land was sought to be taken be declared a public use authorized by law, and its taking necessary to such use.

The defendants demurred generally to the complaint, and also upon asserted grounds of ambiguity and uncertainty in that it could not be ascertained therefrom whether the plaintiff was seeking to condemn the right of way described as lying in Los Angeles county, or that described as being within the boundaries of Ventura county. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendants jointly answered, admitting ownership in the defendant Marblehead Land Company of all the lands through which ran the strip sought to be condemned, subject to an alleged easement of the defendant railway company, which said lands, they averred, consisted of a narrow strip from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles in width; and the other material allegations of the complaint were denied.

For a special affirmative defense the defendants alleged that all of the property described in the complaint was owned by the defendant Marblehead Land Company, subject to certain easements and leasehold interests; that the county of Los Angeles had caused to be condemned a right of way for county highway purposes through the ranch property heretofore mentioned, lying in said county, had declared on October 15, 1921, that it was open to the public, and that the same ever since had been used for such purposes, "although the legality of said condemnation is now being contested by the former owners of said property." It was further alleged by the defendants that the proposed state highway through Ventura county would not connect with the new Los Angeles county road, and would therefore have no outlet to the south unless continued through defendants' Los Angeles county property, parallel to the Los Angeles county road; that proceedings similar to the instant suit were then pending in Los Angeles county for condemnation of lands of the defendants for a right of way continuing the state road, which suit would be contested. The defendants urged, therefore, by their answer, and at the trial, that the state right of way herein sought to be taken, paralleling the county highway, and for the same purposes, would not constitute a public necessity; and, further, that it was unnecessary to establish such state right of way through Ventura county, unless it should ultimately be determined that the continuation of the state highway through Los Angeles county was a necessity.

A second and further special defense was interposed by the defendant Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway, on whose behalf it was alleged that the railway company was the owner of an easement 200 feet wide for railroad purposes, "paralleling in a general way the contour of the land along the Pacific Ocean, on which a right of way is located," and which had been conveyed to it for the ultimate purpose of extending a railroad with lateral connections to the city and county of San Francisco; that "said corporation has expended along said entire right of way a sum in excess of $350,000; that a portion of the land sought to be condemned for state highway purposes herein has already been appropriated to a public use, for railroad right of way," which latter use was more necessary to the public than that to which the plaintiff proposed to devote the property; that such railroad right of way was the only feasible route for a competing line; and that if condemned for state highway purposes it would be impossible to construct a railroad thereon, and would work irreparable injury to said defendant.

The defendant land company prayed judgment in the sum of $150,000, as the value of its property described in the complaint, and $200,000 as damages to adjoining property by the severance; and the defendant railway company prayed judgment for $350,000, alleged value of its property sought to be taken, and for $500,000, as severance damages.

The case was tried before the superior court without a jury, and findings of fact, conclusions of law, and an interlocutory decree were made and entered allowing the first-named defendant $3,000 for its lands condemned, and $1,000 as severance damages; and awarding the defendant railway company $500 as the value of lands taken from it, together with $500 as severance damages.

The innumerable objections interposed by appellants to the initiatory proceedings, the complaint, the evidence, and the sufficiency thereof, to rulings below, and to the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment, necessitate the foregoing somewhat extended detail of the status of the record before us.

[1] It is first contended that the demurrer should have been sustained, for the reason that the complaint did not allege that the proposed right of way was located "in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury," as required by section 1242 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that a right of way shall be located. Section 1244 of the same Code specifically provides what the complaint in an eminent domain proceeding must contain, as follows:

"The location, general route, and termini, and must be accompanied with a map thereof, so far as the same is involved in the action or proceeding," —and that the land shall be described. The complaint here involved contained these statutory elements, and we think it was therefore sufficient. But appellants insist that the quoted limitation as to public good and private injury is a jurisdictional fact, which must be pleaded in cases other than those instituted by municipal corporations. Section 1241, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"* * * When the legislative body of a county, city and county, or an incorporated city or town, shall, by resolution or ordinance, adopted by vote of two-thirds of all its members, have found and determined that the public interest and necessity require the acquisition, construction or completion, by such county, city and county, or incorporated city or town, of any proposed public utility, or any public improvement, and that the property described in such resolution or ordinance is necessary therefor, such resolution or ordinance shall be conclusive evidence; (a) of the public necessity of such proposed public utility or public improvement; (b) that such property is necessary therefor; and (c) that such proposed public utility or public improvement is planned or located in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good, and the least private injury. * * *

Prior to 1925 the statutes creating the California highway commission, and prescribing its powers and duties, did not contain the provision declaring such resolutions of that body to be conclusive, and appellants argue that it was intentionally omitted, for the reason that the highway commission is not a legislative body of a county, city and county, or incorporated city or town, and that its resolutions are not conclusive.

We do not deem it necessary to the validity or conclusiveness of a resolution of the highway commission that it be characterized as a legislative body. The most direct route, and that compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, is necessarily determined by the exercise of discretionary powers, and, as said in City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 P. 604, exercising as they do a public function, the choice of land made by the state or its agents, in the absence of clear and convincing evidence to the contrary, must be presumed correct and lawful. The highway commission in laying out a right of way pursues similar methods and performs like duties to those of a municipal council or board which demand the exercise of sound discretion.

"That the highway commission is vested with broad general powers over state highways and the expenditures of money provided therefor must be conceded. By the department of engineering law it is given 'full possession and control' over all state highways and 'all expenditures by the state for highway purposes * * * shall be under the full charge of the department.'" California Highway Com. v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 108, 218 P. 579, 584.

At any rate, in 1925 the statutes were amended by adding the following provision:

"Said resolution shall be conclusive evidence; (a) Of the public necessity of such proposed improvement;

"(b) That such property is necessary therefor; and

"(c) That such proposed public improvement is planned or located in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury." St. 1925, p. 384.

This provision was applicable at the date of the trial of this case, but as a pleading the complaint was sufficient in this regard as complying with section 1244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In advancing their argument, appellants confuse an evidentiary issue with one of pleading. If, for the sake of argument, it be conceded that prior to 1925 the resolution of the California highway commission would not have been conclusive to prove the matters in question, this would not even tend to show that such facts must have been pleaded, especially since the subject of the requirements of the complaint in this character of action is fully covered by section 1244.

[2] Since the provisions of section 1241 concern the evidentiary effect of the resolutions, provisions contained in the amendment enacted in 1925 making it similar in that regard to section 1241, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, concerning the evidentiary effect of resolutions of the highway commission, are applicable at the time of the trial to all cases, regardless of the date when the resolutions were adopted.

[3] The trial court rendered its findings of fact in 19 separately numbered paragraphs. The italicized portions of 6 of such paragraphs, therein numbered IX, X, XV, XVII, and XVIII, the parts of which are material to this proceeding being quoted below, are attacked by appellants upon the ground that they are "outside the issues raised by the pleadings," and are "unsupported by any of the allegations of the complaint."

In paragraph IX the court found:

"That the defendant Marblehead Land Company, a Delaware corporation, is the owner in fee of the land sought to be taken, and that the defendant Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway, a corporation, has an easement over certain portions thereof, for right of way purposes for a railroad running thereon, but in that behalf the court finds that the defendant Hueneme, Malibu and Port Los Angeles Railway, a corporation, did not within two years after the filing of its original articles of incorporation, or at any other time, begin the construction of its railroad or any portion thereof, upon said property, nor has ever put in operation any portion of its road at least 5 miles or otherwise, upon said property, nor has said corporation ever operated any railroad or railroads for the running thereon of any passenger or mixed or other trains for the carriage of the public or baggage or freight, or for any other purpose whatsoever."

In paragraph X:

"The court further finds that the public use to which said property is to be applied by the plaintiff is a more necessary public use than that to which it has already or heretofore been appropriated, and that the proposed public improvement is located for the taking of the said lands in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury."

Paragraph XV:

"The court further finds that, having made an inspection of said property by stipulation of counsel, said property lies along the shore of the ocean and is situated at the extreme southern point of Ventura county adjacent to the Los Angeles county line, and distant 48 miles from Pershing Square in Los Angeles, and over 28 miles from the nearest settlement, which is at Los Flores at the eastern end of the Malibu ranch, and accessible thence over a very different road. That the property is only 17 miles distant from Oxnard, but there is no road whatever connecting the land with any part of Ventura county except through Los Angeles county."

Paragraph XVI:

"The court further finds, upon said inspection, that at the western end of said land the mountains come quite close to the shore line and the mesa portion widens out generally toward the east. That the hill portion is quite precipitous and barren and the mesa portion is somewhat broken and cut with gullies. That the land is at present without water and without any apparent practicable source of water, other than about one miner's inch in Sycamore canyon."

Paragraph XVII:

"The court further finds that the only present use being made of said land is for grazing purposes, although at one time the mesa portion of the land had been farmed to barley and beans."

Paragraph XVIII:

"The court further finds that the Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway is a corporation, all of whose stock is owned by the same persons owning the stock of the defendant Marblehead Land Company, and in about the same proportion. That the said Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway holds a title to right of way over the property which overlaps the proposed right of way of the highway for a distance of about 3,500 feet, but that no railway was ever constructed on said land and that no railway is now in operation by said company."

Section 1248 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

"The court, jury, or referee must hear such legal testimony as may be offered by any of the parties to the proceedings, and thereupon must ascertain and assess:

"1. The value of the property sought to be condemned, and all improvements thereon pertaining to the realty, and of each and every separate estate or interest therein; if it consists of different parcels, the value of each parcel and each estate or interest therein shall be separately assessed;

"2. If the property sought to be condemned constitutes only a part of a larger parcel, the damages which will accrue to the portion not sought to be condemned, by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned, and the construction of the improvement in the manner proposed by the plaintiff;

"3. Separately, how much the portion not sought to be condemned, and each estate or interest therein, will be benefited, if at all, by the construction of the improvement proposed by the plaintiff; and if the benefit shall be equal to the damages assessed under subdivision two, the owner of the parcel shall be allowed no compensation except the value of the portion taken; but if the benefit shall be less than the damages so assessed, the former shall be deducted from the latter, and the remainder shall be the only damages allowed in addition to the value;

"6. If the removal or relocation of structures or improvements is sought, the cost of such removal or relocation and the damages, if any, which will accrue by reason thereof. * * *

Paragraph X of the findings, as we have seen, contains elements required by the Constitution, and which by virtue of the resolution above mentioned are conclusively presumed. A review of the record also discloses that the facts stated in the other 5 paragraphs, to which exception is taken, are upon matters required by section 1248 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be ascertained, and upon which legal testimony was introduced by the parties.

[4-6] Although the asserted objectionable facts contained in paragraphs XV, XVI, and XVII were not set forth by any allegation in the complaint, they constitute integral parts of the foundation upon which compensation was apparently based, and embrace subjects properly considered in arriving at the reasonable market value of the property. It has repeatedly been held that the basis for recovery of compensation in such cases being the market value of the land to be taken, any relevant and material evidence of such value is admissible (Southern Pacific Co. v. San Francisco Savings Union, 146 Cal. 290, 79 P. 961, 70 L. R. A. 221, 106 Am.

St. Rep. 36, 2 Ann. Cas. 962; Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 392, 153 P. 705; Oakland v. Adams, 37 Cal. App. 614, 174 P. 947, and that when only part of a tract is taken, the just compensation which the Constitution guarantees to the owner includes not only the value of the part taken, but also the damages accruing to the residue from the improvement (Colusa, etc., R. Co. v. Leonard, 176 Cal. 109, 167 P. 878; Muller v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 83 Cal. 240, 23 P. 265; Southern Pacific R. Co. v. Hart, 3 Cal. App. 11, 84 P. 218); that the owner is entitled to recover the difference between the market value of the entire tract before the taking, and the market value of what is left after the taking (McDougald v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 162 Cal. 1, 120 P. 766; Sacramento Southern R. Co. v. Heilbron, 156 Cal. 408, 104 P. 979; San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. Caldwell, 31 Cal. 367).

[7] Section 468 of the Civil Code provides that a railroad corporation may, within two years after filing its original articles of incorporation, begin the construction of its road, and must every year complete and put in operation at least 5 miles of road, until completed; that a failure to comply with these requirements works a forfeiture of the right of way and a reversion of title to the original owners. Hence, proof by the plaintiff and findings by the trial court that, although the servient and dominant estates in the tract known as the Malibu ranch were apparently distinct, yet in fact that both had been owned by the same persons, and that the latter estate had been forfeited, that the land was practically arid, distant from any settlement, and difficult of approach, were obviously indispensable factors in determining a fair market value. Since the defendant railroad company had not attempted to retain its right of way by the slightest advance toward the construction of a transportation line, it would not be improper to conclude that, in fact, and as a matter of law, for the purposes of the principal question in issue, the market value of the land had not been enhanced by the existence of the alleged easement. Owing to the merger of interests it is not impossible that a railroad might yet have been built, but damages in eminent domain must be estimated with reference to the use and condition of the land at the time, as well as uses to which it is adapted, and evidence as to what the owner intended to do with the land cannot be considered. Los Angeles v. Kerckhoff-Cuzner, etc., Co., 15 Cal. App. 676, 115 P. 654.

[8] If, as contended by the appellants, the findings include points which may be said to exceed the bounds of necessary findings upon the issues presented, their validity is not subject to attack upon that ground, since immaterial matters will be treated as surplusage, and disregarded. Sussman v. San Luis Obispo County, 126 Cal. 536, 59 P. 24; Costa v. Silva, 127 Cal. 351, 59 P. 695; Neale v. Head, 133 Cal. 42, 65 P. 181, 576.

Appellants advance the argument that certain specified conclusions of law "rest upon immaterial findings of fact," apparently relying upon the assumption that the findings heretofore discussed should have been omitted by the trial court. The findings of fact, as we have observed, must be sustained, and a discussion of this point would therefore necessarily result in but mere repetition.

It is next objected that the findings of fact reciting the proper and valid passage of the resolution by the highway commission, the sale of the bonds, proper survey, selection of route, that the proposed route is more necessary than that to which the property had theretofore been appropriated, and that "all matters, facts, and things stated in the resolution of said California highway commission are true," were not supported by the evidence.

[9] What has already been said, we think, disposes of this question. The findings mentioned establish elements which the Code of Civil Procedure (section 1248) requires must appear, and the record discloses that they are supported by evidence of witnesses, or by presumptions which are expressly by statute pronounced conclusive. Although portions of such evidence are criticized by appellants as assertedly inconsistent, improbable, or contradicted by other evidence of greater weight, these are not grounds for reversal since the trial court had the witnesses before it, and all intendments are resolved in favor of its decision upon questions of fact, if, as here, it is supported by any substantial evidence. Lindley v. Blumberg, 7 Cal. App. 140, 93 P. 894.

[10-14] The appellants strenuously urge that it appears from the record that the people's witnesses, called to testify as to market values, had no knowledge of conditions or the fair market price of the lands in controversy, and that hence no foundation was laid for such evidence, and the superior court erred in admitting it over their objections. It appears that the plaintiff's witness Gabbert had resided in Ventura county for a period of 40 years, had engaged in the real estate business for 14 years, had sold ranch property and subdivided beach property, in said county; that he had viewed the defendants' property during the week of the trial, and he testified that he knew the market value of similar property in Ventura county; the witness Petit, a civil engineer in Ventura county, had appraised estates there and in Santa Barbara county, and while he had subdivided, he based his opinion upon the agricultural value and uses of the land; witness Eastwood testified that he had resided in Ventura county for a period of 45 years, had dealt in real estate during the past 6 or 7 years, and that for 25 years prior to such occupation he had farmed lands in Ventura county; the witness Donlon swore that he had resided in Ventura county during the past 52 years, that he was a banker, farmer, and owned some cattle; that he owned several ranches, and loaned money on ranch property, and also had been appointed commissioner to partition a ranch consisting of 22,000 acres.

These witnesses, concededly, were familiar with values in Ventura county, which adjoins Los Angeles county on the north, along the Pacific coast; they averred that some of the lands sought to be condemned were similar to those which they had owned and sold, and their estimates ranged from $15 to $250 an acre, according to location, soil, proximity to the coast, etc. It has been held that witnesses called to show fair market values of lands in such cases need not be experts in the severe sense of the term, but if they show knowledge and experience regarding lands in the neighborhood, it is sufficient to qualify them (City of Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 538, 34 P. 224; San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 P. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83); and that all that is necessary is to show that the witness has some peculiar means of forming an intelligent judgment beyond that which is presumed to be possessed by men generally as to values (Spring Valley W. W. Co. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 P. 681); such as a banker who has resided in the neighborhood (Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Home Savings Bank, 24 Cal. App. 166, 140 P. 974), or supervisors who had acted upon a petition to erect a public improvement (Siskiyou County v. Gamlich, 110 Cal. 94, 42 P. 468). We think the plaintiff's witnesses brought themselves within the bounds announced by the decisions of this state.

Appellants seek to strengthen their argument in this respect with the contention that Ventura county contains small country towns, whereas Los Angeles city is a rapidly advancing metropolis; that the appellants' witnesses were extensive subdividers in the latter city, and were versed in the subdivision of lands suitable for use therein, while those who testified for the plaintiff were devoid of such experience. It is urgently insisted that the theory of the defendants was that the land sought to be taken was available for subdivision purposes, that their witnesses knew the value of the land in view of its adaptability therefor, and did not attempt to qualify as agricultural experts or know the value of land for farming purposes.

[15] While availability of the property for any particular purposes may be shown, its market value is the ultimate fact sought to be established, and the people were not bound to accept the defendants' theory that the lands were suitable for subdivision, far less to admit that if adapted to that purpose the value therefor was the true measure of their market value. Further, our Supreme Court has held, as heretofore observed by this court in Los Angeles High School Dist. v. Hyatt (Cal. App.) 249 P. 221, that evidence of the value of lands in terms of money for particular purposes, such as for subdivision, is inadmissible. Sacramento, etc., R. Co. v. Heilbron, 156 Cal. 408, 104 P. 979. The market value of the lands in suit may have appeared to the trial court as no higher than that of any ranch lands of a similar character along the Pacific coast, in adjoining or nearby counties, and we think from the record before us that its rulings were proper, in the respects to which exception was taken by appellants.

[16] It is contended that the trial court erred in permitting plaintiff's witness Darlington to testify, over objections of the defendants, that the funds in the third state highway fund were sufficient to pave the highway sought to be established, and they assert in support of this proposition that the budget was the best evidence as to such fact. It appeared, however, that this witness was president of the state highway commission, and he was asked on direct examination as to his personal knowledge of the amount. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the witness' personal knowledge of funds under his control was less authentic or weighty than book records of the same fact, made by a third person, at the instance of the witness. Appellants' assertion that the witness "could not know" the amount is not supported by the record.

The remaining alleged grounds for reversal consist of objections by the defendants to the admission of the resolution of the highway commission, which, it is claimed, was irrelevant and immaterial, and to the testimony of certain witnesses as to the amount of funds available, as to the value of lands sought to be condemned, and as to the effect of taking the right of way upon the value of surrounding properties. The plaintiff's witnesses apparently qualified to the satisfaction of the trial court, as experienced real estate dealers and engineers, and there was substantial evidence of their qualifications. The witnesses did not agree upon such matters, but it is elementary that, since the trial court heard them and viewed the property, it does not lie with an appellate tribunal to say, as a matter of law, that error was committed below in arriving at conclusions as to facts upon which the evidence was conflicting.

The judgment is affirmed.

STATE BOARD OF CHIROPRACTIC EXAMINERS et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (S. F. 12339.)

Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1927.

1. Certiorari ☞35—Superior court has constitutional jurisdiction in certiorari (Const. art. 6, § 5).

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, superior court has constitutional jurisdiction in certiorari.

2. Physicians and surgeons ☞11(3)—Proceeding before board of chiropractic examiners revoking license of chiropractor may be reviewed by superior court on certiorari (St. 1923, p. lxxxviii, § 10; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1067, 1068).

Proceedings authorized by St. 1923, p. lxxxviii, § 10, before board of chiropractic examiners, in which license of chiropractor to practice chiropractic was revoked, could be reviewed by superior court on certiorari under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1067, 1068.

In Bank.

Application by State Board of Chiropractic Examiners and others for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hartley Shaw, Judge, to arrest further proceedings on application for writ of review pending before said court. Writ denied.

Frank V. Kington, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Bradner W. Lee, Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The purpose of this petition for a writ of prohibition is to arrest further proceedings in the respondent superior court in the matter of the application of one Charles Henry Wood for a writ of review pending in said court. The petitioners are the members of and constitute the California state board of chiropractic examiners, functioning pursuant to an initiative statute adopted at the general election on November 7, 1922 (Stats. 1923, p. lxxxviii).

In June, 1926, a proceeding authorized by section 10 of said act was commenced before said board to revoke a license to practice chiropractic theretofore issued to said Charles Henry Wood, and which resulted in the revocation of said license. Thereafter Wood filed in the respondent court a petition for a writ of review to annul the order of the board revoking his license. The writ was issued, and respondents therein, petitioners here, were directed to certify to the court the transcript of the record in the matter of the revocation of said license. The present proceeding was then instituted to prohibit the respondent superior court from carrying forward the cer-certiorari proceedings pending therein. The petitioners herein base their application on the ground that the board of chiropractic examiners does not exercise judicial functions under the statute creating it, and that therefore certiorari under sections 1067 and 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure will not lie to review the action of that board.

[1, 2] The respondent superior court has constitutional jurisdiction in certiorari. Const. § 5, art. 6. It may err in the exercise of its jurisdiction but an appeal will lie from its determination. No special circumstances appear herein which would seem to justify the writ of prohibition. This is especially true since it has been repeatedly held that boards, such as the petitioner board, empowered to revoke licenses previously granted, may have their decisions subjected to revision by way of certiorari. In Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, at page 250, 187 P. 965, 966, this court said that:

"It is now well established in this state that tribunals such as the board of medical examiners or other boards empowered to revoke licenses which they have previously granted, for cause defined by the law, are not courts in the strict sense; they are not exercising 'the judicial power of the state' as that phrase is used in the Constitution conferring judicial power upon courts, and that statutes creating such boards and conferring upon them such powers are constitutional. (Citing cases.) It is also settled that where a board has exercised quasi-judicial power of the nature of that here in question, its decisions are subject to revision by way of certiorari."

See, also, Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042; Anderson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 27 Cal. App. 336, 149 P. 1006; Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners, 57 Cal. App. 260, 207 P. 409. We see no good reason for departing from the rule laid down in the foregoing cases.

The writ is denied, and the proceeding is dismissed.

ROWE v. McELROY. (L. A. 8879.)

Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇐901—Where respondent concedes that one half of interest was improperly included, and appellant does not show specific error, trial court's finding as to other half will be accepted.

Where on appeal, in action for partnership accounting, respondent consented to deduction of one half interest charged in judgment, court may accept finding of trial court as to amount of other half, where appellant claiming amount was less failed to point out specific error.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1140(3)—Where plaintiff before appeal remits amounts improperly included, judgment otherwise correct will be affirmed, with directions to enter partial satisfaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Emanuel S. Rowe against W. C. McElroy, doing business under the name of the Western Motor Transfer Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified, and as modified affirmed.

S. J. Bingham, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Mygatt, Robertson & Crawford, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. This action was instituted to recover one-half of the proceeds of certain partnership assets collected by the defendant subsequent to the dissolution of a partnership between the parties hereto. The cause was tried before the court without a jury, and judgment entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $4,150.74 and costs. The defendant appealed, contending that two items of $588.13 and $443.93, respectively, incorporated in and forming a part of the judgment, were improperly allowed, and that the findings of fact and conclusions of law declaring these respective amounts to be due from the appellant are unsupported by the evidence.

[1] As the appellant's brief was on file, and it appearing that no brief had been filed on behalf of the respondent, although the time for filing such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired, the appeal of the defendant was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondent to show cause why the judgment should not be reversed, or such order be made as might be meet in the premises. In response to the order to show cause the respondent appeared and filed a waiver and remission of a portion of the judgment, in which he admits that the sums above indicated were improperly allowed and included in the judgment. He concedes that the item of $588.13, representing one-half of the amount of an alleged escrow deposit, should be entirely eliminated, and that the sum of $221.96, being one-half of the item of $443.93 allowed for interest on the entire net amount of accounts collected by the defendant, be also deducted from the amount of the judgment. As to the first item, there can be no dispute. Both parties agree as to the amount. Of the second, the appellant merely says one-half of the "interest * * * would figure less than the sum of $200." A point thus presented on appeal is entitled to little or no consideration by this court. As the trial court found that interest on the various amounts set forth in the findings, from the dates collected, would total $443.93, we accept one-half of that sum, as admitted by the respondent, to be the proper and further amount to be deducted from the judgment, thereby limiting the recovery by the plaintiff to the sum of $3,340.65.

[2, 3] Had the respondent, as plaintiff in the court below, and before the taking of the appeal by the defendant, remitted these amounts from the judgment, and requested the clerk to credit their total amount upon the judgment as of the date of its entry, this court would have affirmed the judgment, with directions to the trial court to cause a partial satisfaction thereof to be entered. Craig v. Dowie, 4 Cal. App. 176, 179, 87 P. 250. As, however, the only error in the judgment complained of is that the amount of the recovery is excessive, and as the error is confessed by the respondent, who consents to a modification, it is not necessary that the judgment be reversed or that the parties be subjected to further delay or expense. 2 Cal. Jur. 984, par. 582.

The judgment is modified by reducing the amount of the recovery by plaintiff from $4,150.74 to $3,340.65 and costs of suit, such modified judgment to bear interest at the legal rate from the date of the original entry; appellant to recover costs of appeal.

3. Agriculture Ⓒ6—Contract for advances by co-operative association, deductible from receipts from crop, necessarily implied that grower would reimburse association for advances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the California Bean Growers' Association against E. C. Williams. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. L. Hayes and T. R. Meyer, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. H. Hewitt and Lloyd E. Hewitt, both of Yuba City, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to recover excess of advances made by the plaintiff to the defendant over and above the receipts of the defendant's crop of beans marketed by the plaintiff for the defendant. Judgment of nonsuit was entered in the trial court, and from this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

In this opinion, the word "association" will be used to designate the plaintiff and appellant.

The association is a farmers' co-operative association doing business on a nonprofit basis. Its purpose is to market beans of member growers. The association operated under standard form of contract, known as the "bean crop contract," and was executed by the association and the defendant covering beans to be grown by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff during the years 1918, 1919, and 1920. The action does not involve any beans grown or delivered during the year 1918, nor does it appear that any beans were grown by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff during the year 1918. One count in the action was for damages for failure of the defendant to deliver beans to the association during the year 1920, but the answer of the defendant sets forth that no beans were grown by the defendant during the year 1920. The count in the plaintiff's complaint relating to the 1920 alleged crop of beans was upon information and belief and was abandoned upon the trial. The action involves only the crop of 1919.

This appeal is based upon rulings made by the trial court excluding proffered testimony, but before making a statement thereof and considering the same, we will set forth certain portions of the agreement entered into between the association and the defendant. Section 2 of the agreement authorizes the association to purchase bags, sacks, and twine and other necessary materials for the use and account of growers, and the grower authorizes the association to pay on his account all actual costs of freight, cartage, loading, cleaning, warehousing, insurance, selling, and any other proper charge not specified, and, in addition, authorizes the association to deduct and retain an association charge not in excess of $1 per ton. Section 3 appoints the association as the agent of the grower to fix a reasonable price at which his beans may be sold, and below which none should be sold, to act for the grower in negotiating loans on his crop at his request, to process or clean or store any and all of his beans, and to sell the same on his account, and to pay to the grower the net proceeds, less all costs and deductions herein provided.

Section 5 specifies that the grower is to harvest, pick, and prepare his beans for shipment and to warehouse them at the nearest convenient shipping point as delivery to the association for marketing for his account in a public warehouse and deliver warehouse receipts to the association. The association agrees to advance the grower, or to secure for him as an advancement, such amount as may be deemed proper, based upon general market crop conditions, such advance to be repaid the association out of the sale of the beans.

Subdivision b of section 6 authorizes the association to reclean any and all beans at the expense of the grower; section 8 is to the effect that the association agrees to sell and market the beans at the reasonable and fair prices obtainable by the association "in open market or elsewhere, subject always to the conditions of supply and demand, competitive offers, and governmental rules and authority."

Section 9 specified that the association shall market and sell the beans of the grower, mingled with beans of like variety and grade delivered by other growers at the reasonable and fair value thereof, and the grower agrees that his beans shall be so handled and that the returns therefrom, less brokerage and all other costs and charges and the association charge as set forth in paragraph 2, shall be paid to him on a proportionate basis out of the amounts received by the association during the season from the sale of said beans, etc.

The complaint is in four counts, three only of which need be mentioned, the fourth having been abandoned. The first count is based upon an account stated. The third count alleges a book account. The second cause of action alleges that the association agreed to receive beans as the defendant's agent, to process, clean, and store the beans for his account, and to pay for his account all charges arising from the handling and selling of beans, and after deduction of the charges and association charge not to exceed $1, to return to the defendant the net amount received from the sale of his beans.

It is alleged in the complaint and admitted in the answer that the association advanced to the defendant, on account of his bean crop of the year 1919, the sum of $343.21. The complaint further sets forth that the beans received from the defendant were sold for the sum of $106.57; that the total charges, including the association charge against said beans, amounted to $77.34, leaving a net sum of $29.23, which defendant was entitled to receive under the contract. The amount received on the sale of the beans, added to the charges paid by the association deducted from the advances made by the association for and on behalf of defendant, left a balance owing to the association by the defendant of the sum of $314.18. It is for the recovery of this sum that the action is prosecuted.

On the 9th day of February, 1922, the association executed and delivered to the defendant an account showing the advances made by the association for and on behalf of the defendant, all charges and expenses incurred by the association in connection with processing, marketing, etc., of the defendant's crop, the amount received from the sale thereof and the balance due the association. This statement of account, omitting the portions which do not change the character thereof, is as follows:

This statement of account delivered by the association to the defendant remained in his possession for over two years, and, so far as the record discloses, no objection was ever made to the association concerning the same, nor was the accuracy thereof ever questioned by the defendant until the filing of his answer herein. This statement of account was excluded by the trial court, and such ruling is assigned as error.

The plaintiff also sought to prove the different items of expense making up the account and constituting the actual costs of cleaning and processing the defendant's beans and the actual costs paid for freight.

The court excluded testimony as to the actual costs of the items set forth, and in so doing stated its views as follows:

"I will hold that, under those provisions of the contract, this man would pay his proportion of the cleaning of all the beans you had for that year and any other expenses that was had in the processing of the beans for the market and marketing them; that you could not keep a separate account with him for processing his particular lot."

This ruling was also assigned as error. The plaintiff also sought to introduce testimony as to the manner in which it sold the defendant's beans and the amount received therefor. Testimony to this effect was excluded by the court on the ground that the plaintiff must first show the market value of the beans in question, and that it sold them for the market value.

[1] As we have shown, section 2 of the contract authorized the association to pay on account of any grower the actual costs of freight, cartage, loading, cleaning, and warehousing his beans. The beans were to be harvested, picked, and prepared for shipment by the grower and by him placed in the warehouse nearest a convenient common shipping point. The agreement does not provide for pooling freight charges, cleaning charges, etc., of the bean grower by the respective growers. This, for the evident reason that one lot of beans may be produced at a long distance from a warehouse and the freight and drayage charges much greater than in other instances. Likewise, with regard to the cleaning charges, some beans are clean and some are foul and the expenses, or, as said in the agreement, the actual costs of cleaning beans grown by different growers under different conditions might vary to such an extent that it would be inequitable to charge one grower whose crop was clean and whose drayage and freight charges were light with the cost and expenses of cleaning a crop grown by a grower that was foul and whose freight and drayage charges, by reason of distance, might be much greater. The overhead charges of marketing, insurance, etc., were pooled, because these charges were burdens upon all the beans handled and might very well be proportionally charged against the different growers, but whatever the reason for the drawing of the contract, the contract provides for the grower paying the actual costs, and therefore testimony as to such actual costs should have been admitted, irrespective of whether the contract should or should not have so provided.

[2] Again, the contract provides that the beans were to be sold at the reasonable and fair prices obtainable by the association in the open markets or elsewhere, etc., which clearly admitted testimony as to where the beans were sold and as to the prices received therefor, and that the prices were reasonable and fair prices for the kind of beans being marketed, and if the beans were not sold for the full market value then prevailing for the class of beans marketed, it might be that the association would be chargeable for having sold the beans for less than the market value. This, however, constitutes no reason for excluding testimony as to the sum realized on the sale of the defendant's beans and testimony as to where they were sold and the conditions under which they were sold. It might be further stated that the beans handled by the association for the defendant were damaged beans and were classed as third grade. Whether there was or was not a market or any market value for third grade beans does not appear.

[3] Finally, did the court err in excluding the account rendered by the association to the defendant and sued upon as a stated account? The contract expressly provided for advances and specified that such advance might be deducted from the receipts on sale of the beans, which necessarily implies that the grower would reimburse the association for all such advances. In re Joseph P. Murphy Co.'s Estate, 214 Pa. 258, 63 A. 745. The principle involved in that case and in this is almost identical, although a co-operative association was not involved. That a co-operative association may recover for advances is also supported by Cal. Raisin Growers' Association v. Abbott, 160 Cal. 601, 117 P. 767; Sugar Loaf O. G. Ass'n v. Skewes, 47 Cal. App. 470, 190 P. 1076. In the Cal. Raisin Growers' Association v. Abbott, supra, in an equitable action for an accounting by all the parties, advances made to some of the growers were allowed to be recovered in order that a just proportion of the assets of the association might be distributed to other growers. In the Sugar Loaf O. G. Ass'n v. Skewes, the association was allowed to recover for the picking and packing, hauling, washing, and shipping of the defendant's oranges.

[4, 5] As a reason why the account should not be admitted in testimony as a stated account, the respondent suggests first that the parties seeking to prove an account stated must first show a pre-existing indebtedness between the parties. The pleadings in this case established that fact. The plaintiff alleged an advance which constituted in every legal sense a loan of $343.41 and the answer of the defendant admits the same. The transcript also shows that during the course of the trial the advance by the association was admitted by the defendant. As a second reason why the account should be excluded, it is argued that the accounting was not a final accounting or intended to be a final settlement. The record shows that the life of the contract had expired when the accounting was rendered, that there were no other transactions taken or had between the association and the defendant, other than as related to the defendant's crop of beans for the year 1919. The defendant's answer excludes the idea that any of the beans were involved, in that it set forth that the defendant grew no beans during the year 1920. The account purports on its face to include all the beans handled by the association for the year grown during the cropping season of 1919. The agreement, in one of the subdivisions of section 9, provides for the storage season ending on April 1st of the year succeeding that in which the beans are placed on storage contemplating annual settlements.

The whole record shows that no other beans were involved. Relying upon the case of Coffee v. Williams, 103 Cal. 550, 37 P. 504, it is argued that the account rendered is only a memorandum and is not a final settlement. The case of Coffee v. Williams, supra, is readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In the case of Coffee v. Williams there was no attempt made to balance the account and show the amount due, and, as stated by counsel for appellant herein, such balance as might have been struck in that case would have been different from the amount claimed in the action. It was, as stated by the court, a memorandum of transactions up to and including the date of the account. As stated by the court in the Williams Case, the account should show that it was intended as a final settlement up to date. In the present case, the account rendered does show the amount due and owing from the defendant to the association at the time of its rendition, the balance was struck, and the amount due stated and is exactly the amount sued, for in the instant case. All the items set forth in the account rendered by the association indicated how the charges were incurred, and for what purpose the expenditures were made. In the Williams Case, as just stated, no balance was struck. Here the balance has been struck and the amount alleged to be due from the defendant to the association plainly stated.

Respondent also relies upon the case of Beltaire v. Rosenberg, 129 Cal. 164, 61 P. 916. A reference to that case, however, shows no applicability to the circumstances with which we are dealing. The correspondence between the parties in the Beltaire Case shows that the account lacked the essence of finality and was not agreed to by the defendant either directly or by implication. The case of Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 183 P. 156, is not decisive of any question here involved. The Bennett Case is authority to the effect that a written contract cannot be altered by oral statement of account.

[6] In the case at bar, as we have said, there were no objections raised by the defendant to the account rendered by the association, and, while it is held that the defendant must consent to the account in order to make it a stated account, it is now well settled that such consent may be implied, where the defendant, after the receipt of the account, waits for an unreasonable time before making or without making any objection thereto. As stated in 1 California Jurisprudence, page 197, § 54:

"An acknowledgment need not be made in express words, but may be implied from any act or statement which necessarily and directly admits or presupposes the existence of the debt, and the obligation to pay it. Accordingly, if the account be sent to the debtor, and he does not object to it within a reasonable time, his acquiescence will be taken as an admission that the account is truly stated."

To the same effect is 1 C. J. page 691, § 276, where the authorities are cited to this statement of the law:

"Where an account is rendered by one person to another, the retention of the same by the latter beyond a reasonable time without objection is evidence of his assent to the correctness of the account, and, accordingly, is evidence of an account stated."

In Mayberry v. Cook, 121 Cal. 588, 54 P. 95, it is held, quoting from the syllabus:

"The agreement between the parties to an account stated, that all the items therein are true, need not be express, but may be implied from circumstances, such as the sending of the account from one to the other, who makes no objection thereto within a reasonable time."

See, also, Atkinson v. Golden Gate Tile Co., 21 Cal. App. 168, 131 P. 107. In Schneider v. Oakman Con. Min. Co., 38 Cal. App. 338, 176 P. 177, the court, in considering when an account rendered becomes an account stated, said:

"When an account is rendered to a debtor it becomes his duty to make seasonable objections thereto, if any he has, and if he does not do so the account becomes an account stated and the foundation of an independent cause of action, which arises thereon whenever a reasonable time has elapsed without any objection being made thereto. It has been held that under certain circumstances failure to object for six months after the receipt of an account by the debtor is unreasonable" (citing cases).

And in Crane v. Stansbury, 173 Cal. 631, 161 P. 7, and Atkinson v. Golden Gate Tile Co., 21 Cal. App. 170, 131 P. 107:

"A space of 25 days which elapsed after rendition of the account without objection thereto being made on the part of the debtor established the account as an account stated."

[7] The objection that the relationship of the parties was such that the account rendered could not become a stated account, as held by the trial court, has been distinctly overruled in the recent case of Cal. Bean Growers' Ass'n v. Rindge Land & Nav. Co., 248 P. 658, where the Supreme Court held that an account very similar to the one with which we are dealing constituted an account stated, and the fact that the relationship of principal and agent existed between the parties did not change the rule as to the account becoming a stated account, under the conditions which we have heretofore set forth. The holding had in the last case cited clearly establishes the admissibility of the testimony excluded by the trial court. The account stated being a new account, the original book in which the entries were made were not required to be first produced. Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 570, 574, 150 P. 994; Hendy v. March, 75 Cal. 566, 17 P. 702; Coffee v. Williams, 103 Cal. 550, 556, 37 P. 504.

Avoiding any expression of opinion as to the conclusions that should be drawn by the trial court upon the facts involved herein upon a retrial of this case, it is sufficient to say that the evidence erroneously excluded, if admitted, would have been sufficient to establish a prima facie case, and necessitates a reversal of the judgment herein.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed.

McMANUS v. ARNOLD TAXI CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 5291.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 7, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ☞706(5)—Finding that driver of automobile backing was negligent in running over boy held justified (Motor Vehicle Act, § 12, and § 20[a], as amended by St. 1919, p. 215, § 12).

In action for injuries to a five year old boy run over while crossing street by automobile backing down grade to intersection on left side of street, evidence held to justify finding that driver was negligent, pedestrian not being required to anticipate that automobile which has just passed him will be backed, in view of Motor Vehicle Act, § 12 (St. 1915, p. 405), and section 20(a), as amended by St. 1919, p. 215, § 12.

2. Municipal corporations ☞706(6)—That driver and wife looked while backing automobile, without seeing boy, held not to establish freedom from negligence as matter of law (Motor Vehicle Act, § 12, and § 20[a], as amended by St. 1919, p. 215, § 12).

That automobile driver and his wife looked to rear before starting to back automobile on left side of street in order to make turn at intersection, and that driver continued to look while backing, and that neither saw five year old boy until both wheels of car passed over him, did not establish as matter of law that driver exercised due care so as to relieve them from liability; question of exercise of ordinary care being one of fact to be determined from all circumstances of case, in view of Motor Vehicle Act, § 12 (St. 1915, p. 405), and section 20(a), as amended by St. 1919, p. 215, § 12.

3. Damages ⚡128—Award of damages cannot be set aside as "excessive," unless so grossly disproportionate as to show passion or prejudice.

It is only when an award of damages is so grossly disproportionate as to shock the sense of justice and indicate that verdict was result of passion or prejudice that court can set it aside as "excessive."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Excessive.]

4. Damages ⚡132(4)—$11,102.80 for injuries permanently impairing health of five year old boy, necessitating two major operations, held not excessive.

Award of $11,102.80 to five year old boy run over by defendants' automobile for severe and painful injuries, necessitating two major abdominal operations for rupture, removal of appendix, and treatment of large abscess, requiring two months' hospital treatment, and permanently injuring his health, held not excessive.

5. Infants ⚡50—Medical expenses incurred by father for five year old son, run over by automobile, held not enforceable against child nor his estate (Civ. Code, §§ 34, 35).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 34, 35, where parent, who incurred obligations for medical and hospital expenses furnished to his five year old son, run over by defendants' automobile, paid part of such expenses, obligation to pay balance was not legally enforceable against son personally nor against his estate, because he was not under guardianship.

6. Damages ⚡43—Right of five year old boy, run over by automobile, to recover medical expenses held subject to defense of parents' contributory negligence, and, defense having been eliminated on demurrer, boy was not entitled to recover therefor.

Right of five year old boy, suing for injuries sustained when he was run over by defendant's automobile, to recover for medical and hospital expenses, was subject to defense of parents' contributory negligence in permitting child to be in place of danger, and, such defense having been eliminated from answer on demurrer, and defendant thereby deprived of right to defend against such claim, such expenses could not be recovered by child as element of damages under doctrine of waiver or emancipation.

7. Trial ⚡396(1)—Finding on issue of parents' contributory negligence held ineffective, where defense eliminated on demurrer.

Trial court's finding on issue of contributory negligence of parents of five year old boy run over by defendants' automobile was of no force or effect, where such defense was eliminated from answer on demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Vincent McManus, an infant, by W. J. McManus, his guardian ad litem, against the Arnold Taxi Corporation, L. A.

Arnold, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Joe Crider, Jr., and John C. Miles, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff, by his father as guardian ad litem, sued the above-named defendants to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him as a result of being run over by an automobile driven by defendant L. A. Arnold. The action was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was rendered against the defendant Arnold alone, from which judgment he has appealed.

Section 20 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act in force at the time of the accident read in part as follows:

"The driver or operator of any vehicle in or upon any public highway shall drive or operate such vehicle in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians * * * and wherever practicable shall travel on the right hand side of such highway. * * * On all occasions the driver or operator of any vehicle in or upon any public highway shall travel upon the right half of such highway unless the road ahead on the left hand side is clear and unobstructed for at least one hundred yards ahead and in all cases while crossing an intersecting highway," —and section 12 of said act required that every person operating a motor vehicle shall sound a "bell, gong, horn, whistle, or other device whenever necessary as a warning of danger, but not at other times, or for any other purpose." Stats. 1919, p. 215, and Stats. 1915, p. 405. The complaint herein alleged, and the trial court found, that respondent's injuries were caused by the "careless, negligent, and reckless operation of said automobile," and as grounds of appeal appellant urges, first, that the evidence is insufficient to sustain said finding.

[1] The essential facts appearing in the record in support of the finding are as follows: Respondent was five years old at the time he was injured. The accident occurred about noon on September 2, 1921, on Orange avenue, in a sparsely settled neighborhood just outside of the city limits of the city of Long Beach. Orange avenue runs north and south, and is intersected by Augusta street, which runs east and west. The entire width of Orange avenue at the scene of the accident was 40 feet, a strip about 20 feet wide in the center thereof being laid with an oiled macadam, which was in an uneven condition; and on each side of said avenue there was a row of trees, those on the east side being about 18 or 20 feet apart, and measuring from 15 to 24 inches in diameter, the branches of some of them extending to within 5 feet of the ground.

Appellant, accompanied by his wife, who was sitting in the front seat of the automobile with him, was visiting the locality mentioned for the purpose of viewing a burning oil well located at Signal Hill, some distance away. He was driving a Cadillac touring car with a left-hand drive, and was traveling north on the east side of Orange avenue. Upon reaching a point on said avenue about 40 feet beyond the northerly line of said intersecting street, he stopped the automobile, allowing the engine to run; but, the view of the burning well from that point being somewhat obscured by the trees, he concluded to obtain a better view by going east on Augusta street. Instead of proceeding forward and turning around to reach his objective, he disengaged the clutch of the automobile, and, with the engine still running, allowed the automobile to coast backward, down grade, on the east side of Orange avenue; his purpose being to roll backward on Orange avenue across the intersection far enough to allow him to turn east on Augusta street. While attempting to execute this maneuver, and after coasting about half way to the corner, the rear left fender of his automobile struck respondent on the shoulder, knocking him down, and both wheels on the left side of the automobile passed over his abdomen, with the result that he was severely injured.

As to the boy's movements immediately preceding the accident, his mother testified on cross-examination by counsel for appellant that, while on the way to the hospital in appellant's automobile, the boy told her that he saw appellant's automobile as it passed up Orange avenue; that he was standing "by the trees," and, when the automobile stopped up the street, "a distance away from him," he thought the people in it were going to get out of the machine and enter the adjacent property where his family usually bought milk, and that consequently he would be able to run across the street; but that, while attempting to do so, the machine "backed on," him, knocking him down. With reference to the question as to whether respondent was visible from the street at the time appellant's automobile passed up Orange avenue, Robert Drum, 12 years old, testified that immediately before the accident he was standing near the opposite (northwest) corner of said streets fixing his "coaster"; that, as appellant's automobile went up Orange avenue, he saw respondent between the trees and close to the curb, throwing dirt in the air; that, as he proceeded down the street on his "coaster," his attention was again directed to the automobile by hearing appellant's wife "holler: 'Stop, you are running over something,'" and, looking around immediately, he saw the front wheel of appellant's automobile, which was then backing "fast" downward, toward the Augusta street intersection, passing over respondent's body. Drum's testimony as to the outcry made by appellant's wife was corroborated by certain admissions which respondent's witnesses claim appellant and his wife made to that effect shortly after the accident happened, and that appellant furthermore stated that "all amends and everything" in his power would be done for the child, "and that all expenses and everything" would be taken care of by him. Other evidence was adduced on behalf of respondent showing that no warning of any kind was sounded by appellant before he started to back the machine nor while it was proceeding backward, and that the engine thereof ran quietly.

We are of the opinion that the foregoing evidence was sufficient to justify the conclusion reached by the trial court that appellant was not operating said automobile in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians; and that therefore the finding upon the question of negligence must be sustained under those authorities holding in substance that, where one passing several feet back of a standing automobile is injured by reason of the sudden backing of the machine, without warning, an inference that the driver is negligent is justified (Lee v. Independent Dairy, 127 Wash. 622, 221 P. 309; Glinco v. Wimer, 88 W. Va. 508, 107 S. E. 198; Oliver v. Weaver, 72 Colo. 540, 212 P. 978; Enstrom v. Neumoegen [Sup.] 126 N. Y. S. 660; Suddarth v. Kirkland [Mo. App.] 220 S. W. 699; Wirth v. Burns Bros., 229 N. Y. 148, 128 N. E. 111; Huddy on Automobiles [7th Ed.] § 528; Berry on Automobiles [4th Ed.] § 413), and that such person need not anticipate that an automobile which has just passed him will be backed just after passing (Westervelt v. Schwabacher, 104 Wash. 418, 176 P. 545).

Appellant testified that before he started to back his automobile he looked to the rear on the left (west) side, and, while the car was rolling backward, raised in his seat, kept his hands on the wheel, and looked to the rear over his right shoulder and through the glass in the rear curtain of the automobile; and his wife testified that about the time the automobile came to a stop beyond the intersection, and before it started backward, she looked to the rear on the right-hand side, but did not continue her observation in that direction during its retrograde movement; and both testified that they were unaware of the boy's presence until after both wheels of the automobile had passed over him. Appellant contends that the foregoing testimony was sufficient to establish as a matter of law that he exercised due care in backing said automobile (Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493; Hahn v. Graham Co., 148 La. 55, 86 So. 651), and that, since neither the single act of backing a motor vehicle on the public highway nor the mere fact of driving on the left-hand side thereof constitutes negligence per se (Sheldon v. James, supra; Hagenah v. Bidwell, 46 Cal. App. 560, 189 P. 799), he cannot be held responsible for the accident.

[2] The testimony relied upon, however, was given in support of specific allegations of the same import made in paragraph 1 of the second separate defense pleaded in the answer, which the trial court expressly found were not true. It would therefore appear that the trial court did not accept as true the testimony alluded to. But, even assuming in the face of the findings that it did, the facts testified to would not necessarily establish as a matter of law that appellant exercised due care so as to relieve him of liability, because the question of the exercise of ordinary care, being one of fact, must be determined from all the conditions and circumstances surrounding each case (Noonan v. Leavitt, 238 Mass. 481, 131 N. E. 297; Duggan v. Forderer [Cal. App.] 249 P. 533), and therefore the ultimate question of fact remained for the trial court to determine whether the attempt by appellant, after proceeding up the street and stopping, to back his automobile across said intersection, on the wrong side of the street, without warning, for the purpose of turning into and proceeding easterly along said intersecting street, instead of pursuing a forward course, turning around and traveling on the right-hand side of the street, as ordinarily would be done, was an act of carelessness. If it was not, then the further question of fact arose as to whether the execution of such maneuver was attended by the exercise of ordinary care, and with due regard for the safety of pedestrians using the street. Both of these questions of fact were resolved against appellant, and we are satisfied that upon both propositions the trial court's conclusions are supported by the authorities hereinabove cited.

The facts of the instant case are materially different from those of Sheldon v. James, supra, and Hahn v. Graham Co., supra, upon which appellant strongly relies. In the former the driver was in the act of backing his automobile into a parking space next to the curb on the right-hand side of one of the congested streets of San Francisco, and in doing so struck an adult pedestrian who attempted to cross the street from the opposite side, in the middle of the block, by pursuing a long diagonal. He did not observe the backing automobile, although, while it was being backed up grade, as the opinion states, it made "an extremely loud and raucous noise sufficient to attract the attention of people upon the opposite side of the street, and such as should have attracted the attention of the plaintiff before he put himself in a place of danger." The court said:

"If, then, under these circumstances, he did not look, the jury was justified in concluding that he was negligent in not having looked."

In the other case, Hahn v. Graham Co., supra, the driver of a truck went upon an unpaved street, which was in bad condition, and, becoming stalled, "was forced to back his truck to the street behind him." While backing slowly a child four years old jumped across an open ditch on the side of the road, and, according to the testimony of the only witness who saw the accident, "ran into the front wheel of the truck," and was injured. It is apparent from the facts stated that neither case is in point.

[3, 4] Damages were awarded in the sum of $11,102.80, and appellant contends that the amount is excessive. The evidence shows, beyond question, that the boy sustained very severe injuries; that as a result of them he endured excruciating pain and suffering; and that his health is doubtless permanently impaired. Two major surgical operations were performed upon him. Upon opening the abdominal cavity the first time it was found that the pyloric end of the stomach had been ruptured for about 2½ inches, so that the food contents had been spilled in the peritoneal cavity. The appendix was "ballooned out," like it had been put to a considerable stretch, necessitating its removal. His condition became gradually worse, and about a week afterwards the abdominal cavity was again opened. A large abscess was found extending as high as the diaphragm, in behind the liver, the abscess containing about a quart of pus. His treatment in the hospital extended over a period of two months, during most of which time the affected intestinal parts were drained with large tubes inserted in both sides, and extending clear around to the back of the abdominal cavity. Although at the time of the trial of the action respondent was able to run about and play with other children, the medical testimony shows that his injuries have resulted in weakening the abdominal wall so that he will likely suffer in the future from hernia and adhesions; and, notwithstanding that the rupture of the stomach has apparently healed, his intestinal absorption and digestion will probably be limited to a certain degree. "It is only when the award is so grossly disproportionate as to shock the sense of justice and indicate that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice, that the court can set it aside as excessive." Averdieck v. Varris, 63 Cal. App. 495, 218 P. 786; Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 P. 1019; Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 187 P. 23. Under the foregoing rule it cannot be fairly said that the award herein is excessive.

Evidence was admitted over appellant's objection establishing the amount of medical fees and the cost of hospitalization and medical supplies incurred in the treatment of respondent's injuries, the total amount of which, the findings show, was included in the award of damages. Part of the cost of the medical supplies, amounting to approximately $100, was paid by respondent's father, but the balance remained unpaid at the time of the trial. Bearing in mind that the action was not brought by the parent, but was brought by the child to recover damages for the injuries personal to the latter, appellant contends that the child may not recover the expenses paid or incurred by his parent, even though the same were paid or incurred on behalf of his child, for the reason that the parent and not the child is primarily liable therefor; and that therefore the inclusion of the amount of those expenses in the award of damages was erroneous.

In Durkee v. Central Pacific Railroad Co., 56 Cal. 388, 38 Am. Rep. 59, which was an action for damages brought by the parent wherein he sought to include in the measure of damages the element of pain and suffering experienced by his son, the court said:

"When the action is brought by the parent, loss of service, medical attendance, expenses of nursing, and the like are matters to be considered by the jury, and in such cases compensation is the rule. * * * But when the action is brought on behalf of the child, there are other separate and distinct elements of damage. The child recovers, not for loss of time or service or medical attendance or expenses of curing, but for the injury personal to himself, such as pain and suffering, both physical and mental, disfigurement," etc.

[5, 6] The foregoing statement of the law is in complete harmony with the decisions of other jurisdictions, which hold generally that, where the injured child is living with, and is being supported by, the parents, thereby legally entitling them to its custody and the benefit of its services, and consequently charging them primarily with responsibility for its maintenance including the payment of any expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in the treatment of injuries tortiously inflicted upon the child, for the recovery of which expenses they are given a right of action against the tort-feasor, said expenses do not constitute an element of damage accruing to the child which it may recover in an action brought in its own name and for its own benefit. See Sedgwick on Damages, § 226f, and 4 Sutherland on Damages, § 1250, and cases cited therein; also Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lammert, 12 Ill. App. 408; Butler v. Metropolitan Street R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 354, 93 S. W. 877; Tucker v. Buffalo Cotton Mills, 76 S. C. 539, 57 S. E. 626, 121

Am. St. Rep. 957; McCallam v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 93 W. Va. 426, 117 S. E. 148. But, as respondent contends, there are certain exceptions to the foregoing rule under which it has been held that the child may recover said expenses, among them being where the child has paid, or is legally bound to pay, the same (Sutherland on Damages, § 1250, note 70); or is under guardianship, thereby making his estate legally liable therefor (1 Sedgwick on Damages, § 226f; Stotler v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 200 Mo. 107, 98 S. W. 509), and in some jurisdictions it has been held that, if the parent appears as guardian ad litem in an action brought by the child, and includes therein as elements of damages loss of wages and the payment of medical expenses, reimbursement for which under the general rule would accrue to him, he is deemed to have waived the right to recover the same in favor of the child; such waiver operating in the nature of an emancipation, and conferring upon the child the right to recover said wages and expenses. Donald v. City of Ballard, 34 Wash. 576, 76 P. 80; Daly v. Everett Pulp & Paper Co., 31 Wash. 252, 71 P. 1014; Abeles v. Bransfield, 19 Kan. 16; Chicago Screw Co. v. Weiss, 203 Ill. 536, 68 N. E. 54; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McNab, 150 Ala. 332, 43 So. 222. The evidence in the instant case shows, however, that the parent, and not the child, incurred all of said expenses, and has actually paid some of them; and the obligation to pay the balance is not legally enforceable against the child personally (Civ. Code, §§ 34 and 35), nor against his estate, because he was not under guardianship; and, even though the doctrine of waiver and emancipation as announced in the authorities above cited be accepted as the law of this state, such doctrine cannot fairly be given application in the instant case for the following reasons: The right of the father in any event to recover said expenses would be subject to the defense that he contributed to the child's injuries by negligently permitting it to be and play in a place of danger; and it would follow that the right of the child to recover said expenses in the place of the father would be subject to the same defense. Such defense was pleaded as a "fourth, separate, further and distinct" defense in the original answer, but was eliminated from the case, on demurrer, at the instance of respondent, presumably upon the ground that such defense could not be urged in an action brought and maintained by the child. Appellant being thus deprived of the right to defend against such claim, the amount thereof could not, in our opinion, be afterwards legally allowed to the child as an element of damage under the doctrine of waiver or emancipation.

[7] In concluding this point, it may be stated that, notwithstanding that the fourth separate defense of the original answer relating to the charge of contributory negligence on the part of the parents was omitted from the amended answer, and that the latter pleading contained but three separate defenses, none of which related to the contributory negligence of the parents, the trial court made a finding that "paragraph I of defendants' fourth separate further and distinct answer and defense" was not true. Manifestly, said finding is of no force or effect, because, as stated, there was no fourth defense pleaded in the amended answer.

For the foregoing reasons we conclude that the allowance of said expenses as a part of respondent's damages was erroneous; and it is therefore ordered that the judgment be modified by reducing the amount thereof to the sum of $9,915.80, the amount stricken therefrom representing the physician's fee of $750 and the cost of hospitalization and medical supplies amounting to $437, and, as thus modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

NICKELL v. ROSENFELD. (Civ. 5306.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 16, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1927.

1. Trial ⇨260(1), 296(1)—Judgment will not be reversed for giving or refusing of instructions, where jury were fairly instructed on all material points.

It is settled law that no reversal of judgment will be ordered by reason of the giving or refusal of instructions, if record shows the jury were fully and fairly instructed on all material points.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1026—Judgment will not be reversed unless error complained of worked substantial injustice.

Judgment will not be reversed unless error complained of is such as operated to prevent full and fair hearing and thereby worked substantial injustice.

3. Trial ⇨194(16)—Instruction requiring pedestrian struck by automobile to look to left not only on entering, but on crossing, street, held to invade jury's province.

In suit of pedestrian struck by automobile at intersection, instruction that plaintiff's duty of exercising ordinary care was not fully performed by looking to left on stepping into street, but duty in this respect continued during crossing, held error as invading province of jury by taking from them right to determine plaintiff's negligence, and in view of emphasis upon care required of plaintiff by other instructions.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨705(2)—Pedestrian and vehicle driver have equal and reciprocal rights on all parts of highway.

Pedestrian and driver of vehicle have equal and reciprocal rights in use of highway, extending to all sections thereof, whether at established places of crossing or elsewhere.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨705(2)—"Rights" of pedestrians and drivers refers to civil, as distinguished from absolute, rights.

The term "rights," as used in reference to pedestrians and drivers, refers to civil rights given and protected by law, whose enjoyment is entirely regulated thereby, as distinguished from rights absolute in the elemental sense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Right—Rights.]

6. Municipal corporations ⇨705(2)—"Rights" of pedestrian and automobile driver are relative to extent that they are mutually restrictive.

"Rights" of pedestrian and automobile driver are relative to extent that each must so restrict and use his right as to permit the other the full benefit of what is his.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨705(2)—Facts of case determine care required of pedestrians and drivers.

Facts and circumstances of each case control the amount of care required on part of both pedestrians and vehicle drivers.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨705(10)—Pedestrian may proceed across intersection without constant watch in traffic's direction, after proper lookout on leaving curb.

Pedestrian may proceed across intersection without constant watch in direction of traffic, where, before leaving the curb, he looked and saw nothing approaching near by and there was nothing which he might have seen by ordinary faculty of sight.

9. Trial ⇨295(1)—General instruction could not overcome misleading specific instructions, notwithstanding rule that instructions are to be construed together.

Court's misleading direct instruction upon particular facts of the case could not be overcome by one or two correct detached general statements, notwithstanding the rule that instructions are to be construed together, in view of general principle of statutory construction, likewise applicable to instructions, that specific declarations control general language.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Elizabeth C. Nickell against Jerome D. Rosenfield. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying the motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SHENK, J., dissenting.

Kenton A. Miller and W. A. Alderson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Paul Nourse and Culver & Nourse, all of Los Angeles (J. Allen Davis, of Los Angeles, of counsel); for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff sought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by her when struck by an automobile negligently driven by defendant.

The defendant answered, denying negligence on his part, and affirmatively alleging that the injuries of plaintiff were caused by her own negligence.

A trial by jury was had and a verdict returned in favor of defendant. From the judgment entered pursuant to this verdict plaintiff appeals, and brings here also for review the order of the lower court denying her motion for a new trial.

The entire controversy here revolves about the instructions given to the jury. Appellant calls specific attention to and rests her appeal upon the lower court's action with reference to three instructions, one of which was given and the remaining two requested by appellant and not given.

[1, 2] It is settled law in this state that no reversal of a judgment will be ordered by reason of the lower court's action on the giving or refusal of instructions, if it appears from the record that the jury were fully and fairly instructed on all of the points in the case material thereto. And, further, no reversal of a judgment will be ordered unless the error complained of is such as operated to prevent a full and fair hearing, and thereby worked a substantial injustice to either of the parties.

With these principles in view, it may be well to briefly state the facts of the case as the record before us discloses them and to inquire into the instructions given the jury.

It is admitted that plaintiff was struck by defendant's automobile, driven by defendant, and that plaintiff sustained injuries as a result thereof. Plaintiff, a pedestrian, was crossing Figueroa street, in the city of Los Angeles, at the intersection of that street with Third street. She was going in a westerly direction and was in the usual place for pedestrians, going straight across from the east side to the west side of Figueroa street. Defendant was driving an automobile on Figueroa street going in a northerly direction. The accident occurred in April, 1921, at or about the hour of 9 o'clock p. m. The section surrounding Figueroa and Third streets is closely built up and a busy section of a busy city. Plaintiff had lived in the neighborhood for some years and was familiar with the locality and the conditions surrounding and the traffic thereabouts. Plaintiff testified, and it is not contradicted, that before she attempted to cross the street and before leaving the curb she looked to the left and to the right and saw no cars approaching. She states that she saw a car which from its lights seemed to be about a block away, far enough in her opinion as not to be a hazard to her. Having thus advised herself of the traffic, she started across, and in crossing looked to the left and in front. There is, further, the testimony of plaintiff and other witnesses that immediately following the accident defendant stated that his lights were not in good order, and for that reason he did not see the plaintiff.

Defendant testified that he was driving northerly on Figueroa street, and that he approached the intersection at a rate of speed not in excess of 15 miles per hour; that when entering the intersection he reduced the speed perceptibly. The first time defendant saw Mrs. Nickell she was on the curb, and he was about 20 feet south of the intersection, and she was then facing south and seemed to be looking directly at him. He had not then entered the intersection. When he did enter, his attention was occupied by the traffic going west on Third street. From his testimony it appears that one auto in the west-going traffic, crossing directly in front of him, compelled his turning to avoid it. Almost immediately in getting himself straightened out again, he was across the intersection, and then again saw the plaintiff Mrs. Nickell within a few feet of him and directly in the path of his machine. His efforts to avoid her proved futile, and the accident happened. Just where it happened is the subject of conflict, but it is not questioned but that she was quite near the center of the street, which street was 60 feet in width. The defendant states that from his first observation of the plaintiff and her position he concluded that she had seen him and was waiting his passing before she would cross.

This résumé of the facts covers the entire case as presented. The determination of the issues was submitted to the jury and the law given by the court.

The trial court instructed the jury fully as to what the claims of the parties were; as to the burden of proof and such other general instructions as are proper in like cases. The trial court fully and properly informed the jury as to the duty devolving upon defendant as the driver of a motor vehicle on the public highway, and as to what acts or omissions on his part would, within the pleadings, impose upon him a liability to plaintiff. However, the trial court laid stress throughout the instructions on the duty of plaintiff, and almost every instruction regarding her right to recover carried with it the admonition as to the consequences of her own lack of ordinary care. The jury was told that the mere fact of the accident raised no presumption of negligence as against defendant, and that if the evidence was as consistent with neglect of duty on the part of plaintiff as it was with neglect of duty or care on the part of defendant, and that both were equally probable under the evidence, the verdict must be for the defendant. The jury was further instructed that, if they believed from the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed directly or proximately, no matter how slightly it contributed, to the collision complained of, the verdict must be for the defendant, and this would not be altered by the fact that the jury might believe that defendant was more negligent than plaintiff, if it was shown that but for the concurring and co-operative fault of plaintiff and defendant such collision would not have occurred.

No criticism is offered as to the correctness of any of these instructions, but they are referred to here to the end that the instruction complained of may be better appreciated and its connection with the charge as a whole and its probable effect measured.

Then came the instruction attacked, as follows:

"In crossing Figueroa street, it was the duty of plaintiff in the exercise of ordinary care for her own protection to look to the left and to the right as well as ahead of her, and to particularly direct her attention to her left while she was crossing the easterly side of Figueroa street, and this duty was not fully performed by merely looking to the left as she stepped from the curb to the street, but the duty to exercise ordinary care in this respect was imperative upon her during all the time that she was crossing; and, therefore, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to perform this duty, and that her failure so to do was a proximate cause of the accident and the injuries sustained by her, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendant, even though you find from the evidence that the defendant was also guilty of negligence."

[3] At the outset respondent contends that, if it were conceded (and he does not concede) that the court placed too high a duty upon plaintiff in demanding that she look to the right, nevertheless as no question is here involved as to traffic from the right, that part of the instruction must be disregarded. We agree with the respondent in this with the reservation that the placing of too high a duty upon plaintiff might leave the jury generally impressed that the degree of care incumbent upon her for her own protection was far greater than the law required. The particular part of the instruction, then, subject to review, is that part which tells the jury that the duty of the plaintiff to use ordinary care was not fully performed by merely looking to the left as she stepped from the curb to the street, but that she must particularly direct her attention to the left while she was crossing the easterly side of Figueroa street.

Respondent seeks further to sustain the correctness of the instruction by pointing out that what the court told the jury was that the plaintiff's duty was to exercise ordinary care, and this qualified and explained the entire instruction. However, it must be noted that the court first advised the jury as to the duty of plaintiff in the premises, and then used the term "ordinary care," qualified by the words "in this respect."

A review of the authorities gives really little aid in determining the question here presented. Cases beyond number have been before the courts with a constant variance in facts. The courts have found it impossible to lay down any rule or rules which have the effect of establishing a definite course of action for all parties under all conditions. In the case of Niosi v. Empire Steam Laundry, 117 Cal. 257, 49 P. 185, the rule was announced that a foot traveler was negligent who fails to look both ways before crossing a highway where vehicles frequently pass. The doctrine of this case was subsequently affirmed in a later case (Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493). In the later case of Burgesser v. Bullocks, 117 Cal. 257, 49 P. 185, the court reviews all of the cases on the subject of the relative rights and duties of pedestrians and automobile drivers. In commenting upon the Niosi Case and the cases following it, the court declares that these cases must be read in the light of the facts involved in each particular case. The court in the Burgesser Case, after reciting the facts of Niosi v. Empire Steam Laundry, concludes that the rule announced in the latter case meant nothing more than that it was the duty of a pedestrian, who steps from the curb into a narrow street where traffic is heavy, to look in the direction from which such traffic would be likely to come before stepping from the curb. The case cited, Burgesser v. Bullocks, is a complete treatise on the case-made law of the subject here before us. And the conclusion reached there is that it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the conduct of a pedestrian, under all of the circumstances at the time and place and conditions of traffic, was or was not negligent. Without analyzing each case, the following authorities are helpful in further illustrating the same point: Evers v. Stratton, 71 Cal. App. 448, 235 P. 656; Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 P. 743; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 203 P. 125; Haines v. Fewkes, 190 Cal. 477, 213 P. 490; O'Dowd v. Newnham, 13 Ga. App. 220, 80 S. E. 36.

[4] All of the authorities agree on two principles: First, the pedestrian and the driver of a vehicle have equal and reciprocal rights in the use of the highway; and this rule goes so far as to hold that in the absence of statutory or local regulation this right extends to all sections of the highway, whether at established places of crossing or elsewhere thereon.

[5, 6] When we speak of a person having a right, we must necessarily refer to a civil right as distinguished from the elemental idea of rights absolute. We must have in mind a right given and protected by law, and a person's enjoyment thereof is regulated entirely by the law which creates it. If we were to consider these rights as absolute, nothing but chaos could result, and instead of each enjoying the right both would be deprived of its enjoyment. Therefore the rights of pedestrian and auto driver are conceded to be relative to the extent that each must so restrict and use his right as to permit the other the full benefit of what is his.

[7] The second principle upon which all agree is that the facts and circumstances of each case control the amount of care required on the part of both pedestrians and drivers of vehicles. Nothing approaching a rule can be formulated other than the basic principle of ordinary care under the circumstances.

[8] Applying these principles to the case at bar, we think that the facts before the court did not warrant the instruction, and that the giving thereof was prejudicial to the plaintiff and deprived her of a fair and impartial trial. The instruction took from the jury the right to determine the negligence of plaintiff by particularly specifying just what acts on her part were negligent. By way of illustration, under the instruction the jury were not left to determine whether or not the defendant had good or bad lights, or whether his car was observed by plaintiff, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have been observed, and this was an issue in the case. It seems readily apparent that if a pedestrian in crossing a street looks before leaving the curb and sees nothing approaching within any short distance, and there is nothing shown that he or she must have seen by ordinary use of the faculty of sight, then it is eminently proper to proceed without constant watch in the direction of that particular traffic. It is undisputed in the instant case that when plaintiff left the curb to cross Figueroa street, there was likewise auto traffic on Third street crossing Figueroa street, and that plaintiff was proceeding with the traffic rather than against it. The fact that she saw nothing in near approach on Figueroa street, coupled with the fact of traffic crossing as it was, would seem quite sufficient assurance of her safety. The defendant admittedly was dodging through the same traffic at night and in an intersection and almost at the very spot where a prudent person might expect pedestrians. We can concede, perhaps, that a pedestrian who perceives an automobile approaching—or even go as far, for the purpose of illustration, to concede that if the pedestrian, in the exercise of ordinary care, should have seen the approaching auto—would be negligent in leaving a place of safety to rush headlong into danger. But we cannot concede that in an action of this character, when the facts are disputed, a trial court can fix the standard of conduct with reference to specific acts without the jury's determination of the facts.

Upon an analysis of the instruction involved, and considering it with all of the instructions, we feel that the jury were told that even if they found the defendant was driving with totally insufficient lights at nighttime, in a section poorly lighted, and that plaintiff was unable by reason of said defective lights to see defendant's car or to judge its distance, and after first attempting to ascertain the condition of traffic and the hazards imminent she, in the belief of her security, left the curb at the usual place of crossing, nevertheless as a fact she was negligent in not keeping her attention focused upon the direction whence came the defendant. There can be no question that, under the theory of the case and the conditions surrounding, that if this per se negligence, then it must have been a proximate cause of the accident, and comment on this phase of the instruction is unnecessary.

Construing the instruction as we do, and mindful of the law governing, we conclude that the giving thereof was erroneous and highly prejudicial.

[9] We are not forgetful of the general rules that instructions are to be read together and construed as a whole, but we do not feel that this rule goes so far as to hold that one or two detached general statements are sufficient to overcome the force of a direct instruction based upon the particular facts of the case. Even in the absence of rules of construction, common experience indicates that the specific declaration of a principle controls over general language. In construing statutes, the courts are bound to give heed and attention to specific provisions as against general ones. And upon the same principle we feel, should we incline to the construction of a charge to a jury, without, however, all of the niceties involved in statutory construction. Every trial judge knows from experience that many general instructions are quite puzzling to the average juror, striving to get every word of counsel from the court; but when the court takes up the particular situation involved and bases a charge thereon by applying the facts to the law, instantly the jury becomes directly interested. And then for a reviewing court to intervene and hold that the charge did not mean exactly what it said, but that upon a studious analysis some other meaning could be read into it, would be a long step nearer to doing away with instructions entirely.

Appellant's points with reference to the instructions requested by her and refused need little attention. Conceding that, in point of law, the proffered instructions are correct, yet the instructions given sufficiently covered the subject. The instructions offered and refused were slightly argumentative in phraseology, and stated general observations which were almost of the commonplace and on matters concerning which a general knowledge might be presumed.

This entire field of automobile drivers and pedestrians offers a fertile field for legislative action. It is the purpose of government to protect the lives and property of its citizens; and when the statistics available would indicate that more fatalities occur in daily traffic throughout the year than are occasioned by war, famine, or pestilence it certainly calls for something more definite than a general rule of ordinary care under the circumstances. While it is not our function to suggest, nevertheless it would seem reasonable that when in many jurisdictions, as a matter of law and almost universally as a matter of fact, the pedestrian is charged with the burden in crossing a street at places other than the intersections, that one place should be a refuge, and the burden there shifted. In the congested areas of larger cities, the difficulty is greatly overcome by constant patrol and mechanical device; and, while awaiting the time when a like condition may be established at every crossing, there should be some definite regulations and some standards established that would clearly outline a course of conduct on the part of travelers of all sorts tending to promote safety.

The judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PACIFIC EMPLOYER'S INS. CO. v. WO-LAND et al. (Civ. 5838.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1927.

1. Master and servant ☞386(1)—Annual rate of employee's contribution to dependents held properly fixed.

Employee's contribution to dependents of $23.40 of $29, earned from July 20 to July 31, held to justify Industrial Accident Commission in taking such amount, plus same percentage, or $37.92, of $47, earned from August 1 to August 15, as monthly amount fixing annual rate of contribution, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), though $37 was still due him on latter date.

2. Master and servant ☞386(1)—Amount due employee, but not devoted to dependents' support at time of death, may be considered in fixing rate of contribution (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14[b], and § 9[c] [2], as amended by St. 1925, p. 643).

Provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9(c) (2) (St. 1917, p. 840), as amended by St. 1925, p. 643, and section 14(b), that death benefit of three times annual amount devoted by deceased to support of his dependents shall be determined according to fact at time of injury, held not to preclude consideration of amount due employee, but not so devoted at time of his death in fixing rate of contribution.

3. Master and servant ☞386(1)—Rate of contribution, not gross amount paid dependents during any period, by deceased employee, is "measure of compensation" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Rate of deceased employee's contribution to dependents, not gross amount paid them by him in any particular period, is measure of loss by his death, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831).

4. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Determination of employee's rate of contribution to dependents is for Industrial Commission, whose findings on evidence are not reviewable (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Determination of deceased employee's rate of contribution to his dependents, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), is within discretion of Industrial Accident Commission, whose findings are not reviewable, if supported by any evidence.

5. Master and servant ☞386(1)—Employee's purchase of supplies for family automobile held "contribution to dependents" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Employee's purchase of supplies for automobile necessarily used by his dependents for transportation because of distance of their residence from town, held a contribution to be considered in fixing rate of contribution for purpose of death award, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831).

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mae Woland and others for compensation for the death of Edward Thatcher, employee, opposed by the Kaiser Paving Company, employer, and the Pacific Employer's Insurance Company, insurance carrier. Compensation awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurance carrier brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

W. R. Millington, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review the lawfulness of an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission. The pleading contains the usual recitals to the effect that petitioner is engaged in issuing employer's liability and workmen's compensation insurance, and that it is the insurance carrier for the Kaiser Paving Company. It then alleges that an employee of the insured company met with an accident resulting in death, for which an award was made by the Industrial Accident Commission. It is claimed that in making such award the commission acted in excess of its power or jurisdiction; that the evidence does not justify or support the findings or decision; that it is unreasonable, and unless the same is set aside, petitioner will be compelled to pay the same and thus be deprived of its property without due process of law, there being no appeal from such decision.

It appears from the record that one Edward Thatcher, a minor, of the age of 18 years, was employed by the Kaiser Paving Company of Vallejo, as a time checker. His duties consisted in checking employees' working time, for pay roll records. On August 17, 1925, while riding on the steps of a truck, he was jolted off, the truck running over him, crushing his chest, and causing immediate death. Deceased left surviving him his mother, a half-brother who was a minor, and Henry H. Kinsey and Harriet E. Kinsey, his grandparents, all of whom were partially dependent upon him for support. The commission found that the annual rate of contribution by deceased to their support was the sum of $735.84, entitling said dependents to a death benefit in the sum of $2,207.52, payable in weekly installments of $16.67, beginning as of August 18, 1925. It further found that claimants were entitled to a further award of $150, burial expenses. The weekly payments were based upon wages of $4.50 a day for employment of 6 days a week. It was stipulated that the injury arose out of and in the course of employment. It is not disputed that the deceased contributed partially to the support of all the members of his family, except his stepfather, who was the main provider. It is insisted, however, that in fixing the rate of compensation the commission included certain items as contributions which the evidence shows were not in fact such, and should therefore not have been considered in ascertaining the extent of the dependency. Such of the facts as are necessary for a discussion of the issues presented show that one Mae Woland married her present husband in the year 1915. The deceased was a child by a former marriage. A few months prior to his death Henry H. Kinsey and Harriet E. Kinsey, the aged parents of Mrs. Woland, came to live with her. They were without funds and had no means of support. The Wolands were themselves poor, and it was necessary for the son to render such assistance as he was able. About a year prior to his death he was attending part time high school and devoting the remainder of his time to such work as he could procure. He sold papers and at times drove a truck. The mother had purchased a lot outside the city limits of Vallejo, and for a time she and the family lived in a tent on the premises. The tent being inadequate for the family needs, the husband undertook to erect a structure upon the lot. At the time of the death of her son, lack of funds had prevented its completion. The scantlings on the inside were exposed and the outside of the building was unfinished, being covered with tar paper. The family, however, moved into the building, making the best of the situation. They owned some chickens and cows, but derived small benefits therefrom. Considering the distance from the town, it was necessary for them to have some means of transportation in going to and from the city to provide for their various wants, and they owned an automobile which was used for this purpose. Under these circumstances, the deceased started to render such assistance as he could. He succeeded in procuring the employment which resulted in his death.

[1] The commission, in fixing the rate of contribution of his dependents, took the first period of employment from July 20th to July 31st, inclusive, and found the earnings of the employee to be the sum of $29, exclusive of board and room. Of this sum the employee had drawn $5 for his own personal use, making no contribution therefrom to any of his dependents. On July 31st he received the balance of $24, and out of this sum he gave his mother $12.50 in cash and bought a tire for the automobile costing the sum of $19.90. For this period, then, if the cost of the tire be included, he contributed the sum of $23.40, which is 80.69 per cent. of the total amount earned. The balance of the $5.60 he retained for his own personal use. In the next period of employment from August 1st to August 15th, inclusive, he earned $47 net above board and room. During this period, on August 8th, he drew advance wages of $10. Out of this sum he gave his mother $7.50 in cash, and he purchased oil and gas for the automobile amounting to the sum of $4.90. On August 15th he had $37 balance in wages coming to him at the end of the day's work. On the following day he requested payment of this sum from his employer, expressing his intention of taking it to his mother. His request was refused, and he was informed that the company had concluded to make payments thereafter on the regular pay days only, which were fixed on the 5th and 20th of each month. He thereupon left the office for his home, and on his arrival he informed his mother of his effort to procure the money and the refusal of the company to pay. The following day he met his death in the manner above indicated. The commission, in fixing the rate of his contributions, concluded it was reasonable to assume, notwithstanding the evidence that the deceased intended to contribute the entire balance of $37 due him to his mother, that he would need for his own personal use a portion thereof. It found that, as it was established that deceased had contributed 80.69 per cent. of his wages from the first period of his employment, it would be reasonable to assume that his contributions would be limited to this percentage. For this reason the commission took 80.69 per cent. of his total earnings of $47 for the second period of employment, which amounts to $37.92, to which was added $23.40, the amount contributed from the first period, making $61.32 as the total monthly amount contributed as fixing the annual rate.

[2] It is petitioner's contention that the amount expended by the deceased for oil, gasoline, and the tire should not have been considered by the commission in fixing the annual rate or the extent of contribution. It likewise contends that the commission erred in taking into consideration the amount of wages due deceased and remaining unpaid, and which were not received by the mother until after the death of the employee. Under this contention, it is claimed that an intention to contribute can form no basis in fixing an annual rate of contribution; that the evidence should be confined solely to the actual money so devoted. This contention requires a construction of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act relating to the subject. These provisions are to be found in section 9 (c) (2), chapter 586, Stats. 1917, as amended in 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 643). They read as follows:

"In case the deceased employee leaves no person wholly dependent upon him for support, but one or more persons partially dependent therefor, the said dependents shall be allowed the reasonable expenses of his burial, not to exceed one hundred fifty dollars, and, in addition thereto, a death benefit which shall amount to three times the annual amount devoted by the deceased to the support of the person or persons so partially dependent," etc.

Section 14 (b) provides that the question of entire or partial dependency and the question as to what constitutes dependents, together with the extent of dependency, shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury of the employee. Our attention is directed to the language of the statute, which provides "that the death benefit amounting to three times the annual amount devoted by the deceased to the support," etc., and dependency "shall be determined in accordance with the fact at the time of the injury," and it is urged that, as the amount due the employee at the time of his death had not been so devoted at such time, it should not have been considered by the commission in fixing the rate. We do not consider there is any merit in this contention. The narrow construction contended for would, if adopted, in many cases defeat the plain intent of the law.

[3] In Spreckels v. Industrial Accident Comm., 186 Cal. 256, 199 P. 8, it is said that the whole theory of the Compensation Act as to death causes is that the dependents of the employee shall be compensated for the loss of the support they were receiving from him at the time of the injury; that this necessarily means that the death benefit must be computed at the rate of contribution at that time. It is the rate which is the measure of the loss, not the gross amount which the deceased has happened to pay through any past year, or through any other period of time. It is there further said that the rate of contribution at the time of the injury is by no means determined by the contributions made during the last month of the employee's life. There may have been no contributions in the last month. The employee may have been contributing in quarterly installments, and the last month may not have happened to be a month of payment. But there would, nevertheless, be a rate of contribution existing as of the date of the injury. It is the rate that the commission must determine from all the facts in the case. See, also, Great Western Power Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 196 Cal. 593, 238 P. 662. In Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 197 Cal. 17, 239 P. 330, the following language is used:

"The evidence, however, is open to the inference that except for the death of her brother, the condition of dependency of the claimant might have continued indefinitely."

These cases seem to indicate that the commission has power to accept and take into consideration the "intent" of the employee in fixing the rate. Decisions are not wanting upon the subject. In Freeman's Case, 233 Mass. 287, 123 N. E. 845, the question presented for determination was that of dependency. There it appeared that a boy 16 years of age, having a partially dependent mother, was killed during the period of his last employment. He had worked but two days prior to the accident which resulted in his death. Upon leaving his home in search of employment, he had promised his mother that he would send her all his earnings except the portion needed for his actual necessities. As he was killed before his first pay day, he had sent none home. The commission made a finding based upon his wages, and it was held that, while a simple expression of purpose to contribute to support, unaccompanied by any actual contribution, without reasonable opportunity, would not constitute a finding of partial dependency, still the commission having found that deceased made previous contributions out of his employment, such evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion that deceased was sincere in his promise. To the same effect is Gregory v. Standard Oil, 151 La. 228, 91 So. 717. In this case claim was made for benefits under an act providing for compensation to those actually dependent "at the time of injury or death." The quoted phrase was held not to be limited to the very moment of the death of the employee, but to cover a reasonable period prior thereto, as well as a reasonable expectation of assistance during the continuance of the employee's life. As here, deceased was a minor son who had contributed to the support of his mother. He had left home to seek new employment and had promised his mother that he would send to her a stated amount each month. The court, in upholding the award, held that the reputation which the son had earned as attested by his neighbors, and exemplified in his devotion to his parents, and the faithful discharge of his filial duty, gave his parents every reason to expect the redemption of his promise, which could be considered by the board in determining the amount of the award. To the same effect is Illinois Steel Co. v. Ind. Comm., 308 Ill. 466, 139 N. E. 921, and Tintic Milling Co. v. Ind. Comm., 60 Utah, 261, 207 P. 1114. In the case last cited it is said that the question is not whether contributions are made at regular intervals, but whether they were made for the purpose of continued support; whether at the time of the injury resulting in the death of the contributor the facts indicate that the contributions would have continued had the death of the employee not occurred.

[4] The determination of questions of this character is wisely left to the discretion of the commission, and its findings are not reviewable where there is any evidence to support them. See, also, Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Collard's Adm., 170 Ky. 239, 185 S. W. 1108, L. R. A. 1918E, 273; Ex parte Woodward Iron Co., 211 Ala. 111, 99 So. 649.

[5] The statutes which the courts were considering in the cases cited were in all respects similar to ours. We conclude upon the subject that all the facts and circumstances, together with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, were sufficient to justify the commission in its conclusion as to the extent of the contributions made by the deceased to his dependents. We are of the further opinion that the purchase by the deceased of the supplies for the automobile, considering the uses to which the machine was put, was as much a contribution as though the cost of the same had been given directly to the mother and by her expended for the necessary articles. The amount was devoted to the use of the dependents.

The award is affirmed.

MEYER v. MEYER. (Civ. 4834.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 13, 1927.

1. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 184(7)—Trial court is warranted in believing controverted evidence sustaining findings in divorce case.

In suit for divorce, the trial court is warranted in believing any evidence which would sustain the findings, however strongly controverted.

2. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 133(1)—Evidence of wife's desertion held sufficient in husband's divorce suit, where her only return for year was subterfuge to obtain divorce expenses.

In husband's suit for divorce, evidence that wife deserted him held sufficient to support decree in his favor, where after repeated threats she left him and her only offer within a year to return was after nine months and as subterfuge to obtain expenses and attorney's fees.

3. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 37(7)—Wife's desertion of husband held without his consent, notwithstanding he aided her removal under threats of bodily injury.

Finding that wife deserted husband without his consent held proper, notwithstanding he assisted her in removing her belongings and said that it was "up to her," under evidence that wife threatened him with bodily injury for refusal to assist.

4. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 49(6)—Innocent husband or wife need not accept reconciliation proffered after cause of action for desertion has accrued.

The law does not require an innocent husband or wife to accept a reconciliation proffered by the other after a cause of action has accrued for desertion.

5. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 127(4)—Corroborative evidence other than parties' testimony of wife's removal and absence held sufficient in husband's suit for divorce (Civ. Code, § 130).

In husband's suit for divorce on ground of desertion, evidence held sufficiently corroborated by testimony other than that of the parties as required by Civ. Code, § 130, to sustain decree in his favor, where wife deposited money in separate bank account just before separation, arranged to remove effects from homestead and to occupy other property, and remained absent for more than one year.

6. Husband and wife $\Leftarrow$ 252—Husband's possessory right under desert claim initiated before marriage is separate property, though perfected after marriage with community funds.

Possessory right in land under a desert claim initiated by husband before marriage is his separate property, even though perfected after marriage and with the use in part of community funds.

7. Husband and wife $\Leftarrow$ 252—Husband's possessory right under homestead claim made after marriage to land held under desert claim before marriage is separate property (U. S. Comp. St. § 4532).

Right of husband, who changed a desert claim initiated before marriage to a homestead claim on the same land after marriage, is possessory right, neither devisable nor descendible, and is his separate property, in view of Rev. St. U. S. § 2291 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4532), providing that on death of entryman of public lands, his widow may be substituted to his rights.

8. Divorce $\Leftarrow$ 286—District Court of Appeal would not disturb judgment on findings of trial court on conflicting evidence as to community character of property.

The District Court of Appeal would not disturb the judgment founded on findings of the trial court in a divorce suit upon conflicting evidence as to the character of property other than the homestead, whether community or separate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Suit for divorce on the ground of desertion by John A. Meyer against Estella S. Meyer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. Davis and H. Y. Gibson, both of Los Angeles (L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Joseph Scott and Leo B. Ward, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. In a suit for divorce on the ground of desertion, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appeals therefrom.

Among other things, the trial court found that all the allegations contained in plaintiff's complaint were true, as were all the allegations of the answer of plaintiff to defendant's cross-complaint; that certain property, known as the Monrovia property, was community property of the parties; and that certain other property, known as the homestead, was the separate property of plaintiff—all of which findings are attacked generally by appellant on the ground that they are not supported by the evidence.

[1] The gravamen of the first specification by appellant is that no sufficient evidence was adduced at the trial upon which the desertion by defendant of plaintiff could be predicated. However strongly it may have been controverted, it is well established that the trial court was warranted in believing any substantial evidence introduced at the hearing which would sustain the findings against which the criticism of appellant is directed.

[2] It appears that at divers times before an actual separation of the parties occurred, defendant had made statements to several different persons, including plaintiff, to the effect: That she would not live on the homestead, which was the home selected by the husband in which the parties were to reside. That "she never wanted to live in the valley (the home of the parties). * * * She said she wouldn't live there, that is, wouldn't come back there to live," although the house in which they resided was better than the average home in its locality. That after repeated threats on the part of defendant to leave plaintiff, she finally did so, taking with her all her belongings and all the furniture and furnishings in the home of the parties, with the exception of a couch, bedding, and pillows, three chairs, kitchen table, cooking utensils, an oil stove, and "enough to camp with." That although plaintiff suggested to defendant that she return to plaintiff's place of abode, defendant at no time attempted in good faith to do so; the evidence in that regard being that plaintiff said to defendant, "Better move up there again if it is too hard for you down there." And that the only time within one year from the time of the separation of the parties that defendant offered to return to plaintiff was after she had been away from plaintiff for more than nine months, and then only as a subterfuge and at a time ten days after an announcement had been made by the judge of the trial court on the hearing of a motion in an action for separate maintenance brought by defendant against plaintiff, to the effect that if defendant expected any support from plaintiff she would be required to return to the home which he had provided for her. In that connection it also satisfactorily appeared that the defendant's offer to return to plaintiff was made solely with the idea of saving expenses and attorney's fees, and which offer to plaintiff was accompanied by the threat that if such offer were not accepted, plaintiff would be immediately served with an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court in failing to obey certain orders of the court in the action for separate maintenance.

[3] While some evidence was introduced which tended to show that the separation of the parties was by their mutual consent, in that plaintiff helped defendant to remove her belongings and the furniture and furnishings in the homestead to the house at Monrovia, it also appears that when defendant told plaintiff that she was going to leave, plaintiff told defendant "it was up to her," and that plaintiff protested against taking defendant to Monrovia, but she insisted that he do so "or she would scatter his (plaintiff's) brains against the wall." Prior to that time "she (defendant) made the statement, said I (plaintiff) had to do what she said or she would put me out of commission while I was asleep." We are therefore of the opinion that the finding by the trial court that "defendant willfully and without just cause deserted and abandoned the plaintiff, against his will and without his consent," is supported by the evidence.

[4] As a part of appellant's contention that the desertion of plaintiff by defendant was not sufficiently established by the evidence, it is pointed out that at a date which was more than one year after defendant left plaintiff, she returned to the place where plaintiff was living and requested of him that he take her back and that they resume living together as husband and wife. But in a case of desertion the law does not require that after the cause of action has accrued the innocent party be compelled to accept a proffered reconciliation. It was so held in the early case of Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467, 471, where it is said:

"The counsel for the defendant urge that she repented her act prior to the desertion culminating or his gaining a right under the statute." She manifested no intention of returning until long after the period of two years of willful desertion had elapsed. Her repentance did not obliterate the offense. If it had been accepted and acted on by the plaintiff, by receiving her and renewing the cohabitation, it would be regarded as a condonation. But he may, after the lapse of the statutory period, refuse to accept the offer. Bishop, § 530, in speaking of the offer to return, says that if it is made in good faith within the period prescribed by the statute to complete the offense, it will bar the suit. "But after the time has expired and the right of action has fully accrued, the injured party is not obliged to accept such an offer: it comes too late."

To the same effect, see McMullin v. McMullin, 123 Cal. 653, 654, 56 P. 554; McMullin v. McMullin, 140 Cal. 112, 117, 73 P. 808; Howard v. Howard, 134 Cal. 346, 349, 66 P. 367; Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 204, 68 P. 694; Kusel v. Kusel, 147 Cal. 52, 54, 81 P. 297; Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 P. 1037; Walker v. Walker, 14 Cal. App. 487, 492, 112 P. 479; Anderson v. Anderson, 68 Cal. App. 218, 222, 228 P. 715.

[5] It is next urged by appellant that there was no evidence which either circumstantially or directly corroborated the testimony given by plaintiff on "a considerable number of material facts." While section 130 of the Civil Code provides in part that no divorce may be granted "upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties," and which section in the opinion by the Supreme Court on petition for hearing therein in the case of Lemberger v. Lemberger, 55 Cal. App. 231, 203 P. 786, is construed as meaning that there must be evidence in support of the cause of action, "in addition to the evidence of either or both of the parties to the action, and that the testimony of one party cannot be taken in corroboration of that of the other for the purpose of proving a cause of divorce," from the evidence in the instant case it is clear that the findings made by the judge of the trial court depended not alone on the evidence given by the parties to the action, but were founded upon facts and circumstances adduced from sources independent of either of such parties. Aside from admissions made by defendant to various witnesses, both before as well as after the separation of the parties, that she would not live in the homestead, evidence was introduced to the effect that for many years the parties kept a joint bank account in which was deposited not only the separate funds, but the individual earnings of each of the parties; that a short time before plaintiff and defendant separated, a sale of turkeys and other personal property on the homestead was made for several hundred dollars, which money was paid to defendant, and instead of depositing such funds in the joint bank account of the parties, as theretofore had been their practice, defendant deposited the same in the bank in her own name; that defendant made all arrangements for moving her personal effects and the household furniture and furnishings from the homestead without first informing plaintiff of her intention in the premises other than, as testified by plaintiff, that defendant had frequently threatened to leave him and get a divorce; that in making such removal defendant left with plaintiff such furniture and furnishings only as would barely enable him to "camp out"; that shortly thereafter defendant instituted an action against plaintiff for separate maintenance; that before removing from the homestead, without acquainting plaintiff of her intention so to do, defendant notified tenants in the Monrovia house to vacate same in order that she might occupy it; that defendant absented herself from the homestead for a period of more than one year, with the exception that after nine months had elapsed from the time of her departure from the homestead defendant returned thereto solely for the purpose of collecting money which by a court order (made in the suit for separate maintenance) plaintiff had been directed to pay to defendant, and at the same time to threaten plaintiff with proceedings in contempt of court should he fail to make such payment.

As hereinbefore indicated, we think the corroboration on the "considerable number of material facts" to which the attention of this court has been directed by appellant was sufficient to satisfy the terms of the statute to which reference has been had.

[6] It is finally contended by appellant that the finding by the trial court that the homestead was the separate property of plaintiff and that the Monrovia property was the community property of the parties, was "against the law and contrary to the evidence." With reference to such specification of error, the evidence showed that in 1912, which was before the marriage of the parties, plaintiff filed a desert claim; that although the claim was attacked, in 1917 it was allowed; in 1918, which was after the marriage of the parties, plaintiff changed his application on the same property from a desert claim to a homestead claim and which at the time of the trial had not been perfected.

That a title to land of the character of that here involved, which was initiated by one before his marriage, is his separate property, even though the title was perfected after marriage and with the use in part of community funds, is laid down in principle in the following cases, to wit: Lake v. Lake, 52 Cal. 428; Harris v. Harris, 71 Cal. 314, 12 P. 274; Morgan v. Lones, 80 Cal. 317, 22 P. 253; In re Lamb, 95 Cal. 397, 30 P. 568; Estate of Boody, 119 Cal. 402, 51 P. 634; Estate of Pepper, 158 Cal. 619, 112 P. 62, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092; Minium v. Minium, 53 Cal. App. 55, 199 P. 1104. It is therefore indisputable that had plaintiff retained the possessory right acquired by him under the desert claim, such right as he had would have been his separate property.

[7] Section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. § 4532), in effect provides in part that on the death of the entryman of public lands his widow may be substituted to such rights as the entryman possessed before his death; and the case of McCune v. Essig (O. C. A.) 122 F. 588, is authority to the point that until the claim has been perfected, the claimant has nothing other than a possessory right, which is neither devisable nor descendible; from which it would seem to follow that the interest of the claimant herein, until the issuance of a patent to the property from the United States government, was purely personal to himself, and consequently that no other person, whether his wife, his children, or others, had any interest whatsoever in the claim.

In the case of Barbet v. Langlois, 5 La. Ann. 212, it appeared that before Langlois was married he was the owner of a tract of land which fronted on a bayou. After his marriage he purchased from the United States, by virtue of his right of preference as a "front" proprietor, the lands lying to the rear of the property then owned by him. It was held that because of the fact that before his marriage he was possessed of the right of acquisition of the lands lying to the rear of his estate, such property, although purchased after his marriage, was his separate property. The following is the syllabus in the case with reference thereto:

"Under the Code of 1808, where the right to acquire property existed before a marriage although it may not have been acquired until after, the property does not enter into the community. But if paid for out of community funds, the price must be reimbursed to the community."

And the doctrine there announced was affirmed in the similar case entitled Succession of Morgan, 12 La. Ann. 153.

In the case of Minium v. Minium, 53 Cal. App. 55, 199 P. 1104, the authorities are reviewed, and it is held that a homestead is in the nature of a gift from the United States government; that therefore under the provisions of sections 162 and 163 of the Civil Code, a homestead would be separate property; and the fact that a wife may have advanced money to her husband for the purpose of assisting him to procure a homestead would not affect the title or the character of the property.

Another case, which in its facts resembles the instant case, is that of Morgan v. Lones, 80 Cal. 317, 22 P. 253. The syllabus therein, which sufficiently indicates the facts, is as follows:

"The occupant of lands for whose benefit the town-site acts were passed has an equitable interest in the lands. And if such occupant is an unmarried woman and marries, such interest is her separate property. And this is so, although the patent from the government to the municipal authorities has not issued. The property does not become community property from the fact that the husband advanced the funds necessary to get a conveyance from the municipal authorities."

Plaintiff's rights in the homestead are purely possessory and personal to himself. On complying with certain onerous and somewhat burdensome conditions, including much labor and a very considerable expense, to be done and incurred respectively after the interlocutory decree of divorce was granted between the parties to the action, plaintiff might eventually become entitled to a patent to the land from the United States government. But such result would follow only from a compliance on the part of plaintiff personally with such conditions. His divorced wife could not be substituted in his place; nor could plaintiff be compelled to live on the property or otherwise perform the conditions necessary to a ripening of his title thereto. Those things were such that he might do at his option. From a financial standpoint, or from considerations of his good health, he might conclude that other lines of endeavor would be more profitable, and so abandon whatever rights that theretofore had accrued to him. Defendant's "interest" was wholly intangible and evanescent; in fact, as in law, it had no existence. We are therefore led to the conclusion that no error was committed by the trial court in its ruling that the possessory and personal right of plaintiff in and to the property in question and known as the homestead was his separate property.

[8] As to the character of the Monrovia property, the evidence was hopelessly in conflict. Plaintiff testified that the initial payment thereon of $20 was made by him from money which he had earned during the married life of the parties; that in addition thereto, he earned money amounting to several hundred dollars, which was deposited by defendant in the joint bank account of plaintiff and defendant, and which money was used in making subsequent payments on the property in question. The price of the property was $1,675, of which at the time of the trial all had been paid with the exception of $400. Defendant testified that it was her separate funds which were used in paying for the property, and gave details concerning the use and disposition of moneys which, according to her statement, she owned at the time of the marriage and traced a considerable portion thereof into the Monrovia property. However, defendant's testimony was severely attacked, if not impeached, by several witnesses whose opportunities for knowing defendant's financial condition at all times in question were very good; from which fact the force and effect of defendant's testimony must have been much weakened, if not altogether destroyed. At any rate, the judge of the trial court, in the proper exercise of his functions, chose to rely upon the evidence adduced by plaintiff, rather than that presented by defendant in that regard, with the result that the finding and conclusion of law were made that the property belonged to the community of the parties. We find ample evidence justifying such conclusion of the trial court, and in such circumstances the rule is invariable that a judgment founded on such findings cannot be disturbed by this court.

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

KIRKPATRICK v. FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO. (Civ. 4661.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 19, 1927.

1. Sales ⚡434—Complaint for damages against seller of irrigation machinery, defectively installed and unsuitable for work contemplated, alleging buyer's performance, held sufficient, without express allegation of payment.

In action by buyer of gasoline engine upon contract, providing title should remain in seller until payment, against seller for damages resulting from negligence in installation, the allegation that plaintiff performed all covenants of contract required of him to be performed held sufficient against contention that petition did not plead payment of purchase price.

2. Sales ⚡434—Buyer's suit against seller for improper installation of irrigation machinery held to plead special damages with certainty.

In buyer's suit for damages from seller's alleged failure properly to install engine and pump for irrigation, special damages held adequately pleaded by complaint alleging acreage and value of crops lost for want of water in specific months and expense of preparing and reseeding land and removing defective installation.

3. Sales ⚡442(5)—Damages for loss of crops by failure of irrigation machinery to do work contemplated are recoverable under statute (Civ. Code, § 3314).

Damages for loss of crops by failure of irrigation machinery to do work contemplated are recoverable under Civ. Code, § 3314, providing that detriment caused by breach of warranty of personal property includes loss incurred in effort to use it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by C. A. Kirkpatrick against Fairbanks, Morse & Co., a corporation. From a judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

S. N. Bachtell, of Los Angeles, and Paul B. Bachtell and N. B. Bachtell, both of Lancaster, for appellant.

Stutsman & Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal after demurrer had been sustained to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint with leave to amend, and plaintiff had failed to amend his complaint. The demurrer was both general and special.

It is alleged in the complaint that the parties entered into a certain contract on the 25th day of March, 1922, wherein the defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff an oil engine, together with appliances and equipment specified in said contract, and to furnish a competent erector for installing the said engine and appliances, and to cause the same to be properly installed on a foundation in a workmanlike manner; that a copy of the contract was attached to the complaint and made a part thereof. The contract was in the form of a proposal signed by the defendant and accepted by the plaintiff, wherein the defendant proposed to furnish and deliver an oil engine, a pump outfit, and certain equipment. The contract contained the following language:

"You are to furnish necessary cement and gravel for foundation. We furnish competent erector for installation and to give operator necessary instructions on operation of engine."

The terms of payment were, payment of the purchase price 30 days from date of contract after shipment; title to remain in defendant until final payment was made. The complaint further alleged that defendant did install said engine on the premises of plaintiff; "that, pursuant to the terms of said contract, the said defendant was to build and construct, on said premises, in a good and workmanlike manner, a cement foundation on which said engine was properly to be installed; that said engine and appliances were to be installed in such manner as to operate one certain pump of the defendant for the purpose of raising water from the well or wells of plaintiff to the surface for the irrigation of plaintiff's land and crops, all of which the defendant well knew;" that the erector furnished by the defendant was not a competent erector, and that defendant failed, neglected, and refused to install said engine and appliances in a good and workmanlike manner; that said engine and appliances were installed in a negligent and unworkmanlike manner, in that the engine was anchored to the foundation in such manner that would not enable said engine to be aligned with the pump so as to pump water for the irrigation of plaintiff's premises; that the engine was so installed that the stud bolts of the cylinder head pitted against the anchor bolts, thereby weakening the stud bolts and tending to warp alignment of the piston in the cylinder, to the great damage of the engine; that the exhaust drum was so suspended from the cylinder head that the weight of the drum and the exhaust of the engine would strain the cylinder; that by reason of the misalignment it was impossible for the belt connecting the engine and pump to operate the pump; that the engine as installed was worthless to plaintiff as a means of operating the pump. The complaint stated:

"That the said defendant well knew that the said engine was installed for the purpose of operating the pump attached to the well or wells of the plaintiff on the premises aforesaid, and thereby raising water from said well or wells to the surface, for irrigation purposes, which said water, when so raised to the surface by the joint operation of said engine and said pump, was to be distributed by means of irrigation ditches to the growing crops and trees and land of the plaintiff; that said defendant well knew that said plaintiff wholly depended upon said engine for the operation of said pump in raising water as aforesaid for the irrigation of said premises, and that, unless said engine was installed in a good, efficient, and workmanlike manner so that it would properly function in connection with said pump for the production of water from said well or wells as aforesaid, the plaintiff would be without water for the irrigation of his crops, and land, and that without water from said well or wells the crops and trees of plaintiff would not mature and would die out."

It is further alleged that at the time of said installation plaintiff had upon his premises 25 acres of growing alfalfa, 15 acres of land plowed, bedded, and ready to be seeded to alfalfa, and wholly depended upon the production of water for irrigation; that the wells of the plaintiff had more than sufficient water therein to irrigate said land, and said pump, if properly installed, would have produced far in excess of sufficient water to irrigate said crops; that plaintiff performed all the covenants of said contract required of him to be performed; that, as a result of defendant's failure to perform the contract, plaintiff was deprived of the use of said wells and from irrigating his alfalfa during the months of May, June, and July, 1922, and thereafter; that the alfalfa died; that plaintiff was damaged by the loss of these crops of alfalfa in May, June, and July in the sum of $1,680, and by the loss of two crops in August and September, 1922, in the sum of $1,120, and the cost of reseeded said alfalfa land in the sum of $1,250, in the loss of work in preparing said 15 acres of land for seeding, in the sum of $750, the loss of the use of said land for any purpose whatsoever, in the sum of $500, and in the cost of destroying and removing said cement foundation, in the sum of $150—all in the total sum of $5,450.

[1] The respondent takes the position that it must be assumed that the purchase price had not been fully paid by the plaintiff, and that therefore no action can be maintained by plaintiff on any warranties of defendant; plaintiff not having acquired title. But the plaintiff alleges full performance as to the covenants and conditions of the contract on the part of plaintiff.

[2, 3] Respondent asserts that plaintiff is confined in his recovery to special damages, and that these are not pleaded with sufficient certainty. This is a suit for damages arising out of the alleged failure of defendant properly to install an engine and pump to be used for irrigation purposes. It will readily be seen from the above statement of the allegations of the complaint that the special damages are pleaded with great certainty, item by item. Such damages were held recoverable in the following cases, where the allegations of the complaint and the facts proven were similar to those alleged in the present case: Lichtenthaler v. Samson Iron Works, 32 Cal. App. 220, 162 P. 441; Cohn v. Bessemer G. E. Co., 44 Cal. App. 85, 186 P. 200. In the present case it is pleaded with great particularity that defendant well knew that the pump and engine were installed for the purpose of irrigating plaintiff's land and the growing crops and trees thereon. The cases above cited not only sustain the sufficiency of the complaint as to special damages, but hold that damages for loss of crops by failure of irrigation machinery may be recovered under section 3314 of the Civil Code. We have examined all the grounds of special demurrer, but will not discuss them in detail, for the reason that they are disposed of by the foregoing.

The judgment of dismissal is reversed.

MERCHANTS' FINANCE CO. v. ACOSTA BROS. et al. (Civ. 4230.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 16, 1927.

1. Sales $\S$ 358(1)—Testimony that tractor did not have power to pull disc held inadmissible in action for purchase price, where it was not warranted for a particular purpose (Civ. Code, $\S$ § 1769-1771).

In action to recover purchase price of tractor, testimony that tractor did not have sufficient power to pull disc for which it was proposed to use it, and was for that reason unmerchantable, held inadmissible where tractor was not manufactured under order for a particular purpose, Civ. Code, $\S$ § 1769-1771, relative to implied warranty, being inapplicable.

2. Evidence $\S$ 400(6)—Oral testimony relative to warranty of tractor held inadmissible, where contract was reduced to writing.

Oral testimony of express warranty that tractor was fit for purpose of pulling certain disc held inadmissible in action for purchase price, where contract was thereafter reduced to writing and all oral negotiations merged in written contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' Finance Company against Acosta Bros., a copartnership, and S. M. Acosta and another, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name of Acosta Bros. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. T. Quinn, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This appeal is from a judgment recovered by plaintiff as assignee of a contract for the purchase by defendants of a tractor, in the amount of the unpaid purchase price, to wit, $865 and interest and $100 attorney's fees as provided for in the written agreement.

The defendants alleged in their answer that at the time of their purchase the property was inaccessible to them; that the seller knew that they desired it for the purpose of pulling a six-foot double disc; that the tractor did not have sufficient power to pull such a disc, and was for that reason not sound or merchantable; that when they attempted to use it to pull that size disc it broke. At the trial the defendants introduced certain testimony to the effect that some time before the sale they told Mr. Johnson, the seller, that they wanted the tractor for the purpose of pulling a six-foot double disc. On motion of plaintiff, this testimony was stricken out on the ground "that the oral warranty cannot be introduced in a written contract." It is of this ruling of the court that appellants complain.

[1] The implied warranty declared by section 1771 of the Civil Code, having application to the present case, reads as follows:

"One who sells or agrees to sell merchandise, inaccessible to the examination of the buyer, thereby warrants that it is sound and merchantable."

There is a finding by the court, supported by substantial testimony, that " * * * the said tractor was in all respects sound and merchantable." Appellants' counsel in his brief refers to the implied warranty provided for in section 1769 of the Civil Code as follows:

"One who sells or agrees to sell an article of his own manufacture thereby warrants it to be free from any latent defect, not disclosed to the buyer, arising from the process of manufacture, and also that neither he nor his agent in such manufacture has knowingly used improper materials therein."

He fails, however, to allege such a warranty, and, furthermore, there is no proof that the seller was the manufacturer. In so far as proof of knowledge on the part of plaintiff's assignor that defendants desired the tractor for the purpose of pulling a particular sized disc is concerned, such testimony would only be relevant under the theory that the implied warranty, specified in section 1770 of the Civil Code, attached to the tractor in question. That section reads:

"One who manufactures an article, under an order for a particular purpose, warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose."

It has no bearing here. As is said in Remsburg v. Hackett Mfg. Co., 174 Cal. 799, 164 P. 792:

" * * * The contract was not such as to bring the case within the purview of section 1770. The article was not manufactured for the plaintiff under an order for a particular purpose. It was not manufactured under order at all."

[2] And, of course, in so far as an express oral warranty that the tractor was fit for the purpose of pulling a six-foot double disc is concerned, such testimony would be inadmissible on the ground that the contract was thereafter reduced to writing, and all oral negotiations were merged in the written contract. Remsburg v. Hackett Mfg. Co., supra, and Williams v. Bullock Tractor Co., 186 Cal. 32, 198 P. 780.

The testimony was inadmissible, and the motion was properly granted.

Judgment affirmed.

PARK v. WALSH. (Civ. 5848.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 16, 1927.

1. Mandamus $\Rightarrow$ 29—Where defendant died before judgment in foreign suit, plaintiff whose claim was rejected could not require representative by mandamus to appear (Civil Practice Act N. Y. §§ 84, 478; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086, 1880, subd. 3).

Where sole defendant in action brought in state of New York died before entry of judgment, making decision void against deceased, and subject to be continued against his representatives under Civil Practice Act N. Y. §§ 84, 478, executor could not be required by writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086, to enter appearance in foreign jurisdiction and litigate claim which had been rejected, though claimant would be subjected to additional expense in bringing action in California, and would be disqualified from testifying to material matters under section 1880, subd. 3, action being on contract.

2. Mandamus $\Rightarrow$ 29—Executor, not bound to defend litigation of testator in foreign jurisdiction, was under no such duty as trustee and legatee (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086).

Where executor was under no duty to appear in foreign jurisdiction and litigate suit in which testator had been defendant, having died prior to entry of judgment, no duty arose to make appearance by virtue of executor's being also trustee and residuary legatee under will; executor not being subject to mandamus under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086.

Application by Thomas M. Park for writ of mandamus to be directed to James E. Walsh, individually and as executor of and trustee under the last will and testament of Richard Varick Dey, deceased. Writ denied.

Horatio Alling and Sooy & Heywood, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. A petition for a writ of mandate directing James E. Walsh, as the residuary legatee and as executor and trustee under the last will and testament of Richard Varick Dey, deceased, to execute for transmission to the clerk of the Supreme Court of New York in and for the city of New York an instrument sufficient to constitute an appearance by him as defendant in an action filed therein against the deceased in his lifetime.

The deceased, a resident of the state of California, died in the state of New York on October 21, 1925, leaving estate in the former, but none in the latter, state. On November 27, 1925, after proceedings had, his last will and testament was duly admitted to probate in the superior court of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, following which letters testamentary thereon were issued to respondent, Walsh, who is now the qualified and acting executor thereof.

By the provisions of the will, the estate was devised and bequeathed to respondent as trustee for the uses and purposes therein named; he being also a residuary legatee thereunder. The action mentioned, which was brought by petitioner against Dey as the sole defendant for the recovery of damages for an alleged breach of contract, was tried and submitted before the latter's death, and has not been decided. It is admitted that the statutes of New York provide that "a judgment (shall not be entered) against a party who dies before a verdict, report or decision is actually rendered against him. In that case, the verdict, report or decision is void" (section 478, Civil Practice Act of New York); and, by section 84 of the same act, that "in case of the death of a sole plaintiff or sole defendant, if the cause of action survives or continues, the court, upon a motion, must allow or compel the action to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest."

As grounds for his application, petitioner alleges that, the deceased having left no estate therein, no ancillary administration can be had in New York; that the court in which the action is pending is without power to enforce the appearance by respondent, but, should such appearance be entered, is authorized by law to render and enter its judgment; that the claim on which the action was brought was on April 15, 1926, filed with the executor named, and by him rejected on February 1, 1927; that, in the event his appearance be not made in the action mentioned, petitioner will be compelled to bring action thereon in the state of California; that large sums have been expended by petitioner in the trial of the pending action, and additional expense will be necessary in the event of a retrial in California; that at the trial already had petitioner testified to matters material to the issues in the case concerning which upon a retrial in California he would, by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, be prevented from testifying.

It is contended by petitioner that the statutes of New York impose the duty upon a foreign executor to submit to the jurisdiction of its courts in order that actions there pending, in which jurisdiction was acquired of the person of his testator, may be continued against the executor, and that this duty may be enforced by mandate, citing Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Mining Co., 164 Cal. 497, 129 P. 781, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112, and Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, 14 Cal. App. 674, 113 P. 126, 130.

It was held in the cases cited that under the facts shown a duty created by the laws of another state may be enforced by mandate; but it clearly appears from the following decisions of the courts of New York that its statutes which are there considered remove the disabilities of foreign executors without terminating their immunities, and that no valid enactment of that state has sought to impose upon such executors the duty of submitting to the jurisdiction of its courts: Helme v. Buckelew, 229 N. Y. 363, 128 N. E. 216; Hill v. Guaranty Trust Co., 198 App. Div. 591, 190 N. Y. S. 653; McMaster v. Gould, 240 N. Y. 379, 148 N. E. 556, 40 A. L. R. 792.

[1] A writ of mandate may be issued to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, and must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. Sections 1085, 1086, Code Civ. Proc. While it is the duty of the executor to preserve the estate and protect the funds in his hands against simulated or unlawful claims (Estate of Joseph Spanier, 120 Cal. 698, 53 P. 357), no duty is enjoined upon him by law to litigate a rejected claim in a foreign jurisdiction, nor is such duty created by the fact that the claimant will otherwise be subjected to additional expense, or precluded by statute, unless the disqualification created thereby be waived (Kinley v. Largent, 187 Cal. 71, 200 P. 937) from testifying in support of the claim.

[2] We find no merit in the further contention that, being a trustee and residuary legatee under the will, it is respondent's duty to permit the action to be revived against him as the successor in interest of the deceased.

The view is expressed in Richards v. Blaisdell, 12 Cal. App. 101, 106 P. 732, that a judgment entered in a foreign jurisdiction, establishing a claim against an executor appointed, and the administration of the estate of whose testator is pending, in California would not operate as an estoppel or be admissible in evidence in the latter state. This question, however, need not be here considered, as we are satisfied that respondent, as executor, trustee, or as residuary legatee under the will, is under no duty enjoined by law to do the acts sought to be compelled in this proceeding.

The writ is denied.

Plaintiff had judgment in the sum of $548.07 on account of moneys found due and owing from the defendant, for and on account of sales of certain crops belonging to the plaintiff, made by the defendant, and for damages inflicted by the defendant upon certain property belonging to the plaintiff. These damages amounted only to the sum of $7.90 and are not involved in this appeal. The defendant appeals.

The record shows that in December, 1921, the plaintiff leased to the defendant a tract of land embracing 173 acres of land to be planted to sweet potatoes during the year 1922; that under the terms and provisions of said lease the defendant was to sell all of the crops produced upon said premises, including the share belonging to the plaintiff, as the rental thereof, and to pay to plaintiff one-third of the value of said crops; that during the year 1922 the defendant raised on said premises a certain crop of sweet potatoes and sold the same for the sum of $1,005.30, of which the plaintiff's share was and is the sum of $335.10; that the defendant has not paid said sum of $335.10 to the plaintiff. The record further shows that during the year 1923, under a lease executed in December, 1922, the plaintiff leased the same premises to the defendant on the same terms and conditions as to rental, to wit: That the defendant was to sell all of the said crops and pay to the plaintiff one-third of the selling value thereof; that defendant raised during said season a certain crop of cantaloupes, and that the value of the plaintiff's share of said cantaloupes was the sum of $205.07; that the defendant had sold the cantaloupes, but has not paid plaintiff any part of said sum of $205.07.

The complaint alleges the execution of the two leases, one in December, 1921, and the other in December, 1922, the farming of the lands by the defendant, the terms of the lease, that the defendant was to sell the crops and the plaintiff was to receive one-third of the value thereof, the production of the crops, and the sale of the same by the defendant, and the amount of the selling price. The complaint does not allege that the defendant has received any money on account of the sales made by him. The action was begun on the 3d day of January, 1924. The defendant filed a general demurrer, worded as follows:

"That said complaint does not, nor does any part thereof, state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

This demurrer was overruled, the defendant filed an answer, and the cause went to trial. The matter was heard entirely upon the testimony of the plaintiff. The defendant, declining to introduce any testimony, moved for a nonsuit. The motion being denied, the cause was submitted and judgment entered for the plaintiff as prayed for.

It is first urged that the complaint does not state a cause of action, in that it contains no allegation that the defendant had received any money on account of the sale of the crops raised upon the leased premises; that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to allege the production of the crops, the sale of the crops by the defendant, and the receipt of the selling price thereof, before the defendant could be held liable; or, that it must appear in the complaint that the defendant carelessly, negligently, and without due care sold the crops to irresponsible persons, and in such manner failed to receive the value of said crops.

Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution applies to the ruling of the court overruling the defendant's demurrer, and, unless the order of the court so doing has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, the defendant is not in a position to complain.

The testimony shows the terms of the lease, which we have herein stated; the raising of the crops and the value thereof; that the defendant was to sell the crops and pay the plaintiff in cash; that the plaintiff never authorized the defendant to sell any of the crops on time. It further appears from the testimony that the defendant sold the sweet potatoes to the California Sweet Potato Association. After selling the crop to the association the defendant gave to the plaintiff an order on the association worded as follows:

"Turlock, Cal., Dec. 18, 1923.

"California Sweet Potato Association: Pay to the order of Mrs. S. I. Leland $335.10."

This order was presented to the association by Mrs. Leland, payment not made, and the order was given back to the defendant by the plaintiff. The cantaloupes were sold to a man by the name of Cross, and, when demand was made upon the defendant for the plaintiff's share, his answer was that he had not yet received payment from Cross.

[1] There is nothing in the record which indicates that any sale of the crops raised on the leased premises was to be made other than for cash. The testimony of the plaintiff was to the effect that the terms of the lease were that the defendant was to sell the products and pay the plaintiff one-third of the selling price thereof in cash. It appears to be a part of the terms of the lease that the defendant was to perform this service. In other words, to sell and dispose of the products and turn over to the plaintiff one-third of the value thereof in cash was a part and parcel of the rental value of the premises. There being nothing said to the contrary in the agreement between the parties relative to the manner in which sales were to be made, the implication would follow that the sale should be made only for cash. In Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Cal. App. 388, 90 P. 485, it is said:

"In the absence of evidence to the contrary, 'to sell' means to sell for cash, and an agent authorized to sell has no authority to receive other goods in part payment. Organ Co. v. Starkey, 59 N. H. 142."

And, again, in the case of Harland v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522, 9 P. 947, where the plaintiffs had a mortgage upon a certain crop of wheat grown by the defendant Ely and the terms of the mortgage provided that the wheat should be delivered by Ely to the plaintiffs as mortgagees, and by the mortgagees sold, meant that the mortgagees should sell for cash. The mortgagees in that case, instead of selling for cash, took a check payable 10 days after date. This check was dishonored and the selling price of the wheat lost. The court said:

"But we think the plaintiffs, by their negligence in delivering the wheat, which they had contracted for cash without receiving payment, and in accepting a time check in violation of the usual custom of merchants, took upon themselves the risk of nonpayment, and rendered themselves liable for the sum of money which they ought to have received, and which but for their own carelessness they would have received."

And further:

[2] In the case at bar, under the terms of the lease, it must be held that the defendant was entitled to make sale only for cash. It is further argued that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that the defendant has received payment.

In the case of Dodge v. Hatchett, 118 Ga. 883, 45 S. E. 667, a case having to do with the burden of proof, involving the same principle which we are here considering, to wit, property sold by an agent, it was held:

"In a suit against such an agent, after the plaintiff has shown the agreement between them creating the agency, that the property was delivered to the agent, and that the same has been sold, the burden is shifted to the defendant to discharge himself by showing that no such agreement existed, or that the property was never delivered, or that he has fully accounted, or some other reason why he should not be held liable to the plaintiff"—citing Lee v. Clements, 48 Ga. 128; Oliver v. Hammond, 85 Ga. 329, 11 S. E. 655; Thomas v. Funkhouser, 91 Ga. 478, 18 S. E. 312.

And the cause was reversed on account of the error of the trial court in charging that the burden of proof rested upon the plaintiff throughout the entire trial.

In Lahr v. Kraemer, 91 Minn. 26, 97 N. W. 418, it was held:

"A general showing of the amount of property delivered to the agent and a failure to return or account for it on demand is prima facie sufficient, and shifts the burden upon the agent to make a specific accounting."

In O'Day v. Annex Realty Co. (Mo. Sup.) 236 S. W. 22, it is said:

"An agent being bound to account to his principal for all money and property received by virtue of the agency, when the principal has shown the existence of such relation and the receipt of money or property by the agent, the burden of showing a proper disposition thereof rests upon the agent."

See, also, Herald-Dispatch Co. v. Hostetler, 130 Ill. App. 179. To the same effect is Holt-house v. Poling, 52 Ind. App. 568, 99 N. E. 810.

The same ruling is applied as to the burden of proof in Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n v. Montgomery, 92 Minn. 194, 99 N. W. 776, that an agent authorized to sell only for cash is liable, if he sells otherwise. See, also, 2 C. J. 724, § 387, where the rule is stated, citing many authorities:

"An agent to buy or sell property for his principal is bound to use reasonable care and diligence in making the purchase or sale, and will be liable for losses which the principal may sustain by reason of his negligence in this regard, as where, without authority to sell on credit, he sells on credit instead of for cash."

[3, 4] The appellant cites a number of authorities relating to the duties, liabilities, and powers of factors, and argues that the defendant in this case was authorized to sell on credit, and that the burden rests upon the plaintiff to show either the receipt of the money, or that the defendant was negligent in making sales, and that the burden of accounting for the property does not rest upon the defendant. While, under the terms of the lease here involved, the defendant was the agent of the plaintiff to make sale of the produce raised on the leased premises, the defendant was not a factor. As defined in 12 Cal. Jur. 411, a factor is an agent who, in pursuit of an independent calling, is employed by another to sell property for him, etc. A factor occupies the position similar to that of a commission merchant or a broker and is only engaged in the sale of property for another for a compensation. In the instant case, such is not shown to be the business of the defendant. He was not engaged in anything of that kind. He was simply a lessee under the terms of the lease, requiring him to market the produce and pay to the plaintiff one-third of the selling price thereof in cash, as the rental value of the premises leased to be returned by the defendant to the plaintiff.

[5] Under the authorities cited, we think the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and that the burden was cast upon the defendant to show what he had done with the property and why he had not paid over to the plaintiff her share of the proceeds of the sale thereof, and, upon his declining to do so, the trial court was authorized to enter judgment for the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

J. K. Fronk and another were convicted of embezzlement, and they appeal. Affirmed.

W. V. Anderson, of Los Angeles, and C. M. Fickert, of San Francisco, for appellant Fronk.

M. T. Case and William G. Randall, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Landon.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. J. K. Fronk and Lloyd Albert Landon were jointly indicted by the grand jury of Los Angeles county, charged in two counts with the larceny of $12,500 and $10,300, respectively. They were acquitted by the jury on these two counts. The indictment also charged them in counts 3 and 4 with the embezzlement of the same sums, alleging that the defendant Landon, who was the manager of the Santa Barbara and Western Avenue branch of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, had in his control as agent and bailee of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank the moneys heretofore mentioned, and that he and the defendant Fronk did "willfully, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously convert, embezzle, and appropriate" the same to their own use, "and to uses and purposes not in the due and lawful execution of the said trust of the said Lloyd Albert Landon." The jury returned a verdict of guilty on these last two counts, charging embezzlement, and, from the judgments pronounced upon the verdicts and from orders denying their motions for a new trial, the defendants prosecute separate appeals.

[1-3] In the interests of clarity, we will, before reciting further facts, dispose of one point urged by the defendant Fronk, to wit: That counts 3 and 4 do not charge facts constituting an offense committed by him, nor charge him with being an accessory to an offense. His contention may be stated this way: That, inasmuch as the indictment alleges that Landon was the agent having the funds under his control, it was necessary that it charge embezzlement by Landon, and then, if it was sought to hold Fronk as an accessory, to charge that he aided and abetted the defendant Landon in the commission thereof. We do not agree with this assertion by the appellant Fronk. Under our system of pleading the distinction between accessories before the fact and principals is abolished by section 971 of the Penal Code. It is sufficient if the pleading advises the defendant of the facts charged, provided, of course, that the facts so charged do constitute the offense. People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 90, 20 P. 36; People v. Schroeder, 43 Cal. App. 623, 185 P. 507. To have alleged the agency of Landon, his control of the money belonging to his principal and that he converted it to his own use in violation of his trust, and that Fronk, knowing the facts of agency, control, and purposes, aided and abetted Landon in the conversion of the money to his own purposes in violation of the trust, would not have alleged a situation different from that made to appear here. It is alleged that Landon and Fronk committed the felony of embezzlement; that Landon in his capacity as agent had certain moneys under his control for his principal; that he and Fronk "willfully" and "feloniously" converted the moneys to their own use. In substance, the allegations are the same. In fact, in the case of People v. Rozelle, supra, relied upon most strongly by the appellant Fronk, the court says:

"The defendant might properly have been charged directly as a principal. In other words, it might have been charged, in direct terms, that he committed the act. Pen. Code, § 971. And this is much the better and safer practice. People v. Outeveras, 48 Cal. 19."

See, also, People v. Groenig, 57 Cal. App. 495, 501, 207 P. 502. While it may be said that Fronk could not be guilty of the crime of embezzlement of property not intrusted to his care and under his control, if acting alone and independently, yet in conjunction with the person acting as agent and as an accomplice of that agent he could be guilty. The same principle was declared in the case of People v. Anderson (Cal. App.) 242 P. 906, where a private citizen claimed he could not have been guilty of the crime of accepting a bribe. The court said:

"It is true that as a private citizen he could not as a principal be guilty of the crime of bribery as defined by the above Code section. But in conjunction with one or more of the officers mentioned in said section of the Code, and as an accomplice of such officer, he could be guilty of the crime as defined by said section 68. Pen. Code, §§ 31 and 971; People v. Bartol, 24 Cal. App. 659, 142 P. 510; People v. Horn, 25 Cal. App. 583, 144 P. 641; Bishop v. State, 118 Ga. 799, 45 S. E. 614."

The testimony in this case shows that Fronk was conducting a legitimate automobile business. As aids to faster expansion he also conducted business under the following names: J. K. Fronk Finance Company, Bureau of Business Standards, and Western Automobile Company. Under his own or one or more of these names he opened accounts in seven different banks in Los Angeles. In addition to legitimate and regular commercial paper deposited in these banks and for about eight months prior to December, 1925, the defendant Fronk was drawing checks on various banks and depositing those checks in various other banks, taking advantage of the time necessary for the paper to pass through the clearing house, thus building up in the deposit accounts fictitious balances. This very briefly describes the process of "kiting checks" which was the custom which led to the transactions in question. During this time he assiduously cultivated the friendship of the defendant Landon, made him presents of liquor and gave him money aggregating approximately $1,500; that Fronk, at Landon's request, gave a position to a relative of Landon's wife. It was also testified that the defendant Landon was frequently seen in Fronk's office. Landon testified that the gifts of money were made to him without any agreement or understanding concerning the reason therefor, but that he assumed it was only the lavish hand of the easy spender. Prior to the transactions here complained of, Landon admitted that he knew that Fronk was kiting a considerable number of checks, but says that from conversations had with Fronk he believed Fronk could easily take care of all concealed overdrafts thus created within a few hours if it became necessary. On December 28, 1925, Landon issued to Fronk a cashier's check payable to the Western Automobile Company for the sum of $12,500, and took in exchange Fronk's personal check for a like sum drawn on the Manchester-Moneta Avenue State Bank, and on December 30, 1925, issued to Fronk two cashier's checks for $5,000 and $5,300, made payable to the same payee, and accepted Fronk's personal check drawn on the Santa Monica and Western Avenue branch of the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank for $10,300. Many times previously Landon had accepted personal checks of Fronk in payment of cashier's checks and the checks had theretofore been honored; but on this occasion they were not paid by the banks upon which they were drawn, although the first check when first presented to the Manchester-Moneta Avenue State Bank, on December 30th was charged to Fronk's account, but later in the day, on the instruction of the bank examiner, was returned and marked, "Not sufficient funds." It also appeared from the testimony that neither of the banks upon which the checks were drawn had entered into any agreement with Fronk for the extension of credit to him or permitting him to overdraw his accounts. The cashier's checks of $12,500 and $5,300 were paid by the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank.

[4-7] Both appellants complain of the admission in evidence over their objection of a transcription made by the stenographer who took it in shorthand, of answers made by the defendant Landon in response to questions propounded by a captain of police. So far as the defendant Fronk is concerned, however, the court sustained the objection and told the jury that it could not be considered as affecting the interests of the defendant Fronk, but only as affecting the interests of the defendant who made the statements. The appellant Landon argues that the corpus delicti had not been proved sufficiently to warrant the introduction of extrajudicial admissions. The body of the crime in this case consists of the agency, control of the principal's money in his capacity as agent, that the money belonged to his principal (due proof of these three elements cannot here be questioned), and the conversion of the money to his own use and in violation of his trust. People v. Schroeder, supra. With respect to the last element, the testimony establishing the corpus delicti sufficiently to warrant the introduction of confessions or admissions need not be of a conclusive character such as to warrant a conviction. People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 6, 106 P. 428; People v. Frazer (Cal. App.) 252 P. 633. In the present case it was established without the aid of defendant's statements that he and Fronk were very friendly; that he was receiving money from Fronk; that he had no authority to make loans for the bank or accept personal checks on banks other than his own in return for cashier's checks; that cashier's checks were issued in exchange for personal checks which were not honored; that two of the cashier's checks were paid by Landon's principal to a concern operated by Fronk. There was also testimony that, while it was Landon's duty to report overdrafts to the main bank, the report sent in on December 28th did not disclose the overdraft by Fronk. There was ample testimony establishing Fronk's habit of "kiting checks." We think that this testimony sufficiently proved the last element of the offense to warrant the introduction of admissions or confessions. The inference is justified from the relationship of the defendants and the moneys paid to Landon by Fronk that they were working in conjunction with the object of converting the bank's funds to their own purpose.

[8, 9] Both defendants assert and argue with commendable sincerity that the testimony fails to establish the crime of embezzlement; the appellant Fronk maintaining that at most the facts proved only constitute the offense of issuing checks without sufficient funds, and the appellant Landon claiming that the worst construction possible to be placed upon the acts described the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses. We are of the opinion, however, that appellants overlook the deductions which the jury were entitled to draw from the fact that money and gifts were made to Landon by Fronk, the personal relationship existing between them, and Landon's knowledge that Fronk was issuing worthless paper. It is immaterial what means or processes the defendants adopted to convert the money intrusted to the care of Landon. The fact that cashier's checks were issued evidencing the bank's obligation to pay, and which were paid, does not differentiate it from a case where the money might be taken directly instead of indirectly. If Landon knew that the checks he accepted were worthless and he intended to and did convert the funds of the bank to their joint use by means of the subterfuge of worthless checks, he is undoubtedly guilty of the offense charged. Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108; People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 P. 617. We think the jury were authorized in drawing the inference just mentioned, from the testimony heretofore recited. And, of course, where there is substantial evidence upon which the jury could rest their verdict, it is not within the province of appellate tribunals to do other than follow that conclusion.

[10] The appellant Landon says that he fought continuously for an opportunity to inform the jury of all the business transactions between Landon and Fronk, but he specifies no instances where the court refused him that privilege. We are left without specification except that the Attorney General supplies us with one question asked of a witness, as follows:

"Mr. Wilson, do you know the amount, the aggregate amount of cashier's checks sold to J. K. Fronk through your bank's branch at Santa Barbara and Western avenue during the period of eight months up to the end of December?"

The objection to this was sustained. There may have been many instances of regular transactions. There may possibly have been instances of irregular transactions. We fail to see how the aggregate amount of good and bad, assuming that they were such, could be of any assistance in determining the intent on Landon's part. But, assuming that it was, there was evidence introduced to show that during that period of time, cashier's checks to the extent of about $2,000,000 were sold. The ruling of the court could not possibly have prejudiced defendant's case.

[11] Counsel for Fronk assigns as error the introduction of certain checks deposited with the Manchester-Moneta Avenue State Bank. The situation presents itself in this wise, that, in order to justify Landon in issuing the cashier's checks, the defense attempted to show a very considerable deposit made in the bank mentioned. The prosecution then offered the checks, together with testimony to show that the balance was fictitious and the checks worthless. We can see no error.

Complaint is made of some of the instructions. We have examined them all and think they correctly applied the law to the facts of the case and fully and fairly advised the jury thereof.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

James Jensen was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred Duffy, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from an order denying his motion for a new trial and from a judgment of conviction for an assault with intent to commit rape upon the prosecutrix, Bettie Horton, a child of 6 years.

As originally drawn, the information, through clerical error, gave the name of the prosecutrix as Bettie Norton, instead of Bettie Horton. When the prosecution rested, the defendant, before proceeding with his defense, moved the court for a direction to the jury to find the defendant not guilty upon the ground, among others, that the information charged an assault upon Bettie Norton, while the proof related to Bettie Horton. The motion was denied; and, upon motion of the district attorney, the court ordered an amendment of the information changing the name to Horton. Defendant contends that, the jury having been impaneled to try him upon a charge of assault upon Bettie Norton, he was deprived of the right to a trial by jury of the charge of assault declared by the amended information to have been made on Bettie Horton.

[1] Section 1008 of the Penal Code allows amendment in the discretion of the court at any time after a defendant's plea, where it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant, provided there is neither a change in the offense charged nor a charge of any offense not shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination. In People v. White, 47 Cal. App. 400, 190 P. 821, after the jury had been impaneled, but before any evidence was taken, an information naming the prosecutrix as Jennie Carlsen was amended so as to give her correct name, Jennie Larsen; and this was held on appeal to have been a proper exercise of the court's discretion. In the present case the amendment was not made until the People's Case had been presented to the jury and the defendant was called to present his defense. No substantial right of the defendant was prejudiced by the amendment. He was in no way taken by surprise, nor did he request any continuance because of the correction of the clerical error. The only witnesses for the people were the prosecutrix and her grandmother, Mrs. Cates. Defendant had heard their testimony; and his defense, with himself as the sole witness, consisted of an absolute denial. Moreover, there is no pretense that he was not aware from the very beginning of the identity of the individual in question, however named in the information. The ruling made in the White Case should therefore govern here. Reference may be made also to People v. Harrison, 14 Cal. App. 545, 112 P. 733, and the cases there cited.

[2] Upon the record of the trial it is contended that the verdict lacks support, in that there is insufficient evidence of guilty intent. In cases of this character intent must necessarily be determined largely by reasonable inferences from the facts placed before the jury. The child, who was motherless, lived with her grandmother, Mrs. Cates, at Wrightwood, in San Bernardino county. On July 3, 1926, at about 6 o'clock in the afternoon, defendant, with the permission of Mrs. Cates, took the child for a boat ride on a lake in the vicinity. As the child testified, after crossing the lake, defendant took her into the brushwood and caused her to lie down, lowered her bloomers, and engaged in an attempt to indulge himself sexually, but without actual penetration. The grandmother kept a boarding house at Wrightwood, and when the child reached home Mrs. Cates was busy serving supper to her boarders. She testified that the child came home "whining and crying," and saying she did not want supper, asked to be put to bed. As the child continued to cry, Mrs. Cates went with her to the bedroom, and, undressing the little girl, found her bloomers wet and the skin about the private parts "red as fire * * * and looking like she was ready to bleed, and she had a kind of sticky stuff on her"—which led

Mrs. Cates to think that the child had been "in poison weeds." Upon the grandmother's inquiry, "What caused this?" the child answered, "I can't tell you, I can't tell you now;" but she said further, "I am all sore and raw, I want you to grease me and put powder on me before I go to bed." This the grandmother did, not suspecting at the time that the child had been maltreated. The little girl complained again the next day, and powder was again applied. About five days later something occurred in the town with reference to other children which led Bettie to tell her grandmother the story of her boat ride with defendant, and the grandmother immediately caused defendant's arrest. From such evidence the jury undoubtedly drew the inference that there had been an assault by defendant with intent to commit rape, and that inference is amply justified. It was not merely a case of lewd and lascivious conduct under section 288 of the Penal Code, but a case properly cognizable under section 220.

[3-5] Upon the subject of intent, defendant complains of the following instruction given by the court:

"In every crime or public offense there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence. This intent must be judged by the circumstances connected with the offense. An unlawful act is presumed to have been done with an unlawful intent. A person is presumed to intend the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act. A person must be presumed, and is presumed, to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own acts."

It is urged that such an instruction does violence to the rule requiring specific intent to be shown. The first sentence, as to the necessity of union of act and intent, is but the quotation of section 20 of the Penal Code, and, as is said in People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 6, 24, 106 P. 428, is not only correct as an abstract statement of law, but is given in nearly every criminal case. The next sentence, declaring that intent may be judged from circumstances, accords with the language of the court in People v. Maciel, 71 Cal. App. 213, 218, 234 P. 877, 880: "All the circumstances surrounding the act furnish the evidence from which the presence or absence of specific intent may be inferred by the jury." See, also, People v. Bones, 35 Cal. App. 429, 435, 170 P. 166. The two following sentences in the instruction are presumptions formulated in subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Speaking, in People v. Dunlop, 27 Cal. App. 460, 467, 150 P. 389, of an instruction, given in a case of this same character, in language borrowed from subdivision 1 of section 1962, Code of Civil Procedure, "a guilty intent is conclusively presumed from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act," Judge Hart said that, while he did not favor the instruction, yet, even if not appropriate to the case made by the briefs, the language could not, in view of the instructions as a whole, be held so prejudicial as to require a reversal. The same may be said of that portion of the instruction here which is taken from subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure. The next succeeding sentence, "A person must be presumed, and is presumed, to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do," is a form of instruction which in a different sort of case was held proper in People v. Moxley, 17 Cal. App. 466, 470, 120 P. 43. As given in that case, and also in this, the clause hardly does more than give expression to a truism—a man does what he does—and could have occasioned no prejudice.

[6] The language in which such an instruction is usually couched is found in People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 564, 120 P. 20, and is there followed by the remaining portion of the instruction to which exception is taken by the defendant here. The Richardson Case was a prosecution under section 274 of the Penal Code for furnishing drugs with intent to procure a miscarriage, and, in a case of that class, as in this, specific intent must be proved. The instruction there criticized read as follows:

"A person must be presumed and is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his own acts, unless there is evidence direct or indirect to controvert this presumption."

In reference to this instruction, the court said:

"It is not disputed that this is a correct exposition of the law in ordinary cases, but it is urged that the latter part of the instruction is not applicable and is misleading where, as in this case, the intent with which an act is done is the gist of the offense. * * * This particular intent being, as said, the gist of the offense, it was incumbent on the people to establish it as a fact by such evidence as would warrant a conclusion to that effect on the part of the jury. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 P. 176. But we do not think that the instruction complained of was meant or could have been understood by the jury as requiring or authorizing them to find any such intent in the absence of evidence establishing it to their satisfaction beyond all reasonable doubt. This is clear when we examine the charge as a whole."

So also in People v. Wilson, 36 Cal. App. 589, 597, 172 P. 1116, the court said that such an instruction was not to be read alone but in connection with the entire charge, and particularly the portion which advised the jury that it must find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the acts charged.

In the present case the jury was told in other instructions, in plain terms, that the state was bound to prove that the defendant assaulted the prosecutrix with the intent to have sexual intercourse with her; that intent must be established like any other fact by acts, conduct, and circumstances; that innocence was to be presumed; that the law raised no presumption against defendant, and every material element necessary to constitute the crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and that, if the element of intent was lacking, the offense had not been proved. The instructions as a whole in this respect did full justice to defendant.

In a case such as the one under review it is not necessary for the evidence to show that the accused intended to gratify lust at all events. The intent is to be gathered from the outward acts of the defendant and the accompanying circumstances, and from those acts and circumstances the jury are to draw rational conclusions as human beings. People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 511, 63 P. 842; People v. Moore, 155 Cal. 237, 100 P. 688; People v. Onessimo, 65 Cal. App. 341, 224 P. 101. Evidence of the fact of an assault on the prosecutrix is found in her testimony that the defendant caused her to lie down and disarrange her clothing for carnal purposes (People v. Roach, 129 Cal. 33, 61 P. 574), and the physical contact which followed, together with the condition of the child which the grandmother subsequently observed, are indications of intended sexual connection (People v. Fernandez, 4 Cal. App. 314, 87 P. 1112).

The defense of the accused was not that, if an offense was committed, it was one which is catalogued under section 288 of the Penal Code. His defense was an absolute denial of any tampering whatever. It is quite evident that the jury disbelieved him and placed credence in the testimony adduced by the people. From that testimony the logical and rational conclusion was that the assault had been committed by defendant, and that the intent charged was his true and factual intent. In a corresponding case (People v. Collins, 5 Cal. App. 654, 91 P. 158), the conduct of the defendant as described by the prosecutrix, likewise a child of 6 years, was quite similar to that in evidence here, and the court there said:

"We must suppose that his acts were done with the purpose and desire that would ordinarily characterize the acts of an individual of the male sex when such acts were done with one of the female sex."

Our conclusion is therefore that, under the circumstances in evidence and the court's charge as a whole, the instruction assailed did not prejudice defendant.

[7] Exception is taken to another instruction which goes, however, to form rather than substance. In giving the instruction as to the province of the jury in determining the credibility of witnesses, the court in the earlier part of the instruction used the masculine pronoun instead of pronouns alternatively masculine and feminine; but in the latter portion of the instruction both forms of pronouns were used. In common parlance the masculine pronoun is frequently used generically; and from the instruction, which in the beginning told the jury to consider all the circumstances under which each witness testified, the jury undoubtedly understood the language of the court to apply to every witness heard and not to be directed in any part exclusively to the defendant, the sole male witness in the case. The entire instruction is as follows:

"The jurors are the sole judges of all questions of fact, and of the credibility of witnesses. The jurors may believe the whole or any part of the evidence of the witness, and may disbelieve the whole or any part of it, as may be dictated by the exercise of their sound judgments as reasonable men. You should carefully scrutinize all the testimony given, and in doing so consider all the circumstances under which each witness has testified, his degree of intelligence, his manner while on the stand, the relation he bears to the case, and the manner in which he might be affected by a verdict, his apparent desire to confine himself to the truth, or to color his statements, his apparent tenacity or lack of memory, the extent to which he is contradicted or corroborated by other evidence, if at all, and any other considerations that tend to throw light upon the question of his veracity or credibility, and determine the amount of credence to which each witness and each statement is entitled at your hands as reasonable and intelligent men. A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he or she testifies, by the character of his or her testimony, or by evidence affecting his or her character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or both, or his or her motives, or by contradictory evidence, and the jury are the exclusive judges of his or her credibility."

It would be hypercritical to say that any miscarriage of justice resulted from the form of this instruction.

[8] The only other instruction attacked is the following portion of an instruction numbered 9 in the clerk's transcript:

"You are instructed that, while it is the law that the testimony of the prosecutrix should be carefully scanned, still this does not mean that such evidence is never sufficient to convict. If you believe the prosecutrix it is your duty to render a verdict accordingly."

An instruction in the same terms was held in People v. Johnson, 106 Cal. 289, 39 P. 622, and People v. Barker, 137 Cal. 557, 70 P. 617, to furnish cause for reversal. Those cases were decided, however, before the adoption of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. In the same instruction which contained the language above quoted, the court also said to the jury:

"It is sufficient, if you believe from her evidence and all other testimony and circumstances in proof of the case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the crime charged has been committed."

In view of this curative instruction in close juxtaposition with that assailed, and in view also of the purpose and intent of the constitutional amendment, disparaging reversal for mere technical misdirection while encouraging at the same time the due and orderly administration of justice, we are of the opinion that the case made against defendant is so strong and clear, and the instructions as a whole so fair, that the particular sentence complained of did not result in a miscarriage of justice, and should not occasion a reversal of the judgment of conviction.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

TOBIN GROCERY CO. v. SPRY et al.
(Sac. 4040.)

Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 428(2)—Notice of intention to appeal held sufficient where filed on sixteenth day after notice of entry of judgment by copy which omitted indorsement of filing (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a).

Notice to clerk of intention to appeal, requesting transcript, held sufficient where filed on the sixteenth day after notice of entry of judgment by copy which did not bear indorsement showing fact of filing in clerk's office, though Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, requires notice of intention to appeal to be filed within 10 days after notice of entry of judgment.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 629—Trial court's certification of transcript over objection on ground of delay held exercise of statutory power (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473).

Trial court's certification of transcript over objection on ground of appellants' delay was an exercise of power to relieve appellants, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, providing that court may allow amendment or enlarge time to plead.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 663(1)—Informalities in preparation of record are cured by judge's certification.

Informalities in preparation of typewritten record are cured by the due certification by the judge of the transcript which has been prepared.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 939—Where transcript is settled within 6 months, it must be assumed that any default was relieved by court or waived by respondent.

Where transcript has been settled within 6 months' period, it must be assumed either that objections were raised in trial court and settlement was equivalent to relief from default, or that respondent waived default by failure to object.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Tobin Grocery Company against Frank Spry and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. Plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal or to affirm the judgment. Motion denied.

Samuel V. Cornell, of Turlock, for appellants.

Wm. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Judgment was entered in this action for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed. Respondent has made a motion to dismiss the appeal, or for an order affirming judgment, on the ground that the notice of appeal was not filed within 10 days after notice of entry of the judgment; that the trial judge exceeded his powers in granting certain extensions of time to the defendants within which to prepare the transcript; that the transcript was not filed until after the last extension granted had expired. The further ground that the defendants had abandoned the appeal may be summarily dismissed from consideration as it lacks substantial support.

Judgment was rendered, filed, and entered in the court below on September 13, 1926. No proceedings for a new trial were had, and the notice of appeal was served on September 28 and filed September 29 following. The notice of appeal was therefore filed within time. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 939.

On the 13th day of September, the date on which the judgment was rendered, and after it had been filed with the clerk of the court, counsel for the plaintiff delivered to counsel for the defendants a copy of the judgment, which, however, did not have "attached thereto or indorsed thereon any statement or writing stating in any manner whatever that said judgment had been theretofore filed with the clerk of the court."

[1] On September 29 following, the date on which the notice of appeal was filed, the defendants filed with the clerk of the court a notice stating that they intended to appeal from the judgment, and requesting that a transcript of the testimony offered or taken, the evidence offered or received, and all rulings, instructions, acts, or statements of the court, also all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate, be made up and prepared. Such notice is required by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure to be filed within 10 days after notice of entry of the judgment in cases in which no proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending. We are not satisfied, however, that the purported notice of entry of judgment given defendants, in the manner and form we have referred to, was a sufficient notice to start the time running within which it was incumbent upon the defendants to give the notice to the clerk to prepare the transcript. The notice was therefore filed within time.

[2] Within 20 days after notice to prepare the transcript was filed with the clerk, and on a number of succeeding dates, the judge of the trial court gave to the reporter extensions of time within which to prepare and file the transcript. One extension, granting until December 20, 1926, was given 1 day after the previous extension had expired. No further extensions appear to have been given. The transcript was not certified by the reporter until the 6th day of January, 1927, on which date it was filed with the clerk of the court. Subsequently, plaintiff gave notice that it would, on January 24, ask the court to refuse to certify to the truth and correctness of the transcript for the reason that it was not filed within time. The record is silent as to what transpired when the objections to the certification of the transcript were made, but the transcript was duly certified by the judge on February 14, 1927, less than 6 months after the rendition of the judgment. It does not appear that any formal application for relief was made by the appellants at the time of the certification of the transcript, but there have been brought here copies of the record of the proceedings had in the court below on a motion made "to dismiss the appeal" on the ground of the failure of the defendants to prosecute the appeal. Counsel for the appellants therein made an affidavit, from which it appears that the failure of the phonographic reporter to complete the transcript within the time required may have been, and probably was, the result of a misunderstanding on the part of the reporter as to the intention of the defendants to prosecute the appeal.

[3, 4] In view of the fact that the delay of the appellants in having the transcript prepared was urged upon the trial judge as a reason for denying the certification of the transcript, and the court, notwithstanding the delay and the objection, having certified the transcript, its certification under the circumstances here involved was an exercise of the power to relieve the appellants, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In re Barney, 191 Cal. 18, 21, 214 P. 853; Stenzel v. Kronick (Cal. Sup.) 255 P. 199. Informalities in the preparation of the type-written record are cured by the due certification by the judge of the transcript which has been prepared. Bell v. Brigance, 194 Cal. 445, 229 P. 27. Where the transcript has been settled by the trial judge within the 6 months' period, it must be assumed either that the objections to its settlement were raised, as they should have been, in the trial court, and that settlement was the equivalent of relief from default, or that the respondent waived the default by failure to object in the court below. The former seems to be the situation here, as evidenced by the action of the trial judge. Rubin v. Platt Music Co. (Cal. App.) 251 P. 243.

The motion to dismiss the appeal or for affirmance of the judgment is denied.

PEOPLE v. WEITZEL. (Cr. 2962.)

Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1927.

1. Bribery $\S$ 165(2)—Mere offers by member of common council to cast vote favorably for a consideration held not "agreement to receive bribe," warranting conviction for bribery (Pen. Code, $\S$ 165, as amended by St. 1905, p. 650).

Member of common council, who was charged with offering for consideration to vote for purchase of water system and for annexation of another city by election, could not be convicted for bribery under Pen. Code, $\S$ 165, as amended by St. 1905, p. 650, providing for punishment of members receiving, or agreeing to receive, bribe, where offers alone were shown without agreement for payment of money thereunder.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

The conviction of Harry K. Weitzel of bribery was reversed by the District Court of Appeal, and the Attorney General's petition for hearing in the Supreme Court was granted. Judgment of conviction reversed.

Sample & Harden, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Chester C. Kempley, of San Diego, for the People.

LANGDON, J. The defendant was convicted of bribery under the first and third counts of an indictment, based on section 165 of the Penal Code of the state of California. Upon appeal, the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One thereof, reversed the judgment. A petition for hearing was filed in this court by the Attorney General, which petition was granted.

As stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal (249 P. 842), the evidence sufficiently discloses that the defendant, on or about the 20th day of June, 1923, was a duly elected, qualified, and acting member of the common council of the city of San Diego, and that on that day he offered to one Ed Fletcher and Charles F. Stern to cast his official vote in said common council in favor of the purchase by the city of San Diego of Cuyamaca Water Company, in consideration of the payment to him of the sum of $100,000. The evidence, introduced under a separate count of the indictment, also is sufficient to prove that on the 23d day of June, 1923, while still a member of the common council, he offered to one Ed Fletcher, in consideration of the payment to him of the sum of $4,000, to cast his official vote as herein-after stated, as a member of the said common council, in the matter of calling an election for the purpose of submitting to the electors of the city of San Diego the question of the ratification of the annexation to the city of San Diego of the territory formerly known as the city of East San Diego. The evidence in this case does not disclose anything as to the nature of the offer, excepting the fact that the defendant approached Ed Fletcher and Charles F. Stern, and proposed that they pay him the sum of $100,000 for his vote in the matter charged in the first count of the indictment, and, as to the separate count referred to herein, that he likewise approached Ed Fletcher and proposed to him that he would favor ratification of the annexation of the city of East San Diego to the city of San Diego by way of an election rather than by resolution of the council, if Colonel Fletcher would pay to the defendant the sum of $4,000 for his services.

[1] As stated by the District Court of Appeal, the only point at issue on the appeal is whether or not such proof establishes the crime of "agreeing to receive" a bribe.

The portion of section 165 Penal Code, applicable here, reads as follows:

"Every person who gives or offers a bribe to any member of any common council * * * with intent to corruptly influence such member in his action on any matter or subject pending before, or which is afterward to be considered by, the body of which he is a member, and every member of any of the bodies mentioned in this section who receives, or agrees to receive any bribe upon any understanding that his official vote, opinion, judgment, or action shall be influenced thereby, or shall be given in any particular manner or upon any particular side of any question or matter, upon which he may be required to act in his official capacity, is punishable. * * *"

The indictments charge that defendant did willfully, etc., "agree to receive" a bribe.

By an amendment to section 165, Penal Code, passed by the Legislature in 1905, the offense on the part of any person giving or offering a bribe to a member of the common council was not modified, but the latter half of the section, dealing with offenses on the part of members of the common councils, was changed, so that, instead of reading, as formerly, that every member of any such body "who receives or offers to receive any such bribe, is punishable," etc., the statute by such amendment was made to read:

"Every member of any of the bodies mentioned in this section, who receives, or agrees to receive any bribe upon any understanding," etc.

It is argued by defendant that, by the use of the phrase "every member who agrees," the Legislature meant every member who entered into an agreement with another person—that there must have occurred a meeting of the minds of two persons.

[2] Before the amendment of 1905, any member of a common council who offered to receive a bribe was within the statute, and the amendment of the language in the particular noted signifies an intention to change the pre-existing law. In United States v. Bashaw (C. C. A.) 50 F. 749, 754, it was said:

"The very fact that the prior act is amended demonstrates the intent to change the pre-existing law, and the presumption must be that it was intended to change the statute in all the particulars touching which we find a material change in the language of the act."

"Where changes have been introduced by amendment, it is not to be assumed that they were without design; usually an intent to change the law is inferred." In re Segregation of School District No. 58, 34 Idaho, 222, 200 P. 138.

In Rieger v. Harrington, 102 Or. 603, 613, 203 P. 576, 580, it was said:

"By amending that statute, the Legislature demonstrated an intent to change the pre-existing law, and the presumption must be that it was intended to change the meaning of the statute in all the particulars wherein there is a material change in the language of the amended act."

To the same effect are the following authorities: Springfield Co. v. Walton, 95 Mo. App. 526, 69 S. W. 477; Duff v. Karr, 91 Mo. App. 16; Pierce v. County of Solano, 62 Cal. App. 465, 469, 217 P. 545; Shearer v. Flannery, 68 Cal. App. 91, 94, 228 P. 549.

The case of People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 P. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704, was one wherein the defendant was prosecuted under the same statute sought to be applied here. Upon appeal the defendant raised the question of whether the person giving the bribe was an accomplice, whose testimony required corroboration under the then existing law. In passing upon that question, it became necessary for the court to determine what acts were required to constitute the offense of bribery under section 165, Penal Code, and the following language was used:

"The charge against this defendant, as we have seen, is under section 165 of the Penal Code. It is not for asking or soliciting a bribe. It is for 'agreeing' to receive and 'receiving' a bribe. The agreement necessarily carries with it the essential concept of a criminal and corrupt bargain. There can be no agreement without a meeting of minds, and a meeting of minds for this base bargain is declared to be a crime. There is nothing in the law to suggest even that in such a crime the two parties stand in any different position from that occupied by two who agree to fight a duel. In such an agreement the act of the person who contracts to pay the consideration is admittedly base, corrupt, and criminal. Moreover, his conduct is essential to the very existence of the crime of agreeing. How then shall it be said that he is not, within the narrowest or the fullest meaning of the law, an accomplice of the man agreeing to take the bribe? He is an actual participant in the crime, as well as an aider, abettor, advisor, and encourager in its commission, for it is to be remembered that in the case at bar the crime itself is the agreement. An officer may solicit bribes, may ask for bribes, may advertise his willingness to accept bribes. Each one of these acts is a separate, distinct, and recognized crime, but no one of them is the crime of agreeing to take a bribe, which ex vi termini requires the guilty co-operation of another. United States v. Dietrich [C. C.] 126 F. 664."

In United States v. Dietrich, supra, the defendant was indicted for conspiracy under a federal statute. The conduct alleged as constituting conspiracy was an alleged agreement between the defendant, a congressman, and one Fisher, whereby the defendant agreed to receive a bribe from Fisher. The case came up on demurrer to the indictment upon the ground that the co-operation in agreeing to give and receive a bribe was merely the essential co-operation of more than one person required to constitute the crime of bribery by receiving, or agreeing to receive, a bribe, and that the mere plurality of participants necessary to constitute bribery could not convert the case into one of conspiracy. The court held that co-operation of two persons was essential to constitute an agreement to receive or the receiving of the bribe, using the following language:

"Section 1781 of the Revised Statutes * * * makes it an offense against the United States (1) for a member of Congress or any officer or agent of the government to directly or indirectly take, receive, or agree to receive any money, property, * * * (2) for any person to directly or indirectly offer or agree to give, or give, or bestow any like consideration, * * * (3) for any member of Congress to * * * take, receive, or agree to receive. * * * Concert and plurality of agents in such an agreement or transaction are, in a sense, indispensable elements of the substantive offenses, defined in section 1781, of agreeing to receive a bribe and of agreeing to give one. A person cannot agree with himself, receive from himself, or give to himself. The concurrent and several acts of two persons are necessary to the act of agreeing, receiving, or giving. In this respect, agreeing to receive a bribe from another and agreeing to give one are unlike soliciting or offering a bribe, because the solicitation or offer may be the act of a single person and may occur without any concurrent act of another."

There is further authority to the same effect in the case of People v. Squires, 99 Cal. 327, 33 P. 1092, involving a conviction of the crime of receiving a bribe as a juror. The conviction was founded upon section 93 of the Penal Code, which enacts:

"Every * * * juror * * * who asks, receives, or agrees to receive, any bribe, upon any agreement or understanding that his vote, opinion, or decision * * * shall be influenced thereby, is punishable," etc.

The court said:

"Section 93 of the Penal Code denounces as liable to punishment those who ask for a bribe. To complete the offense it is not necessary that the party approached shall consent to give it. Unless he does so there could be no agreement or understanding. In such case it cannot be charged that such agreement or understanding exists, but only that the accused was ready to agree or enter into an understanding."

The Attorney General relies upon the case of People v. Fitzpatrick (Cal. App.) 247 P. 601, and declares it is in conflict with the case of People v. Coffey, supra, and with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal in the instant case. In People v. Fitzpatrick the court announced that that decision was not inconsistent with People v. Coffey, nor with several other California cases presented upon the appeal, and we are in accord with this statement. In the Fitzpatrick Case the court was passing upon an instruction proposed by defendant as applicable to the testimony of a feigned accomplice. The situation thus arising is recognized and the rule of the Fitzpatrick Case is acknowledged in People v. Coffey, at page 448 (119 P. 907) of that decision, where it is said:

"In the charge against this defendant of 'agreeing to receive a bribe' and 'receiving a bribe,' each element, the agreeing and the receiving, necessarily contemplates the criminally corrupt co-operation of another (eliminating from consideration, of course, the feigned accomplice). To this proposition the authorities are so numerous and so uniform that one is rather embarrassed by the wealth than by the dearth of them."

It is apparent from a reading of the two cases under discussion that they are not in conflict, but that, on the contrary, the Fitzpatrick Case falls within the exception recognized in People v. Coffey, which is not true of the instant case.

Before concluding the discussion of the question, we feel impelled to say that we are impressed with the reasons of public policy urged by the Attorney General in support of an affirmance of this judgment, and because of the importance of those considerations we granted the petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal. We regret, however, that we are without power to read into the statute language which would prevent the solicitation of bribes by members of the common council with impunity, since the section of the Penal Code relating to this group of public officers fails to include the asking or soliciting of bribes by them.

The argument made by the petitioner herein should be convincing if addressed to the Legislature, the department of the government with power to change the present unwholesome situation.

The judgment is reversed.

HARBOR CITY CANNING CO. v. DANT et al. (S. F. 11459.) ★

Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 19, 1927.

1. Sales ⇨181(12)—Evidence held sufficient to support finding that peach pulp tendered under sale contract was merchantable product.

Evidence held sufficient to show that peach pulp, tendered defendant by plaintiff under contract for sale, was a sound and merchantable product and was fit for the general and ordinary purposes for which peach pulp is used.

2. Sales ⇨153—Where contract called for 10,000 cases peach pulp, and in case of short pack delivery to be prorated, offer to deliver entire order held good offer of performance, though there was short pack.

Where contract for sale of peach pulp called for 10,000 cases, and further provided that in case of short pack so that seller should be unable to make full delivery, delivery should be prorated, offer to deliver the entire amount called for held a valid offer of performance, though there was short pack, since the provision for prorating was for seller's benefit and in the nature of an option to him, and if he chose he might supply deficit by purchase in the open market and supply the full order.

3. Contracts ⇨172—Contract provision for benefit of one party cannot be taken advantage of by other.

A provision inserted in a contract for the benefit of one party cannot be taken advantage of by the other.

4. Sales ⇨71(5)—Provision in contract for peach pulp sale that in case of short pack delivery might be prorated held for seller's benefit.

Provision in contract for sale of peach pulp that in case there was a short pack by reason of which the seller should be unable to make full delivery, that delivery should be prorated, held for seller's protection and not equally for the benefit of the buyer.

5. Sales ⇨181(11)—Evidence held to support seller's tender of buyer's pro rata share of peach pulp under sale contract.

Evidence held to support seller's allegation that its tender of peach pulp under contract of sale was the pro rata share to which buyer was entitled, under provision that in case of short pack delivery should be prorated.

6. Partnership ⇨219(3)—Where partners were joined with partnership as defendants, judgment against them as individuals held valid (Civ. Code, § 2442; Code Civ. Proc. § 388).

Where the individual partners were joined with a partnership in an action to recover the price of peach pulp sold to the partnership, a judgment against them in their individual capacities, based upon their statutory joint liability under Civ. Code, § 2442, and Code Civ. Proc. § 388, held valid.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the Harbor City Canning Company against Charles E. Dant and others as surviving partners of the firm of Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax, Charles E. Dant and others individually, John L. Reed, as administrator of the estate of John R. Hanify, and Eleanor Louise Christenson, as executrix of the last will of E. A. Christenson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan and Geo. J. Presley, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Haven, Athearn, Chandler & Farmer and Philip H. Angell, all of San Francisco, and L. B. Binford and Adams, Adams & Binford, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment against them for damages for breach of a contract for the purchase by them of a large quantity of peach pulp. About many of the facts there is no dispute. On July 9, 1919, the copartnership of Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax ordered in writing from plaintiff 10,000 cases of peach pulp, described in the contract as "6/10's" (which was elucidated by the testimony as signifying 6 No. 10 cans to each case) at a price of $7.50 per dozen cans. It was also provided that the peach pulp should be of standard quality 1919 season's pack, and that, in case of short pack or government commandeering, requisition or reservation, delivery should be prorated. The goods were to be shipped as soon as practicable after packing. Plaintiff started to manufacture the pulp with the opening of the peach season in August. On August 19th plaintiff shipped to defendant two cars of peach pulp consisting of 3,684 cases and drew drafts for the amount of the purchase price. On August 21st defendant partnership wrote to plaintiff stating that the drafts had been received and would not be taken up until samples were received. On August 26th defendant partnership telegraphed plaintiff that their buyer had refused to accept the peach pulp unless uniformity of color was guaranteed, and refused to take up plaintiff's drafts until this matter was adjusted satisfactorily. On September 26th, when the manufacture of peach pulp had been practically completed, defendant partnership rejected the product on the ground that the same was not standard quality 1919 season's pack peach pulp and was not merchantable. The cases of pulp which plaintiff had tendered defendant were then sold by plaintiff for the account of defendant, and in this action plaintiff sought damages.

Defendants' answer alleged that the peach pulp contained improper materials, was unmerchantable; that it was not made of yellow, freestone peaches, as stated on the labels attached to the cans. There was also set up a defense relating to the number of cases tendered under the contract, and consideration will be given to this matter hereinafter.

As to the issues framed regarding the soundness and merchantability of the product and its conformity to the requirements of the contract, the trial court found that: Between the 19th day of August, 1919, and the 2d day of October, 1919, plaintiff offered to perform its contract in accordance with the terms thereof, and between said dates plaintiff offered for delivery and tendered to defendant 8,727 cases of standard quality peach pulp 1919 season's pack, and offered to deliver to defendants the balance of said peach pulp as provided for under the terms of said contract, and said defendants, between the dates named refused to accept delivery of said peach pulp or any part thereof, and on the 26th day of September, 1919, said defendant copartnership, without right, repudiated said contract and refused to accept delivery of and/or pay for said peach pulp, or any thereof, in accordance with the terms of the contract, and so notified plaintiff. Said refusal to accept or to pay for said peach pulp was contrary to the terms of said contract and was without right or just or other lawful excuse. That the peach pulp manufactured for said copartnership and offered for delivery and tendered by plaintiff to said copartnership, as aforesaid, was standard quality 1919 season's pack peach pulp, and said peach pulp was in all respects in compliance with the terms of said contract. Said peach pulp was a sound and merchantable product and was fit for the general and ordinary purposes for which peach pulp is used.

[1] These findings are vigorously attacked by the defendants and appellants, who contend that the evidence does not justify the conclusion reached by the trial court. With this contention we are unable to agree. It is true the defendants produced many credible witnesses whose testimony was in conflict with the findings quoted; but their testimony can be of no force and effect upon appeal where the trial court has rejected it in favor of testimony offered for the plaintiff which is in accord with the findings. Of the latter class is the testimony of the witness Miller, a graduate chemist, technical director of the United States Food Health Service at Washington for years, and who was, at the time he examined the peach pulp in controversy, a director of the National Cannery Association. His qualifications as an expert were admitted by defendants. It will serve no useful purpose to set forth his testimony here, but the substance of it was that he found the peach pulp "color normal, gravity good," "good quality without anything objectionable about them; that it was standard quality peach pulp of the 1919 peach pack." Supporting the testimony of the witness Miller, we find the testimony of the witness Duffy, a graduate of the University of California in pharmaceutical chemistry and occupying the position of state food and drug inspector for the state board of health. He made an examination of 24 cans taken from different portions of the lot tendered to defendants and found the product merchantable and of standard quality. The director of the state food and drug laboratory an associate professor of nutrition at the University of California testified that he examined samples of the peach pulp and found that it was "very easily standard" quality; that it contained a very small percentage of pits—five one-hundredths of 1 per cent. and only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent. of sand. There is other testimony in the record to the same effect, and it answers appellants' objection to the findings of the trial court.

The second point urged upon the appeal to the effect that no contract was entered into between the parties because there was no meeting of the minds as to the subject-matter thereof has been abandoned by appellants and conceded by them in their closing brief to be without merit.

[2] The third point urged is that there was an excessive tender by plaintiff, and this brings us to a reconsideration of the original contract, pleadings and evidence. The contract called for 10,000 cases of peach pulp, and it was further provided:

"In case of short pack or government commandeering, requisition or reservation, by reason of which seller is unable to make full delivery of any of the goods specified, delivery shall be prorated."

The tender made by plaintiff was of 8,727 cases, and in its complaint it justifies this delivery by the allegation:

"That by reason of the shortage of pack of the peach pulp and of the peach crop in southern California in the year 1919, plaintiff was unable to make full delivery of said 10,000 cases of said peach pulp, and that by reason thereof plaintiff was obliged to prorate its said pack of peach pulp for said season, and that under such proration the proportion of the 10,000 cases agreed to be sold by the plaintiff to and purchased by the said copartnership * * * was 8727 cases."

In accordance with this allegation, the trial court found that there was a short pack in the year 1919 and that plaintiff prorated its pack and offered to deliver to defendant copartnership their pro rata share of said pack, to wit, 8,727 cases of peach pulp. It was further found in agreement with the correspondence between the parties appearing in the record that the plaintiff also offered to deliver to defendant the entire amount of peach pulp provided for in the contract prior to the rejection thereof by defendant copartnership. It is further found that the only ground of rejection specified by defendant was that the product was not standard quality 1919 season's pack.

[3, 4] Appellants are contending here that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the finding that 8,727 cases was the pro rata share of defendants of the short pack. Before considering this contention, it seems pertinent to observe that it is clear from the record and from the finding that plaintiff did offer to deliver the entire amount called for by the contract, which offer was rejected by defendant copartnership, which declined to accept delivery of any amount of the product. It would seem that this was a valid offer of performance under the contract upon the theory that the provision for prorating under certain conditions was one for the benefit of the seller and in the nature of an option to him, and, therefore, if he chose, he might supply the deficit in his own pack by purchase in the open market and comply with the terms of the contract. It was held in the case of Douglas Fir Exploitation, etc., Co. v. Comyn (C. C. A.) 279 F. 203, 207, that a provision inserted in a contract for the benefit of one party cannot be taken advantage of by another, and it was suggested that one of the important considerations in determining for whose benefit a provision is inserted in a contract is, for whose protection was the provision put in the contract. Appellants would have us assume that the condition was inserted in the contract for their benefit as well as for the benefit of the seller. This does not seem logical when we consider the circumstances under which the option would arise. If there was a short crop or a short pack in the state, obviously prices would rise, and it would be for the benefit of the seller to be relieved of a part of the delivery and to the detriment of the buyer.

[5] However, it is unnecessary for us to found our conclusion upon this suggested interpretation of the clause in the contract permitting prorating, for we think the findings of the trial court find some support in the evidence. The trial occurred years after 1919, and the only witness who testified about the amount of the pack in 1919 stated that he did not know, exactly, the amount. At one place in the record he said it was around 9,000 cases, but he could not say exactly. Later he testified that it was less than 9,500. His testimony at a former trial was read into the record by defendants, from which it appeared that in answer to the question as to whether the pack was not 10,000 cases he had replied that he could not say exactly, because he had nothing to do with the office. The records of the cannery had been lost, and it is apparent from the record that the witness was testifying from a hazy, general knowledge and a cloudy recollection only. It appeared that plaintiff was also under contract with a buyer other than defendant to sell 3,000 cases of peach pulp, and plaintiff's witness Misuraca, who prepared the peach pulp, testified positively that the amount of the pack was prorated among the persons who had contracted to purchase it.

Appellants have shifted their position upon this question, which accounts, somewhat, for the unsatisfactory state of the record. In their pleadings and at the trial defendants took the position that plaintiff should have tendered 10,000 cases, and bent their efforts to proving this. Consequently plaintiff's efforts were to bring forward every item and circumstance which would tend to prove the minimum pack and sustain the tender of less than 10,000. Now, on appeal, defendants shift their position and insist the tender was too large, rather than too small. This position was not taken at the trial, and plaintiff had no opportunity to bring forth evidence which would tend to meet this position. Plaintiff alleged that its tender was the pro rata share of defendants, and its witness so testified, and we think, under all the circumstances of this case, the finding to that effect is supported by the evidence.

[6] The only other question involved upon the appeal is as to the form of the judgment. The action was brought against defendants Dant, Tyson, and Fleishhacker, as surviving partners of the firm of Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax, and against the representatives of two deceased partners, and defendants Dant, Tyson, and Fleishhacker individually. As to the personal representatives, the action was dismissed because of irregularity in proving the claim against the estates. The judgment was given against Dant, Tyson, and Fleishhacker as surviving partners, and against Dant, Tyson and Fleishhacker individually. Appellants object to the judgment against them individually.

The Civil Code (section 2442) provides:

"Every general partner is liable to third persons for all the obligations of the partnership, jointly with his copartners."

The Code of Civil Procedure (section 388) provides:

"When two or more persons, associated in any business, transact such business under a common name, whether it comprises the names of such persons or not, the associates may be sued by such common name, the summons in such cases being served on one or more of the associates; and the judgment in the action shall bind the joint property of all the associates, and the individual property of the party or parties served with process, in the same manner as if all had been named defendants and had been sued upon their joint liability."

In the case at bar the individual parties named in the judgment were served with process so as to bind their individual property, and all appeared in the action.

In Maclay Co. v. Meads, 14 Cal. App. 363, 112 P. 195, 113 P. 364, the plaintiff sued the individuals, describing them as partners. The partnership was not named as a defendant. The lower court rendered judgment against the partnership as well as against the individuals composing the partnership. The appellate court reversed the judgment against the partnership, but upheld the judgment as to the individuals composing the partnership. The court said:

"But where, as here, the action is against the members of the partnership in their individual character, and not against the partnership by its partnership name, the effect of service of process or summons on one member, or on all the members, is not to summon the partnership but only the member or members upon whom such service is had, and, in such case, in order to bind all the members of the firm by any judgment which may be obtained in the action, service of summons must be made on all. Of course, where the action is against the partnership, then, by the terms of section 388, supra, service of summons on one or more of the members of the partnership is sufficient, and thereby the judgment in the action is binding not only upon 'the joint property of all the associates,' but also upon 'the individual property of the party or parties served with process.'"

The appellants rely upon the case of Redwood City Salt Co. v. Whitney, 153 Cal. 421, 95 P. 885, in which the plaintiff sought to hold the partnership and one of the members composing the partnership as joint debtors. The evidence showed the debt was created by the partnership, and the court held that since the evidence showed the individual partner was not jointly liable with the partnership, no individual judgment could be had against him. However, the court said that he was jointly liable on the partnership debts, but was not sued with his copartners on this joint liability. The language of the court in the Whitney Case is not in conflict with the action of the trial court here, as will appear from the following extract from the opinion:

"But there was no liability on the part of defendant Arthur L. Whitney except such as the law imposed upon him as a member of the partnership for a partnership debt."

It appears, therefore, that under the case cited by appellant, as well as the other authorities cited herein, the rule is that if partners are joined with the partnership as defendants, a judgment against them in their individual capacities is valid, based upon their statutory joint liability.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DEACON v. DEACON et al. (L. A. 9561.)

Supreme Court of California. May 2, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 348(1)—Notice of appeal on date proceedings for new trial were dismissed held "timely," where no notice of entry of judgment was served (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 953a).

Where between dates of entry of judgment on July 9, and September 27, when notice of appeal was served and filed, motion for new trial was pending, notice of appeal was "timely," within Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, where 60-day period, under section 660, within which motion for new trial must be passed, had not expired, because notice of entry of judgment had not been given.

2. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 801(1)—Motion to dismiss appeal from alleged consent judgment is addressed to Supreme Court's discretion.

Motion to dismiss appeal, taken from alleged consent judgment because right of appeal was waived, is addressed to the discretion of the Supreme Court, which discretion may be exercised in favor of hearing appeal on merits.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Clara E. Deacon against Daniel A. Deacon and A. T. Roark, who filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Deacon appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Glen H. Munkelt, of San Diego, for appellant.

Sloane & Sloane, of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. [1] The respondents have move this court to dismiss the appeal of the defendant Deacon upon two grounds: First. That the appeal was not taken within the period prescribed by law. Second. That the judgment from which the appeal has been taken was one entered by stipulation of the parties and was a consent judgment, and that for that reason the appellant has waived his right of appeal. The facts as shown by the record upon which the respondents predicate their first ground of the motion; namely, that the appeal was taken too late, are these: The action is one prosecuted by the plaintiff for an accounting as to the proceeds and revenue derived from certain real property known as the Ivy Apartments, and for the partition of said real estate and other property among the parties to this action according to their respective rights and interests therein. This action is the aftermath of a certain action for divorce between the plaintiff herein and the defendant D. A. Deacon, in the course of which a certain agreement in writing was entered into effecting a property settlement between the parties to said divorce proceeding, and which was carried into the decree therein. The complaint in the present action was filed on June 11, 1925. The answer of the defendant D. A. Deacon thereto was filed on June 22, 1925. A. T. Roark, who was sued and served with process under a fictitious name, appeared and filed an answer and cross-complaint on July 3, 1925, and to which the defendant D. A. Deacon filed his answer on July 18, 1925. The cause came on for trial upon the issues thus made up, whereupon the trial court on March 9, 1926, filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and also filed its interlocutory decree in conformity therewith, decreeing an accounting and partition, providing for the appointment of a referee to take such accounting and report upon the same and upon such partition to the court. Thereafter and on April 6, 1926, the defendant D. A. Deacon gave and filed his notice of intention to move for a new trial, which motion, however, was never brought on for hearing. The referee filed his report on June 21, 1926, whereupon the plaintiff and the cross-defendant Roark gave notice of a hearing thereon and of a motion for the adoption thereof and for the entry of a final judgment in accordance therewith, which motion came on for hearing before the court on June 28, 1926, whereupon the trial court made and entered its final decree of accounting and partition, wherein it was recited that the report of the referee as modified and amended by the court had been approved. Said final decree was filed on June 29, 1926. No notice of entry of such judgment was given, but on July 9, 1926, the defendant D. A. Deacon served and filed another notice of intention to move for a new trial. A hearing thereon was had on September 27, 1926, whereupon counsel for the plaintiff and intervener Roark objected to further proceedings thereon and moved for a dismissal thereof upon the ground that the notice of motion was not made or the matter brought to a hearing within the time prescribed by law. The trial court upon such hearing made and entered its order dismissing the proceedings for a new trial, said order being dated September 27, 1926. The notice of appeal herein was served and filed by the defendant D. A. Deacon on September 27, 1926. It would appear from the foregoing state of the record that the first ground upon which the respondents move to dismiss this appeal is without merit, for the reason that between the date of the entry of the judgment herein; namely, June 29, 1926, and the date of taking the appeal, there was pending a proceeding on motion for a new trial pursuant to the defendant's notice of intention to move for a new trial, which was filed on July 9, 1926, and which was apparently dismissed by the trial court on September 27, 1926. The time within which the motion for new trial must be passed upon would not have expired within the 60-day period provided by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since no notice of the entry of judgment had been given as provided in said section, and the notice of appeal herein would therefore have been in time, since the same was served and filed within the period after the determination thereof, provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] As to the second ground upon which the respondents predicate their motion to dismiss this appeal, to wit, that the judgment was a consent judgment, from which no appeal would lie, the record discloses the following additional facts: The judgment does not upon its face purport to be a consent judgment. The respondents, in support of their motion upon that ground, present certain affidavits tending to show that the final judgment herein was agreed to in a conference between the attorneys of record of the respective parties and the judge of the trial court had at the time of the hearing upon the report of the referee, with the details of which all of the parties to the action and their counsel appeared to have been dissatisfied. Upon such a conference, the trial court undertook to amend and modify the referee's report in order to meet the objections urged thereto, and, having done so, the final judgment herein was accordingly prepared and filed. It is upon these facts that the respondents predicate their claim that the judgment is a consent judgment. On the other hand, the appellant strenuously opposes this view with his own affidavit to the effect that he had instructed his counsel not to agree to any consent or compromise judgment, and that whatever they had done in that regard had been done without his knowledge and in violation of his instructions. The record further discloses that almost immediately after the making and entry of the judgment the appellant discharged his attorneys of record and employed other counsel, through whom he is resisting this motion and is engaged in prosecuting this appeal, in the course of which his substituted counsel have prepared and served the appellant's opening brief, wherein the integrity of said judgment is assailed upon a number of grounds. The determination of the question as to whether the appellant was inju-riously affected by the action of his former counsel, in apparently agreeing to the form of the final judgment, would require an examination of the entire record herein and would involve in a large measure a consideration of the merits of the present appeal; the motion of the respondents upon this latter ground is one which is addressed to the discretion of the court, and we have concluded to exercise this discretion in favor of hearing this appeal upon its merits.

The motion of the respondents to dismiss this appeal upon both grounds is therefore denied.

In re BUESON'S ESTATE. (S. F. 12201.)

Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1927.

1. Divorce ⚡243—Disposition of property by interlocutory decree does not become effective until final divorce decree.

Until entry of final decree of divorce, property rights of parties, in absence of property settlement, remain as before, and disposition of property under interlocutory decree remains ineffective.

2. Executors and administrators ⚡188—Right of separated wife to family allowance from husband's estate can be defeated only by showing she lost right to support by her conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 1469).

Before court may deny to wife assignment of husband's estate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1469, it must appear that she has ceased to constitute member of family of husband by virtue of separation or interlocutory decree of divorce and that she had lost right to seek support and maintenance from him by reason of conduct, as by abandonment or voluntary surrender of right to support.

3. Divorce ⚡249(2)—Executors and administrators ⚡185—Husband and wife, on entry of interlocutory divorce decree, may make property settlement effective immediately (Civ. Code, § 158).

When parties to divorce proceedings execute property settlement in connection with entry of interlocutory decree, they are not required to postpone operation of settlement until final decree, but may provide settlement to take effect immediately, property settlement between husband and wife whereby wife relinquishes share in husband's estate and right to family allowance being valid under Civ. Code, § 158.

4. Divorce ⚡249(2)—On entering interlocutory decree, court had jurisdiction to determine validity of spouses' property settlement.

Court, on entry of interlocutory decree of divorce, had jurisdiction to determine validity of property settlement whereby wife surrendered right to property allowance from husband's estate.

5. Executors and administrators ⚡185—Having surrendered right in husband's estate by property settlement, wife could recover property allowance only by showing resumption of marital relations.

Where wife, on entry of interlocutory decree of divorce, surrendered right in husband's estate by property settlement effective on date of execution, right to family allowance could be established on husband's death only by showing reconciliation and resumption of marital relations justifying conclusion that parties agreed orally to abrogate property settlement.

6. Executors and administrators ⚡185—Court could not presume property settlement on interlocutory divorce decree was revoked unless evidence of resumption of marital relations indicated such intent.

Where wife, by property settlement on interlocutory decree of divorce, surrendered rights in husband's estate, revocation of property settlement could not be presumed on husband's death, unless evidence of resumption of marital relations was sufficient to satisfy court that parties intended revocation.

7. Domicile ⚡10—Matrimonial domicile was not established by showing husband visited at wife's residence, spent night with her, and made repairs on premises.

That husband spent night with wife at her residence and occasionally ate meals with her there and made minor repairs about premises did not establish residence as matrimonial domicile.

8. Executors and administrators ⚡185—Occasional visits by husband, without establishing matrimonial domicile or joint economic unit with wife held insufficient to show resumption of marital relations revoking spouses' property settlement (Code Civ. Proc. § 1469).

In proceedings by wife under Code Civ. Where proceedings by wife to have estate of husband assigned to her under Code Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Proceeding by Eleanor Boeson against the State of California, for the assignment to her of the estate of Robert Boeson, deceased, in which Fin Lund, Consul of Denmark, intervened. From an order denying the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Byron C. Parker and Thomas Wicks, both of San Francisco (A. M. More, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Beale Browne, of San Francisco, for the State.

Eric Lyders, of San Francisco, for intervenor respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Appellant prosecutes this appeal from an order made by the court below denying her petition to have the estate of Robert Boeson, deceased, assigned to her, as his widow, under the provisions of section 1469, Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes a transfer of estates of less than $2,500 to the widow of a decedent upon the return of the inventory. The rights of a minor are in no wise involved in this proceeding. The court's action denying the petition was based on the proposition that appellant, although the widow of decedent, had deprived herself of the right to receive any portion of his estate by the terms of a property settlement previously entered into by them. Appellant admits the execution of said property settlement, and does not dispute the interpretation placed upon it by respondents and the court below, nor does she question its validity. She contends, however, that said settlement, which was executed by decedent and herself on the day she procured an interlocutory decree of divorce from him, was not in effect at the time of his death, but had been revoked by a subsequent reconciliation of matrimonial differences and an oral understanding that it should not longer be determinative of their property rights as husband and wife. Respondents deny the fact of subsequent reconciliation and resumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations.

The consul of Denmark appeared at the hearing on the petition to set aside the estate to appellant, and informed the court that efforts were being made to ascertain if decedent left any heirs residing in Denmark, the supposed country of his nativity. Although he had filed no written petition or pleading in the case, and admitted that he was not representing any particular heirs of decedent, said consul was permitted, over the objections of appellant, to oppose her claim and to introduce evidence at the hearing. This action is assigned as error.

The decedent and appellant intermarried on October 30, 1920, and on May 31, 1921, appellant was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from her husband on the ground of his extreme cruelty. The decree was not filed and recorded until August 3, 1921, almost two months after it had been granted. The property settlement was executed on the day the divorce was granted. The agreement contained certain preliminary recitals to the effect that unhappy differences had arisen between the parties and they had been living separate and apart and did not contemplate living together again, and that there was no community property save and except certain household furniture of the value of $50. The appellant, "in consideration of the sum of $10 in hand paid by the party of the second part [decedent]," receipt of which was acknowledged, released decedent from all obligation to support and maintain her from the date of the agreement "until the end of the world," and agreed that, in the event of filing an action for divorce, she would not seek or accept temporary or permanent alimony. The provision regarding the rights of each party to the agreement in the estate of the other is contained in the following paragraph:

"That said parties herein each hereby waive any and all right in the estate of the other and forever quitclaim any and all right to share in the same of the other by the laws of succession, and that each of said parties hereby waive any and all rights of homestead in the real property of the other, and that said parties herein waive any and all right to the estate or any interest in the estate of the other for a family allowance or by way of inheritance, and that from the date of this agreement to the end of the world said waiver of the other in the estate of said other party shall from this date be effective, and they shall have all the rights of single persons and maintain the said relationship of such toward each other."

The furniture, valued at $50 and declared to constitute the only community property of the marriage, was assigned to appellant by said property agreement. The interlocutory decree of divorce contained a provision approving and confirming said property settlement. Neither party to the divorce proceeding applied for a final decree. The husband died intestate on April 10, 1923, almost two years after the interlocutory decree had been granted. Letters of administration were thereafter issued to the public administrator. In explanation of her failure to apply for letters of administration appellant testified that she relied on her attorney to protect her in this as in all other matters.

[1-3] The obtaining and entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce does not sever the marital relation, and any disposition of property made thereby becomes effective only upon the entry of the final decree. Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 P. 320; Estate of Seiler, 164 Cal. 181, 128 P. 334, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1093. Until the entry of the final decree, the property rights of the parties, in the absence of a property settlement between them, remain as they were before the entry of the interlocutory decree, and the death of the husband does not cut off the right of the wife to succeed to the husband's estate as his heir. Nor does the interlocutory decree of itself deprive the wife of the right to require the transfer to her of an estate of less than $2,500 under the provisions of section 1469, Code of Civil Procedure, nor limit her privilege to claim the benefit of rights conferred by other Code sections pertaining to family allowance. Estate of Breitter, 69 Cal. App. 424, 231 P. 351; Estate of Gould, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146. Before a court may legally deny her an assignment by way of family allowance, it must appear that she not only has ceased to constitute a member of the family of the husband by virtue of a separation or interlocutory decree of divorce, but also that she has lost the right to seek support and maintenance from him by reason of her conduct, such, for example, as her abandonment of him, or her voluntary surrender of the right of support. Estate of Miller, 158 Cal. 420, 111 P. 255; In re Noah, 73 Cal. 583, 15 P. 287, 2 Am. St. Rep. 829; Estate of Yoell, 164 Cal. 540, 129 P. 999; Estate of Bose, 158 Cal. 428, 111 P. 258. Property settlements between husband and wife, whereby the wife parts with her right to share in the estate of the husband and relinquishes her right to a family allowance, are recognized as valid and enforceable by courts when founded upon a sufficient consideration and fairly made. Section 158, Civ. Code; In re Davis, 106 Cal. 453, 39 P. 756; Estate of Edelman, 148 Cal. 233, 82 P. 962, 113 Am. St. Rep. 231; Estate of Brix, 181 Cal. 667, 186 P. 135. When the parties to divorce proceedings execute such settlements in connection with the entry of the interlocutory decree, they are not required to postpone their operation until the marital tie shall have been severed by the entry of the final decree, but they may provide that they shall become effective upon execution. Gould v. Superior Court, 47 Cal. App. 197, 191 P. 56. In the instant case the parties to the agreement provided that the rights of each to inherit from the other or to claim the estate of the other by virtue of the sections of the Code providing for a family allowance should be terminated, and that the agreement of termination should become immediately effective, irrespective of whether or not a final decree of divorce should be entered.

[4] Appellant does not attack the validity of the property settlement. The divorce court possessed jurisdiction to determine the validity of said settlement, and in the exercise of this jurisdiction it ratified and approved the same. See Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 227 P. 715; Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 509, 39 P. 801; McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 176, 190 P. 460.

Although appellant in her reply brief expressly states that she does not dispute the soundness of the foregoing principles of law, all of which are well settled, she cites the court to Estate of Breitter, 69 Cal. App. 424, 231 P. 351, and insists that that case rules the instant case and impels a decision in her favor. Appellant has misapplied the principle announced in Estate of Breitter to the instant case. It was not there held that a wife who by contract has surrendered the right to receive support from her husband and to claim a family allowance from his estate may, notwithstanding her contract, claim a family allowance. No question of a separation agreement was before the court. The case is authority only for the proposition that a wife who is compelled to live apart from her husband by reason of his dereliction, or is authorized so to do by an interlocutory decree of divorce obtained against him, does not thereby lose her right to a family allowance for the benefit of the family.

[5, 6] It is apparent that the only way in which appellant may succeed, having surrendered by contract the rights she seeks by her action to rehabilitate (no interests of minor children of the marriage being involved), is by establishing a subsequent abrogation of the property settlement by showing a reconciliation and resumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations. Property settlements entered into by the spouses, it is true, should be set aside in cases where the acts, conduct and relations of the parties thereafter are of such a character as to justify the conclusion that they intended and agreed orally to abrogate the same. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 479; Sargent v. Sargent, 106 Cal. 541, 39 P. 931; Jones v. Lamont, 118 Cal. 499, 50 P. 766, 62 Am. St. Rep. 251; Estate of Martin, 166 Cal. 399, 137 P. 2; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168; 2 Schouler, Marriage, Divorce, Separation, and Domestic Relations, p. 1560. Before a court may indulge in a presumption of revocation, however, the evidence offered to establish full resumption of marital relations must be sufficient to satisfy the mind of the court that such was the intent of the parties. Applying this rule to the facts of the instant case, it cannot be said that the court's conclusion that appellant failed to establish her case is not amply supported by the record.

Appellant testified that at the time the interlocutory decree was granted she was residing in a seven-room house which she owned as her separate property; that she continued to reside in said house after the granting of the decree, renting all rooms in the house, except the dining room and kitchen, to tenants; that she and decedent became reconciled about September, 1921; that decedent did not make his home with her because of the crowded conditions of her living quarters, but that he visited her, sometimes as frequently as two or three times a week, upon occasions took her to theaters, ate meals with her at her residence, and occasionally spent the night with her there; that it was the mutual desire of decedent and herself that she should sell her house and that they should then build a cottage at Palo Alto, where she believed her health, which was poor, would improve; that she did not wish to reserve a larger number of the rooms in her house for her own use, so that her husband might live with her, because she believed that the house would sell more readily if most of the rooms were rented; and that decedent offered to contribute to her support, but she refused his offers because she wished him to save as much as possible to be used later in building the house at Palo Alto. It appears that appellant derived an income from giving music lessons and from rentals of her house which was sufficient to meet her needs.

Four witnesses, on behalf of appellant, testified that they had seen decedent about appellant's house, had occasionally observed him eating with appellant, and had seen him hanging pictures and otherwise conducting himself in a manner which would indicate they had resolved their matrimonial differences. Two of these witnesses were friends of appellant, the third was a friend and a music pupil, and the fourth was a niece. One of the friends saw decedent at the house only three times, although she testified that she visited there frequently. The other friend had not seen decedent since October, 1921. The music pupil had ceased to take lessons from appellant in January, 1922, and had not seen decedent since that time. The niece testified that decedent was "peculiar," and that he visited appellant on friendly terms even while the divorce proceedings were pending.

The consul in Denmark, who opposed appellant's application on behalf of unknown heirs in Denmark, introduced two witnesses. George Hildenbrand, from whom decedent rented the housekeeping apartment which he occupied and in which he was found dead, testified that decedent kept his trunk, clothing, and working tools in said apartment and sometimes cooked his meals there. Decedent first went to live at this apartment on May 31, 1921. On November 2, 1921, he left the apartment and went to live at the residence of Peter Miller, who had been his friend for 25 years. Boeson stayed at the Miller home until May 27, 1922, when he returned to Hildenbrand's, where he remained until his dead body was discovered by Hildenbrand, lying upon his bed. Hildenbrand, who was accustomed to see Boeson every day or two, noting his absence, made the investigation which resulted in the discovery above recited. He had probably been dead two days. Hildenbrand testified that decedent had made casual reference to his married life in his conversations with him, and had stated that it had proved unsuccessful. The witness testified that Boeson said to him at the time he first came to his apartment that in a money transaction with his wife she had wrongfully obtained $800 of his money, and that he was afraid to live with her; that he "was tired of that kind of business"; that he would never again marry; and that he was "through" with appellant. This witness further testified that appellant said to him after Boeson's death that she could not live with Boeson because of his habitual failure to observe certain essential rules with respect to his person. The witness did not know appellant's place of residence and had never seen her until after Boeson's burial. Appellant had no knowledge of his death until several days after he was buried. Witness Miller testified that he had known Boeson, the decedent, for more than 25 years, and that decedent resided with him from November, 1921, to May, 1922, and during that time he did not speak to the witness concerning his wife. The latter did not call to see Boeson at any time within the knowledge of the witness.

[7, 8] Giving the fullest effect possible to the facts testified to by appellant, it appears from her testimony that she and decedent had not established a matrimonial domicile at the residence owned by her or at any other place. The fact that decedent on occasions spent the night with appellant at said residence and upon occasions ate meals with her there and assisted her in making minor repairs about the premises does not establish said residence as the matrimonial domicile of the parties. In the course of her testimony, appellant stated that decedent went to "his house" and to "his place," thus showing that she did not regard her residence as a matrimonial domicile. While the lack of a fixed joint domicile will not under all circumstances prevent the existence of a state of marital cohabitation, it is a factor to be considered. Appellant also stated that she refused decedent's offer to contribute to her support. She gave as a reason for the refusal a desire that his earnings be saved to be used in building a home at Palo Alto.

The fact remains, however, that they did not constitute a joint economic unit, such as is usual where two persons are living together as husband and wife. The court below, in denying appellant's application, may well have considered the circumstance that, although the intention to resume marital relations, according to appellant's testimony, was formed in September, 1921, a joint matrimonial domicile had not been established in April, 1923, more than a year and a half later, when Boeson died. Appellant also stated that decedent visited her on the Saturday night before his death, and that she was not informed of his death until the following Wednesday. By the testimony of another witness, the day of decedent's demise was fixed as Sunday, April 10, 1923. Although appellant testified that she had decedent's telephone number and that they had planned a trip to Palo Alto for the Sunday on which he died, it does not appear that she had made any effort to locate him up to the following Wednesday, when she was informed of his death. Such seeming indifference on her part does not add strength to her case. A wife's interest in a husband would at least prompt some inquiry as to the reason for his failure to meet an important appointment. Unquestionably her marital interest should become aroused before the expiration of three days with no word of explanation as to the cause of her husband's absence.

Appellant also testified that decedent asked her whether it was necessary for them to be remarried, and she replied, "No; that was not necessary," because "I thought this way, if he didn't do what he said he was, all I would have to do was to go back and get the final." Such a statement evidences an unstable mental attitude which is wholly inconsistent with the legal requirement that matrimonial relations must actually in good faith have been resumed.

[9] A determination of the merits of appellant's contention that the consul of Denmark did not have a sufficient interest in the matter to introduce witnesses in opposition to appellant's claim is not necessary to the decision of this case. Said consul filed no written petition or pleading in the case. At the hearing he stated that he did not represent any known heirs of decedent residing in Denmark, the supposed country of his nativity, but efforts were being made to ascertain the location of heirs of decedent residing in said country, and that he asserted the right to appear on behalf of such unknown and undiscovered heirs. The court thereupon permitted said consul to offer witnesses Hildenbrand and Miller. The question whether appellant was entitled to have decedent's estate set aside to her as his surviving widow was put in issue by appropriate allegations in her petition, which were controverted by averments in the answer of respondent state of California denying that decedent left surviving him a wife entitled to his estate under the provisions of section 1469, Code of Civil Procedure. If all evidence offered by the consul of Denmark had been excluded, and only evidence introduced by appellant to substantiate her claim remained to be considered, it would be insufficient to sustain a judgment in her favor. Since the evidence offered by the consul cannot affect the decision, any error in its admission was without prejudice to appellant. We are inclined to the view, however, that it was not error to permit said consul to oppose appellant. By virtue of his office he is charged with the duty of protecting in this country the rights of subjects of Denmark, and he is acting within the scope of his duties when he endeavors to locate in Denmark persons who are heirs of decedents dying in this country. If, before said heirs have been located and before such a period of time has elapsed as to render it highly improbable that heirs will ever be found, proceedings are initiated which may jeopardize their rights, we believe that it is sound practice to afford the consul an opportunity to fully protect them. Our treaty with the Kingdom of Denmark, to say nothing of the comity that exists between nations, would justify such a course.

[10] Appellant offered an undated advertisement taken from a San Francisco newspaper, wherein, it is claimed, decedent gave his wife's place of residence as his place of residence. It was contended that the advertisement was caused to be published by decedent at a time subsequent to the granting and entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce and after the execution of the property settlement, and was material as a fact showing resumption of marital relations. The witnesses who were called to fix the date of publication as being after rather than prior to the signing of the property settlement were rather uncertain as to the time of publication. Besides, the best and most satisfactory evidence as to the actual date of the publication of the advertisement was obtainable, and no effort was made to furnish it. The entire newspaper containing the advertisement was not offered, but merely an undated, detached clipping. We think the ruling was correct, and at any rate its evidentiary value, even though appellant's contention be correct, was not sufficient to change the court's conclusion on the merits of the case.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1927.

1. Usury ⚡142(3)—Plaintiff would not be awarded judgment declaring forfeiture of principal of usurious contract without averment thereof, even if entitled thereto.

On complaint praying that sale under a usurious trust deed be enjoined until maturity of the loan, and not averring forfeiture of the principal, the plaintiff would not be awarded judgment declaring forfeiture, even if entitled thereto.

2. Usury ⚡76—Usurious contract is void only as to interest and not as to principal debt (Usury Law, § 2).

Usurious contract is not altogether void, but only the portion relating to interest is void under the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii, § 2), providing that debt cannot be declared due until the full contract period elapses.

3. Usury ⚡76—Usurious broker's fee was severable from principal loaned, though both were contained in same note (Usury Law).

On note in principal amount representing the sum of usurious broker's fee and the amount actually loaned, the interest was clearly severable from the principal, notwithstanding they were contained in the same instrument, under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), declaring void only obligation to pay interest.

4. Usury ⚡149(1)—Provisions declaring usury misdemeanor relate only to interest, not principal (Usury Law).

Provisions of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), declaring the taking of usury a misdemeanor, relate only to interest, and bear no relation to the loan or repayment of the principal sum.

5. Usury ⚡49—Interest cannot be compounded, in absence of express stipulation, though rate within legal limit (Usury Law).

Compounding of interest, if not paid at time provided for, cannot be allowed, although the limit of the rate of interest is maintained at 12 per cent. per annum, under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), providing that interest shall not be compounded, in absence of express written agreement therefor.

6. Usury ⚡42—Maximum lawful rate under Usury Law is 12 per cent. per annum for full period of loan (Usury Law).

Maximum rate allowed for loans coming under the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), is at rate of 12 per cent. per annum for the full period of the loan.

7. Usury ⚡49—Interest may be compounded without violating usury law only when maximum rate is not thereby exceeded (Usury Law).

Interest on loans coming under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) may be compounded without violating the law only when maximum rate of 12 per cent. per annum for full period of the loan is not thereby exceeded.

8. Usury ⚡55—Commissions and bonuses charged by lender when spread over loan period, together with interest, must not exceed 12 per cent. per annum (Usury Law).

Commissions and bonuses charged by lender on loans coming under the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) must, when added to the interest specified and spread over the whole period of forbearance, be kept within legal limit of rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

9. Usury ⚡42—Loan bearing maximum rate may not provide for interest on delinquent installments (Usury Law).

A loan coming within the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), and bearing maximum rate of interest, may not lawfully provide for interest on any unpaid installment when due.

10. Usury ⚡42—Agreement to pay interest on unpaid installment of loan bearing maximum rate may be made after maturity for new consideration.

Agreement to pay interest on an unpaid installment of loan providing for interest at maximum lawful rate may lawfully be made after the maturity of the installment, and on a new consideration.

11. Usury ⚡45—At maximum rate, no interest may be collected in advance (Usury Law).

At the maximum rate of interest under the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), no interest may be lawfully collected in advance.

12. Usury ⚡45—In testing for usury, "principal" is amount of loan, less interest or commission deducted in advance.

In testing a transaction for usury, the principal sum loaned will be held to be the amount of the loan, less interest or commission deducted in advance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Principal.]

13. Usury ⚡42—Loan contract providing for maximum rate, payable periodically with acceleration clause, is valid within Usury Law, if installments do not bear interest (Usury Law).

A loan contract, providing for the maximum rate of interest payable at end of any particular period such as monthly, during the full period of forbearance, and containing an acceleration clause for default of installment payment, is valid, within the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), provided installments falling due be without accruing interest thereon, except upon a new contract and a new consideration.

14. Usury ⚡142(1)—Debtor need not make tender in suit for forfeiture of interest and of right to declare usurious loan due before maturity.

In debtor's suit, praying for forfeiture of interest and of the right to declare usurious loan due until lapse of the full period of time contracted for, the debtor need not make any tender whatever.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 254 P. 956.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Woodruff & Shoemaker, and Laurence W. Bellenson, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

George L. Sanders and B. R. Ware, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Petition for rehearing herein is denied.

The subject of usury presents countless legal questions, a great many of which could not possibly be considered germane to the questions involved in this appeal. Some five sets of amici curiæ, however, have filed briefs and have suggested many questions which the profession desires answered. In so far as those questions are deemed pertinent to the issues of the case before us, we have yielded to their importunities, and will undertake to discuss them.

Respondents, and also one set of amici curiæ, assert that in this case respondents should have had a sweeping provision in the judgment declaring not only forfeiture of the right to interest with penalties thereto, but also declaring forfeited and uncollectible the entire principal debt. There is not a semblance of merit in this contention.

[1] In the first place, the amended complaint does not aver such a forfeiture, and in the second place the prayer is only to the effect that said sale under said trust deed be enjoined until the "full maturity of said loan," and "that each defendant be enjoined at all times, until the full period of time said loan was contracted for has elapsed, from selling, or offering for sale, or exposing for sale, or taking any steps whatsoever to sell, or to offer for sale, the said premises or any part or portion thereof, or interest therein."

[2] Moreover, even a casual reading of the statute itself shows that the legislative intent was not to declare the whole contract void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest. The language in this connection is as follows:

"Any agreement or contract of any nature in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be null and void as to any agreement or stipulation therein contained to pay interest and no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained and the debt cannot be declared due until the full period of time it was contracted for has elapsed." St. 1919, p. lxxxiii.

The contention that the principal debt is forfeited is wholly inconsistent with merely deferring the collection of the debt until the full period of time it was contracted for has elapsed. No authority has been cited, and none can be found, holding the principal debt forfeited under such provision of a statute. The authorities cited by counsel, in so far as applicable at all, are in direct opposition to this contention, for in Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267, 272, the court said:

"The plaintiff's promise was to repay to the defendant the sum borrowed in one month, and also to pay him seven per cent. per month on the principal sum for its use. Here the contract between the parties was legal as to the principal sum, but illegal as to the interest. The two things were not inseparable. 'When the transaction is of such a nature that the good part of the consideration can be separated from that which is bad, the courts will make the distinction, for the common law doth divide according to common reason; and having made that void that is against law, lets the rest stand. The general and more liberal principle now is, that when any matter, void even by statute, be mixed up with good matter, which is entirely independent of it, the good part shall stand and the rest be held void.' 2 Kent's Com. 467, and cases cited; De Groot v. Van Duzer, 20 Wend. 412; Leavitt v. Palmer, 3 N. Y. 37 [51 Am. Dec. 333] 1 Parson's Cont. 380."

In Innes v. Goldwater, 30 Cal. App. 101, 105, 157 P. 18, 19, the court again said:

"In the light of this express approval of the principle declared in the case of Jackson v. Shawl, we are constrained to give application to that principle in the case at bar to the extent of holding that the agreements of the plaintiff with the defendant for these several loans and pledges were legal in so far as the principal sum of such loans and the security therefor were concerned, and only illegal as to the interest to be charged, and hence that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the personal property so pledged and made the subject of this action without first tendering and offering to repay to the defendant the amount of his original loans."

[3] Of course, if it were impossible to ascertain how much of the sum contained in the note of $34,000 was principal, and how much thereof was imputable to interest, there might well be made the contention that, inasmuch as some of the transaction was void because prohibited by the statute, all should be so declared, but such is not the fact. The evidence shows without conflict that the item of $1,020 was a 3 per cent. commission, and that the remainder of the sum, to wit, $32,980, was actually delivered to, and received by, the respondents as principal. The interest is therefore clearly severable from the principal. The fact that they are contained in the same instrument is no argument against such a construction, and, as above noted, the statute declares only the obligation to pay interest void, but nowhere assails the integrity of the obligation to repay the principal.

[4, 5] It may also be said in passing that the provisions of the act declaring the taking of usury a misdemeanor relate only to the question of interest, and bear no relation whatever to the loan or repayment of the principal sum. The fact that the commission of 3 per cent. was construed to be interest made it incumbent upon the court to declare the contract usurious and to carry with it the penalties provided in the statute. Respondents' desires have been whetted, and they now want, not only what the complaint did not ask, but what the statute does not allow. They desire not only the amount denominated a commission construed as carrying with it the death penalty to the covenant to pay interest, but also the same penalty for the entire principal debt. Indeed, respondents in one stroke desire to receive $32,980 for which they gave nothing in return, and, in addition, to make a clear profit of twice the amount of interest paid on account of the transaction. The legislative power has not declared such a result, and we must decline to write such a meaning into the statute.

A second set of amici curiæ contend that, as long as the limit of the rate of interest is maintained at 12 per cent. per annum, the compounding of the interest, if not paid at the time provided for, should be allowed. This contention is in the teeth of the statute itself, and cannot be maintained.

[6] A third set of amici curiæ contend that the holding of the court is ambiguous as to the meaning of the maximum rate of interest allowable under the statute. We intended to hold that the maximum rate allowed for loans coming under the act is at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum for the full period of the loan, and that within such limit the parties may freely contract in respect thereto, if done in writing.

[7] This means that interest may be compounded, if the maximum rate is not exceeded.

[8] This means, also, that commissions and bonuses may be charged by the lender, but all such charges must, when added to the interest specified and spread over the whole period of forbearance, be kept within the limit set by the law.

[9, 10] This means, also, as pointed out above, that at the maximum rate compounding of the interest is illegal. It also means that at the maximum rate of interest the contract may not provide for interest upon any unpaid installment when due. Such an agreement may be made, but only after the date of maturity of such installment, and upon a new consideration.

[11, 12] This means, also, that at the maximum rate no interest may be lawfully collected in advance. It means, also, that if, in other cases, interest is deducted in advance from the amount of the loan, in testing the transaction for usury the principal sum loaned will be held to be the amount of the loan, less the interest or commission deducted in advance.

[13] But, notwithstanding all the above, we hold that no legal objection exists to providing in a loan contract that it shall bear the maximum rate of interest, payable at the end of any particular period, such as monthly, quarterly, semiannually, or annually, during the full period of forbearance, provided, of course, as noted above, that such installments as fall due will be without accruing interest thereon, except upon a new contract and new consideration, but the right to declare the whole obligation due for the nonpayment of such installment or installments of interest when due must be held to exist.

It should be stated here that on the conclusions above announced the authorities of the various states are in conflict. No state has a statute identical with our own; hence we have had to rely upon practically an independent construction of the provisions of our statute itself.

[14] Complaint is made, also, of our holding that in the instant case respondents were not required to do equity by tendering the principal sum and such other items, excluding interest, as might be due under the obligation before suit could be maintained in this case. Counsel have overlooked the fact that here the extent of the prayer was to cover two subjects only, to wit, forfeiture of interest and forfeiture of the right to declare the debt due until the full period of time contracted for had elapsed. As to relief on these grounds, it is not necessary to make any tender whatsoever. The law gives a prayer for such relief a special standing, which is not affected by the rule of equity urged upon us. What may or may not be required in that connection in a suit of a different type need not here be discussed.

Complaint is also made of our language as follows:

"* * * That inasmuch as the claim for interest is void, all payments will be referred to the principal and the obligation thus finally extinguished."

The contention is that, when taken in connection with other parts of the opinion, this provides for quadruple interest. There is no merit in the claim. The meaning of the phrase is as though the word "future" or "subsequent" were inserted between the words "all" and "payments." This clearly appears from the context from which the quotation is taken.

Complaint is also made of the failure of the court to declare whether or not lawful interest might be collected upon the advances made by appellants to discharge prior liens on the mortgaged property. No reason exists for especially passing upon this proposition, as the court in stating the account will undoubtedly allow interest, unless there are some special circumstances making such relief inappropriate. The same may be said of the contention that the court should declare whether the deed of trust should be foreclosed by the court or should be foreclosed under the procedure provided for in the deed itself. There appears to be no reason why we should anticipate a situation calling for a decision of this question.

Lastly, it is asserted that in holding the paragraph in section 3 of the act, respecting the exception of loans on corporate, municipal, and other public bonds, unconstitutional, and yet sustaining the other provisions of the act, we are doing violence to the previous holdings of the court, of which Mordecai v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 192 P. 40, is a conspicuous example. Exactly the opposite is true. We are indorsing the doctrine thereof expressed in the words " * * * and if those provisions are reasonably separable from the balance of the act, and the purpose of the act and the intention of the Legislature will be subserved even with those provisions gone, the balance of the act will stand." We held that section 1 covered all loans, secured and unsecured, and the paragraph declared invalid would, but for the illegal exception thereto, have been merely a repetition of the meaning of or provision already contained in said section 1. This clause was declared invalid by reason of the exception.

If this whole clause passes from the statute as surplusage or extraneous matter, or as void because of an illegal exception, how can it be said that the meaning of section 1 is in anywise affected? By such action we have but clarified the situation and declared the legislative intent without in the slightest degree thwarting it. See in this connection, Ex parte Schmolke (Cal. Sup.) 248 P. 244. Bacon Service Corporation v. Huss (Cal. Sup.) 248 P. 235, is not authority for the contention of counsel, but distinctly supports the view here announced.

Each particular statute under interpretation must furnish its own basis for decision upon a question of this character.

BRAUN, BRYANT & AUSTIN v. McGUIRE et al. (L. A. 9457.)

Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1927.

1. Patents ☞185—Patent grants to patentee exclusive rights to make, use, and vend patented article (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8; U. S. Comp. St. § 9428).

Patent, under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8, and Rev. St. § 4884 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9428), grants to patentee three exclusive rights, first, to make, second, to use, and third, to vend, patented article.

2. Patents ☞226—"Infringement" of patent right may consist in either making, using, or selling patented article without authority.

An infringement of patent right consists in either making, using, or selling patented article, or in all three thereof, without authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Infringement.]

3. Patents ☞212(1)—Right to make patented article does not pass by assignment of right to use unless license to use would otherwise not benefit licensee.

Right to make a patented article, being a separate and distinct right in hands of patentee and severable from right to use, does not pass by assignment of right to use unless license to use would not otherwise benefit licensee.

4. Municipal corporations ☞330(4)—Patented articles may be used in street and other improvement proceedings authorized by statute.

Patented articles may be used in street and other improvement proceedings which may be authorized by statute.

5. Municipal corporations ☞330(4)—Use of patented paving materials does not affect competition, where owner of patent stipulates to furnish to successful bidder at fixed price (Improvement Act 1911, § 79, subd. 6).

Specified use of patented paving materials in proceedings taken under Improvement Act (St. 1911, p. 767), § 79, subd. 6, does not prevent competition, where owner of patent rights stipulates with city that patented article will be furnished to successful bidder without reservation at fixed price.

6. Municipal corporations ☞58—If charter provision is free from ambiguity, no construction is permissible (Code Civ. Proc. § 1858).

City charter provision is subject to same rules of interpretation as statutes, and, if it be free from ambiguity, no construction or interpretation is required or permissible, and it must be given no other meaning than its words import, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1858.

7. Municipal corporations ☞330(4)—Charter provision for transfer of right "to use" patented pavement held not to contemplate city shall have right to manufacture (Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, § 3, subd. 10).

Los Angeles Charter (St. 1925, p. 1037), art. 1, § 3, subd. 10, providing that no pavement protected by patent shall be ordered by city until owner of patent has entered into written agreement with city transferring to city all right "to use" same within city, held not to contemplate that city shall also have right to manufacture same.

8. Patents ☞216—Owner of patented article electing to place it on market has right to fix price.

When owner of patented article elects to place article on market, it is his right to fix price to be paid for it.

9. Municipal corporations ☞330(4)—Charter provision relating to patented pavement contemplates agreement to fix price of material or fix royalty to be paid by city (Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, § 3, subd. 10).

Los Angeles Charter (St. 1925, p. 1037) art. 1, § 3, subd. 10, relating to use of patented pavement by city, contemplates that agreement between owner of patented pavement and city transferring right to use patent, fix price at which material will be furnished, or fix royalty to be paid by city for use of same.

10. Municipal corporations $\S$ 330(4)—License agreement with owner of patented pavement transferring to city right to use patent held to comply with charter (Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, $\S$ 3, subd. 10).

License agreement, whereby owner of patented pavement transferred to city of Los Angeles all right to use of patented pavement and agreed to furnish to city or to any contractor awarded contract or to owners performing work as contracting owners at specified prices, held to be in accordance with charter provision, Los Angeles charter (St. 1925, p. 1037), art. 1, $\S$ 3, subd. 10, providing that no patented pavement should be ordered by city until owner has transferred to city right to use same.

In Bank.

Application by Braun, Bryant & Austin for a writ of mandate to compel Hugh J. McGuire and others, as members of the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles, to execute a contract for the installation of certain patent street paving. Writ granted.

Roscoe W. Griffin, Arthur M. Ellis, E. R. Young and Paul S. Honberger, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., J. Harold Cragin and Herman Mohr, Dep. City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Wm. J. Locke, of San Francisco. Charles N. Kirkbride, of San Mateo, H. C. Symonds, of San Francisco, and Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Asst. County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

SHENK, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents as members of and constituting the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles to execute a contract for the improvement of certain streets and to pass upon the form and sufficiency of the bonds required in connection with said contract.

On the 4th day of September, 1925, the city council commenced proceedings to improve Orlando and other streets, electing to proceed under the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730). The requirements of the statute were complied with, and the petitioner was awarded the contract for the improvement of said streets, which was the paving thereof. Thereafter, on December 14, 1925, the petitioner presented a contract in due form, together with the necessary bonds, to the respondents for execution and approval. The respondents refused to execute and approve the same on the ground that they entertained doubt as to whether the requirements of subdivision 10 of section 3 of the city charter with reference to the use of patented paving material had been fully complied with. Hence this proceeding.

The street improvements in question contemplate the use of a patented paving material known as the "National Pavement Wearing Surface," the letters patent of which are owned by the National Pavements Corporation of California, a corporation. The city charter, in section 386 thereof, contains a general authorization to the city to enter into contracts for the purchase of articles covered by letters patent granted by the United States without competitive bidding, but with reference to the use of patented paving material the charter contains the following special provision:

"No pavement protected by any patent, trademark, trade-name, copyrighted name, or any device which tends to prevent competitive bidding, shall be ordered by the city, until the owner thereof has entered into a written agreement with the city transferring to the city all right to the use of the same within the city upon the terms and conditions set forth therein. The city shall not be bound by any such agreement unless the same shall have been approved by the board of public works, two-thirds vote of the council, and the mayor, and executed by the mayor on behalf of the city. No such agreement shall be for a longer period than five years.

"Whenever the city shall let a contract for the construction of any such pavement the contractor therefor shall pay to the city the exact sum or royalty which the city is required to pay under its said agreement.

"Whenever the city shall construct any such pavement by the direct employment of labor and purchase of materials, the costs of which are chargeable upon the property in a special assessment district, the exact sum or royalty which the city is required to pay under said agreement shall be added to and included in the costs chargeable to the property in said special assessment district." Charter, art. 1, $\S$ 3, subd. 10 (Stats. 1925, p. 1037).

With the requirements of the foregoing charter provision in view, the National Pavements Corporation of California, on July 21, 1925, executed what is called a "National Pavements License Mixture Agreement." This agreement, so far as material here, provides that whereas it is deemed advisable by the proper authorities of the city of Los Angeles that certain streets in the city be paved with National pavements in accordance with specifications numbered 129, new series (wherein this and other patented paving materials are specified for street paving), and that competitive bidding is deemed advisable, and that whereas said corporation is the owner of all the patents and processes covering such National pavements wearing surface in the state of California:

"Now, therefore, National Pavements Corporation of California hereby agrees to transfer, and does transfer to the city of Los Angeles, all right to the use of said patented pavement and all of the patents, trade-marks, trade-names and copyrighted names now owned, or which may be hereafter owned by said National Pavements Corporation of California, necessary to the use of the said National Pavements pavement constructed in accordance with said specifications, and pursuant to this agreement. And for the consideration hereinafter named, and in and for the consideration of the adoption by the city council of the city of Los Angeles of resolution or ordinance of intention, and such other proceedings as may be necessary to provide for the improvement of any one or more of the said streets, avenues, boulevards, places, courts, public ways, rights of way, lanes, alleys, and properties, in said city, or forming a part of the boundaries thereof, whether lying within or without said city, in accordance with the above named specifications, National Pavements Corporation of California hereby proposes and agrees to furnish to the city of Los Angeles for all work or improvement of paving any one or more of the said streets, avenues, boulevards, places, courts, public ways, rights of way, lanes, alleys, and properties, in said city, or forming a part of the boundaries thereof, whether lying within or without said city, with said National Pavements pavement, and to any contractor to whom may be awarded the contract for such work or improvement and to the owners of lots and lands proposed to be assessed for said work or improvement who may elect to take the work and enter into a contract to perform the same as 'contracting owners,' and for which an ordinance or resolution of intention has been regularly adopted by the city council of said city of Los Angeles at any time within four (4) months from date hereof, or at any time thereafter until this offer is withdrawn by the undersigned by a thirty (30) day written notice filed with the city council of the city of Los Angeles, the following material manufactured and mixed ready for laying as specified and required under and by said specifications, and services, with the right to use any or all of the patents, trademarks, or trade-names now owned or which may be hereafter owned by said National Pavements Corporation of California, necessary to lay said pavements."

The material specified in the agreement is described as "the necessary paving mixture for the wearing surface prepared under the patents and processes of National Pavements Corporation of California and in accordance with the said specifications of the city of Los Angeles above referred to, delivered at the temperature specified in said specifications in wagons or trucks of the contractor or purchasers of said mixture at National Pavements mixing plant in the city of Los Angeles." It is also provided that an expert whose time and expenses will be paid for by National Pavements Corporation will be furnished to the purchaser of said mixture at the expense of the corporation, and frequent tests of the mixture will be made by said expert so as to insure uniformity and best results. The prices at which the material may be obtained by any successful bidder are fixed at from 9 cents to 11½ cents per square foot of wearing surface, according to thickness. The term of the agreement is fixed at five years from its date. The agreement then provides:

"The execution of any work or improvement by the successful bidder or 'contracting owners' and the city of Los Angeles, or department thereof, shall be deemed by the said National Pavements Corporation of California to be an acceptance of this proposal by the city of Los Angeles and shall bind the undersigned National Pavements Corporation of California to furnish said rights, materials and services to whom the contract to perform the work or improvement contemplated in the said ordinance or resolution of intention is let."

The agreement was duly executed by the National Pavements Corporation of California, was approved by a majority vote of the board of public works, by a two-thirds vote of the city council, and was executed on behalf of the city by its mayor as required by the foregoing charter provision.

As disclosed by their verified answer, the respondents contend that said charter provision requires the license agreement to transfer not only the right to "use" the patented material, but also "to make available to all contractors engaged in public improvement work and who desire to bid and enter into contracts for such work, a similar right to manufacture, sell and lay such patented pavement." The transfer of the right to sell is not now pressed, but it is particularly urged that the right to "use" as that word is employed in the charter provision includes the right to "manufacture."

[1-3] Clause 8, section 8, of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, provides that the Congress shall have power to promote the progress of science by securing for limited times to inventors the exclusive right to their inventions. In pursuance of this constitutional provision Congress has provided, among other things, that there shall be granted to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of 17 years, the exclusive right to make, use and vend the patented article throughout the United States. U. S. Comp. Stats. 1916, § 9428; R. S. § 4884. The patent, therefore, grants to the patentee three exclusive rights, first, "to make," second, "to use," and, third, "to vend," the patented article. That the holder of a patent has these three separate and distinct rights was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in Adams v. Burke, 17 Wall. 456, 21 L. Ed. 700. It was there said:

"The right to manufacture, the right to sell, and the right to use are each substantive rights, and may be granted or conferred separately by the patentee."

The rule is stated with a citation of numerous later authorities in 20 R. O. L. at page 1187, as follows:

"The patentee is secured in the right of making, the right of using, and the right of selling, the patented article; and any one of these privileges may be the subject of license."

An infringement may consist in either making, using or selling the patented article, or in all three thereof, without authority. 30

Cyc. 972. Cases are cited by the respondents to the effect that the license to "use" includes the right to "make." Generally, it may be said of these cases that they involve the construction of license agreements between private parties where the intention is the important element, or have arisen under laws the construction of which prompted the holding that the right to "make" was necessarily or reasonably implied from a grant of the right to "use." The rule in such cases is subject to the very important limitation included in the statement of Mr. Hopkins in his work on Patents as follows:

"A license to 'use' implies the right to make for use, where otherwise the license would not benefit the licensee." Hopkins on Patents, vol. 1, § 234.

See Walker on Patents, § 296. As illustrative of the cases in which the particular facts or circumstances evidence an intention that the right to make is included in the right to use in order that the licensee may have the benefit of the license is the case of Dunkley Co. v. California Packing Co. (C. C. A.) 277 F. 996, where it was held, quoting from Edison, etc., Co. v. Peninsula L. P. & H. Co. (C. C.) 95 F. 669: "If the circumstances indicate such an intention, a license to use implies a license to make the thing to be used." That case involved the right to make and use patented fruit peeling machines. The grant to the licensee was the "free right for the use of any machine or machines or inventions owned or controlled by" the grantor. After stating the facts, the court concluded that "every circumstance points to the conclusion that his [the grantor's] licensee was expected to make or have made whatever machines it desired to use." It appeared in that case that the grantor of the licensee had suspended business and that unless the licensee possessed the right to make the machines the license would be of no use to it. The control of the right to manufacture the patented article would seem in many cases to be of the very essence of the patentee's beneficial interest. The value of the article on the market and its continuing marketability may depend on whether it is manufactured according to the plan or formula specified in the patent. If the purchaser of the right to use the article also as matter of law thereby acquires the right to make the same, any deviation from the specified plan or formula, at the option of the licensee and for reasons of economy or otherwise, might result in the fabrication of an inferior article or product and completely destroy its standing in the avenues of trade. An examination of the authorities on the subject satisfies us that the correct rule is that the right to make a patented article, being a separate and distinct right in the hands of the patentee and severable from the right to the use, does not pass by assignment of the right to the use unless the licensee to use would otherwise not benefit the licensee.

[4, 5] The subject of the purchase of patented articles by municipalities in this state has received consideration in several cases. Nicholson Pavement Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 699; Dunne v. Altschul, 57 Cal. 474; Perine v. Quackenbush, 104 Cal. 684, 38 P. 533; Sarver v. Los Angeles, 156 Cal. 187, 103 P. 917; Vale v. Boyle, 179 Cal. 180, 175 P. 787; Warren Bros. v. Boyle, 42 Cal. App. 246, 183 P. 706; Woodworth v. Sebastopol, 72 Cal. App. 187, 236 P. 981. The right in this state to use patented articles in street and other improvement proceedings which may be authorized by statute cannot be questioned. With reference to the use of patented paving material it is specifically provided in the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), that the pavement of streets as therein contemplated may be accomplished by the use of paving material "whether patented or not" (section 79, subd. 6), and it is well settled that the specified use of patented paving materials in proceedings taken under said act does not affect competition where the owner of the patent rights stipulates with the city that the patented article will be furnished to the successful bidder without reservation at a fixed price. Woodworth v. Sebastopol, supra; Miller v. Sebastopol (Cal. App.) 241 P. 593. It is obvious therefore that the special Los Angeles charter provision has provoked the present controversy, and the proper interpretation thereof is the only matter involved in this proceeding.

[6, 7] When we approach the Los Angeles provision in the light of the foregoing considerations, we find that it is therein required that before any pavement protected by letters patent, etc., shall be ordered by the city, the owner of the patent rights shall enter "into an agreement with the city" transferring to the city "all right to the use" of the patented paving material within the city "upon the terms and conditions" set forth in the agreement. The terms and conditions to be specified in the agreement are safeguarded by the requirements that the agreement "be approved by a majority vote of the board of public works, two-thirds vote of the council and the mayor," which requirements were complied with in this case. No reference is made in the charter to the transfer of the right to manufacture. A determination that the owner of the patent must in said agreement specifically transfer to the city the right to manufacture the patented article would be justified only on the theory that the charter provision so requires. It does not do so in express language, and we find no expression therein which would support the conclusion that it does so by necessary or reasonable implication. The charter provision is, of course, subject to the same rules of interpretation as a statute. If it be free from ambiguity no construction or interpretation is required or permissible, and it must be given no meaning other than its words import. "It is a cardinal rule applicable to the interpretation of statutes that in order to ascertain the intent of the Legislature in enacting the same, recourse must first be had to the language of the statute itself, and that if the words of enactment given their ordinary and proper signification are reasonably free from ambiguity and uncertainty, the courts will look no further to ascertain its meaning." People v. Stanley, 193 Cal. 428, 431, 225 P. 1, 2. In the construction of the instrument the office of the court "is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted." Section 1858, Code Civ. Proc.; 23 Cal. Jur. 729. What the respondents are urging the court to do is to declare that when the charter says "to use" it means "to use and manufacture." It is insisted that we ought so to do on the ground that the language of the charter evidences that intention. We fail to find in the language employed any evidence of such intention. To interpolate the words "to manufacture" would do violence to universally recognized rules of statutory construction. As above stated, it could only be justified on the theory that the words "to use" as employed mean "to use and manufacture" as a matter of law. In view of the separate and severable assignable interests of the patentee in the invention, it cannot be so held under the circumstances here presented.

For the purpose of indicating circumstances which might justify the court in so holding, the respondents in their answer allege that if the city or any successful bidder or the property owners in the assessment district are to receive any substantial benefits from the requirements of the charter provision it must be held that the right "to use" includes the right "to manufacture." It is alleged that the petitioner and many other contractors engaged in the paving contracting business "own, possess or control various paving mixtures patented or otherwise protected under the laws of the United States, or possess an exclusive right and license for the use of such patents and such patented paving mixtures"; that the petitioner and such other contractors possessing such rights are enabled to charge and exact from property owners and others required to pay assessments for street paving excessive and exorbitant amounts for the use of such patented paving material; and that the specification of such materials in assessment work without a license agreement to make and use the patented materials results in the creation of a monopoly and of the opportunity to charge unfair, unreasonable, and exorbitant prices for such pavements, and further results in favoritism in the securing of contracts and prevents competition at the expense of property owners who are assessed and required to pay for such patented paving. It may be that the framers of the charter provision had in mind the prevention or correction of some or all of the alleged abuses. If so the question arises, Was the result fully accomplished by the particular charter provision adopted? For aught that appears in the record herein it would seem that in so far as the charter provision and the license agreement executed pursuant thereto make available to the city and all bidders on such public work the use of such patented material at a fixed and uniform price the purpose has been accomplished. If the full purpose suggested by respondents has not been accomplished it may be noted that there appears to be no obligation on the part of the city to specify such patented material to be used in work to be done either by the city itself or under the assessment district plan. There is likewise no compulsion on the part of property owners to petition for any particular kind of patented pavement as was done in this case, and if the board of public works should conclude upon the consideration of the bids that the prices specified by the bidder are unfair or exorbitant or the proceeding is tainted with favoritism, it has the power under the statute to reject any and all bids should it deem this for the public good. Section 10, Stats. 1911, p. 735.

The respondents state that in framing the said charter provision the board of freeholders had before it the provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco and the case of Warren Bros. Co. v. Boyle, 42 Cal. App. 246, 183 P. 706, wherein it was held that a license agreement transferring to said city and county the right to "use" a patented paving material, and which the owner agreed to furnish the city and county at a cost to the city of $7 per ton for the patented wearing surface, was a sufficient compliance with the following charter provision:

"No patented pavement shall be ordered during the existence of the patent therefor, until the owner of such patent shall have transferred to the city and county all right to the use of the same therein, with the privilege to any person to manufacture and lay the same upon the streets under any contract that may be awarded to him with the city and county."

It is earnestly insisted by the respondents that under that case it must now be held that the transfer of the right to use includes the transfer of the right to manufacture. We cannot accede to this contention. It will be noted that the San Francisco charter specifically requires that the license agreement transfer "the privilege to any person to manufacture" the patented pavement "under any contract that may be awarded to him by the city and county." The said charter provision does not seem to require the transfer to the city and county of the right to manufacture the patented article when the city is doing the work through its own instrumentalities and not through the medium of a contractor. In the case relied upon the city and county was proceeding to repave an accepted street, the cost thereof to be paid from a fund in the city treasury and not from an assessment under the district plan. It was properly held that the transfer of the right to use the material delivered to the city at a specified price per ton for said improvement was sufficient compliance with the charter provision. The license agreement involved in that case was in its recitals made particularly applicable to the improvement of the accepted street in question. The language of the San Francisco charter, when considered in the light of the limitations incident to the proceeding in that case, that is to say, the absence of any charter requirement of the transfer to the city of the right to manufacture when the city itself was performing and paying for the work, serves to accentuate the observation that if the framers of the Los Angeles charter provision had intended to include therein the requirements of a transfer either to the city or to a successful bidder of the right to manufacture, they could and should have done so in no uncertain terms or in terms that would admit of no other reasonable construction. The fact that they did not do so is persuasive that it was not intended that the additional right was required to be transferred.

It is further stated by the respondents that the framers of the Los Angeles charter provision had in mind the ruling of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in the case of Allen v. Milwaukee, 128 Wis. 678, 106 N. W. 1099, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680, 116 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 Ann. Cas. 392. In that case the city of Milwaukee was proceeding to pave a city street through the medium of a contractor after advertisement for bids. The specifications called minutely for the use of specially named patented paving material. A taxpayer succeeded in enjoining the city and the contractor from carrying out the contract on the ground that such a proceeding was unauthorized under the laws of that state. The proceedings were taken, and the controversy arose after the adoption of a statute in 1903 imposing a prohibition on any city to the effect that no special brand of asphalt should be required by name to be furnished in any specifications for street paving. Waiving this statutory prohibition, and notwithstanding the same, the court declared that nearly 40 years theretofore said court in Dean v. Charlton, 23 Wis. 590, 99 Am. Dec. 205, had decided that when charters gave power to cities to impose by special assessment the cost of street improvements only by competitive bids, such cities had no power to specify a patented pavement so controlled by a monopoly that there could be no competition in the fair and reasonable meaning of the word, and that during all of those years the Legislature had approved the construction of such grants by re-enacting them in substantially the same form. The case of Dean v. Charlton was decided in 1869. It was therein directly decided that where a city was empowered by its charter to improve streets at the expense of the adjoining property owners and was required to let such work to the lowest bidder, it could not contract for the laying of a pavement the right to which was patented and owned by one firm. The dissenting opinion of Chief Justice Dixon in that case points out that pending a motion for a rehearing the Supreme Court of Michigan, in an opinion by Chief Justice Cooley (Hobart v. City of Detroit, 17 Mich. 246, 97 Am. Dec. 185), had reached an opposite conclusion in the construction of identical statutory language. It is obvious that the holding in Allen v. Milwaukee, supra, in 1906, affirming the conclusion of the same court in Dean v. Charlton, was based upon an early statute of Wisconsin which prohibited the specification of patented pavement in assessment proceedings for street improvements, and when there had been no substantial change in the statutory law of the state in the intervening years. The case of Allen v. Milwaukee, supra, may therefore be considered only in its relation to the particular laws of Wisconsin, which had been in effect for nearly 40 years, and cannot be deemed of any controlling importance in the construction of laws of this state, where, under the Improvement Act of 1911, the use of patented pavement in such proceedings is specifically authorized. The use of such material as so authorized by our statute has been held not to prevent competitive bidding in the presence of a license agreement such as the one here involved. Woodward v. Sebastopol, supra; Miller v. Sebastopol, supra. It is pointed out by petitioner that similar license agreements have been attacked and sustained by numerous state courts as not preventing competitive bidding. Farmer v. Dahl, 19 Ariz. 395, 171 P. 130; Sanborn v. City of Boulder, 74 Colo. 358, 221 P. 1077; McEwen v. City of Cœur d'Alene, 23 Idaho, 746, 132 P. 308; Tousey v. Indianapolis, 175 Ind. 295, 94 N. E. 225; Saunders v. Iowa City, 132 Iowa, 132, 111 N. W. 529, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392; Pollock v. Kansas City, 87 Kan. 205, 123 P. 985, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465; La Coste v. New Orleans, 119 La. 470, 44 So. 267; Baltimore v. Flack, 104 Md. 107, 64 A. 702; Ford v. Great Falls, 46 Mont. 292, 127 P. 1004; Wurdeman v. City of Columbus, 100 Neb. 134, 158 N. W. 924; Hastings v. Columbus, 42 Ohio St. 585; Reed v. Rockliff Gibson, etc., 25 Okl. 633, 107 P. 168, 138 Am. St. Rep. 937; Johns v. City of Pendleton, 66 Or. 182, 134 P. 312, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 454; Sherrett v. Portland, 75 Or. 449, 147 P. 382; Wagoner v. City of La Grand, 89 Or. 192, 173 P. 305; Great Northern, etc., v.

Leavenworth, 81 Wash. 511, 142 P. 1155, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 239. Conceding some contrariety of authority on the effect of such an agreement, it is clear that the better reasoned cases recognize the distinction between contracts where the owner of the patented article stipulates to furnish the same to any bidder and cases where the contract is sought to be let without any stipulation on the part of the owner of the patent to supply it to all bidders at a fixed price.

[8, 9] In further support of their contention that it was intended by the said charter provision that the municipal authorities should be limited in the specification of patented pavement to the acquisition of "an unlimited license," which in the language of the answer would include the right on the part of the contractor "to manufacture, sell and lay such patented pavement," it is urged by respondents that unless the successful bidder has the right to make the paving material no benefit would accrue from the right to use the same, as any one could purchase the material and with the purchase the right to use it would necessarily follow. It may be assumed that the self-interest of the owner of a patented article would prompt him to market his product notwithstanding his legal right to withhold it from the market or to refuse to sell it to any one. Heaton-Peninsula, etc., Co. v. Eureka Utility Co. (C. C. A.) 77 F. 288, 294, 35 L. R. A. 728. When he elects to place the article on the market it is his right to fix the price to be paid for it. When he seeks to sell it to the city and the city desires to purchase it the transaction may take place, as above noted, without publication of notice inviting proposals and the letting of the contract to the lowest bidder (Charter, § 386, unless the article be patented paving material as provided in said subdivision 10. Finally, just what, then, does that subdivision require the owner of the patent to do in order that he may sell his product to the city? The first paragraph imposes upon him the obligation to transfer to the city all right to the use of the patented material ordered. The second paragraph, in terms, imposes no duty on the owner of the patent, but relates to the duties of the contractor in his relation as such with the city. The third paragraph does not relate to any obligation imposed on the owner of the patent nor to any duty imposed on the contractor, but provides that the cost of the material to the city under the license agreement "shall be added to and included in the costs chargeable to the property" in the assessment district, with the specification that such costs shall be so added and included "whenever the city shall construct any such pavement by the direct employment of labor and purchase of material, the costs of which are chargeable upon the property in the special assessment district." Taken as a whole the subdivision would seem to contemplate that the license agreement fix the price at which the material would be furnished or to fix the royalty to be paid by the city for the use of the same. In the second paragraph it is provided that the contractor pay to the city "the exact sum or royalty" which the city is required to pay under the agreement, and in the third paragraph it is provided that the said "exact sum or royalty" be included in the costs chargeable to the property in said special assessment district when the pavement is laid by the city "by the direct employment of labor and purchase of material." The words "sum" and "royalty" obviously do not refer to the same exact item of expense. The "sum" to be paid to the owner of the patent in one case might readily be in excess of any "royalty" to be paid in another case, and vice versa. Just how this charter provision taken as a whole or as to its separate paragraphs was intended to dovetail into and supplement the requirements of the several statutes authorizing paving improvements by special assessment, and particularly, as in the present case, the Improvement Act of 1911, presents a difficult problem. The 1911 act contemplates an improvement through the medium of a contractor after advertisement for bids or by the property owners themselves as "contracting owners," and where the cost thereof may be assessed against the property in the district. We find in the provisions of the act no authority for a special assessment when the improvement has been constructed by the city by "direct employment of labor and purchase of material." Yet it seems that it is only when the city is so proceeding that "the exact sum or royalty" to be paid by the city to the owner of the patent may be included in the special assessment. If, when the city is proceeding as the agent of the property owners through the medium of a contractor, as in this case, and not by the direct employment of labor and purchase of material, the amount representing the exact sum or royalty cannot be included in the special assessment, but must be paid by the city as a contribution towards the cost of the improvement, then it appears that no such contribution was provided for in the ordinance of intention, and we would not be justified in assuming that the cost of such patented material could be included in the assessment as an incidental expense. These are some of the considerations which move us to conclude that if the charter provision was intended to apply to a street proceeding such as the one now in question and to the extent contended for by respondents, the said provision was inexpertly framed and does not fully accomplish the purpose intended. As the result of any liberal construction that may be placed on the charter provision the utmost that can be said of it is that it was designed to make the said patented paving material available to all bidders for the contract at a fixed and uniform price. Said purpose would seem to be accomplished when by the written stipulation of the patentee or his licensee the patented material is made available to all bidders at such price. When the price is so fixed and is available to every bidder the bids may then be submitted on the basis of the same price to all.

[10] The respondents urge that in other respects the said license agreement is not in accordance with the charter requirements. We are of the opinion, however, that in so far as the charter provision may be said to apply to the special proceeding in question, the license agreement is in compliance therewith.

It is alleged in the petition that numerous paving materials protected by patents, trademarks, trade-names, and copyrighted names have been used by the city of Los Angeles; that numerous materials and articles protected by patents, etc., other than paving materials so protected, are now being specified and used by said city in the construction and improvement of streets, such as ornamental lighting systems, patented interlocking brick, patented cement sewer pipe, vitrified pipe, sewer flushing devices, and many other materials and devices; that no license agreement relative to the use of any such articles or materials so protected by letters patent, etc., has been or is required by the city; that during the year 1925 patented lighting posts and equipment were installed by the city of Los Angeles at a cost aggregating more than $2,500,000, and that the owners of the patents on such lighting posts and equipment are not required by the charter of the city to execute a license agreement such as is imposed on the owners of patented paving material. These allegations are not denied by the respondents, and the petitioner predicates thereon an argument that said subdivision 10 of section 3 of the charter is unconstitutional for the reason that the same constitutes an unjust and unreasonable and unlawful discrimination against the owners of patented paving materials, entitled under the law to sell their goods, and in favor of owners of patents on other articles and materials purchased by the city. We deem it unnecessary to pass upon the points thus urged for the reason that we have concluded that the license agreement in question is in compliance with the charter provision as above indicated. Other points made by the respective parties have been considered. In view of what has been decided, we also deem it unnecessary to mention or to pass upon them specifically.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

FRANCE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 9213).

Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1927.

1. Criminal law ☞1083—Generally, duly perfected appeal divests trial court of jurisdiction.

As general rule, duly perfected appeal divests trial court of further jurisdiction of cause.

2. Habeas corpus ☞1—"Habeas corpus" is not proceeding in prosecution of one on whose behalf it is sought, but is independent action to secure his discharge.

"Habeas corpus," although granted to inquire into imprisonment in criminal prosecution, is not proceeding in such prosecution, but is independent action to secure discharge from imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Habeas Corpus.]

3. Habeas corpus ☞44—In issuing habeas corpus, generally speaking, superior courts, District Courts of Appeal, and Supreme Court are on same plane.

Under Constitution, power to issue habeas corpus is conferred on Supreme Court and each of Justices thereof, District Courts of Appeal and each of Justices thereof, and superior court, and, generally speaking, in issuing writ such courts are on same plane.

4. Habeas corpus ☞113(2)—Decision of court in habeas corpus proceeding, if it has jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed by any other court.

Decision of any court in habeas corpus proceeding, if it has jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed by any other court in any way.

5. Habeas corpus ☞4—After appeal from conviction, trial court may not discharge appellant on habeas corpus for error, defect, or other infirmity in proceedings, which was or might have been legally presented to appellate court.

After appeal from conviction, trial court may not discharge appellant on habeas corpus proceedings for any error, defect, or other infirmity in proceedings appearing on face of record on appeal, which was or might have been legally presented to appellate court, regardless of constitutional provision that superior courts may issue writs of habeas corpus on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody in respective counties and conferring on Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal power to issue like writs.

6. Habeas corpus ☞117(2)—Superior court's order on habeas corpus, pending appeal from conviction, releasing for lack of jurisdiction defendants convicted for burglary with explosives, was void and did not prevent later enforcing penitentiary sentence (Pen. Code, § 464).

Where record on appeal from conviction in superior court showed conviction for burglary with explosives, under Pen. Code, § 464, question whether such offense constituted misdemeanor or felony could have been presented to appellate court, and superior court's order on habeas corpus, in view of prior decision in another case that such offense constituted misdemeanor only authorizing jail sentence, releasing defendants because conviction was for felony, was void and did not prevent it from later enforcing its judgment of conviction by ordering defendants imprisoned in penitentiary after overruling of such prior case.

In Bank.

Original application by Homer France and Jack Black for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Victor R. McLucas, Judge, to prevent enforcement of a judgment and commitment to the state prison. Writ denied.

Harold Ide Cruzan, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The petitioners, Homer France and Jack Black, were convicted in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles upon two counts, each charging them with the crime of burglary with explosives, as defined by section 464 of the Penal Code, and upon a third count charging burglary. An appeal from the judgment of conviction was taken to the District Court of Appeal, and by said last-named court the judgment as to one count of said information charging burglary with explosives was affirmed. As to the two other counts thereof, the judgment was reversed. The decision of the District Court of Appeal was rendered on the 29th day of May, 1925. (73 Cal. App. 13, 238 P. 374). On the 30th day of July, 1925, the time within which an order for rehearing might be made having expired, the remittitur was filed in said superior court, and on the following day a certified copy of the judgment of conviction of the crime of burglary with explosives, as alleged in one count of said information, was delivered to the sheriff. However, after the rendition of said decision by the District Court of Appeal and before the going down of said remittitur, the petitioners had filed in said superior court their application for a writ of habeas corpus. In support of their application they relied upon the case of In re Schiaffino, decided December 2, 1924, and reported in 70 Cal. App. page 65, 232 P. 719. The appellate court in that case held that in a prosecution for the crime of burglary with explosives, as defined by section 464 of the Penal Code, the offense was a misdemeanor and punishable by imprisonment in the county jail only. The superior court in the habeas corpus proceedings instituted therein by petitioners followed the Schiaffino Case, and held that, as the offense was a misdemeanor only and had been committed within the city of Los Angeles, the superior court was without jurisdiction of the action. Accordingly, said court on July 21, 1925, granted the writ of habeas corpus and ordered the petitioners to be discharged from custody. In the meantime, the district attorney had filed in the justice's court of the township of Los Angeles a new complaint against petitioners charging them with the same offenses with which they had been charged in the original information, and at the time the order discharging petitioners from custody was made the sheriff of said county had in his possession a warrant of arrest issued by the said justice's court, and under said warrant of arrest he continued to hold petitioners in custody, and upon receiving said commitment as mentioned above, the sheriff, in compliance with its terms and on August 1, 1925, delivered petitioners to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin. Thereafter and on the 25th day of August, 1925, on motion of petitioners' attorneys, said superior court made an order vacating said commitment and ordering that the petitioners be returned to the custody of said sheriff and be held by him in the county jail of said county "pending the further order of this court, and until the disposal of the subsequent cause now pending in the above-entitled honorable Superior Court, entitled the People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. Jack Black and Homer France, Defendants, which said cause is numbered differentially from the one on which this order is given." Pursuant to said order, petitioners were returned to the custody of said sheriff. A preliminary examination was held under the new complaint filed against them, and, after due proceedings had thereunder, an information was filed against petitioners in said superior court charging them with the offenses set forth in said new complaint, which offenses were the same as those charged against petitioners in the original information filed against them.

Subsequent to the 21st day of July, 1925, the date of the order granting said writ of habeas corpus, and on the 29th day of said month, the case of In re Wilson, 196 Cal. 515, 238 P. 359, was decided by this court. In that decision the case of In re Schiaffino, supra, was overruled and the offense of burglary with explosives was held to be a felony punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary. While the petitioners were being held pending their trial under the second information, the district attorney on December 3, 1925, and undoubtedly relying upon the decision of this court in In re Wilson, supra, moved for an order of court remanding petitioners to the custody of the sheriff, to be by him delivered to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin in accordance with the judgment rendered against them in the former or first action, which had been affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. This motion was opposed by petitioners. It was argued and submitted to the said court for decision, and thereupon petitioners instituted this proceeding against said court and the judge thereof to prohibit said court from considering said last-mentioned motion and from taking any further proceedings against petitioners in said former action. An alternative writ of prohibition was issued as prayed for by petitioners. The respondents have filed a return and answer to said writ setting forth the proceedings taken against the petitioners in the superior and in the District Court of Appeal in the actions pending therein against them. There is no dispute as to any of the facts involved herein.

It is the contention of petitioners that the order of court made in the habeas corpus proceeding on July 21, 1925, discharging said petitioners from custody, had the effect of a final judgment releasing them from imprisonment under the judgment in the first or former action against them, and accordingly said superior court is without any authority or jurisdiction to remand petitioners to the custody of the sheriff of said county for the purpose of delivering them to the warden of the state prison, or to make any order or to take any action whatever in the first or former action against petitioners. In support of this contention the petitioners rely upon sections 362 and 1496 of the Penal Code and upon expressions of this court found in the cases of Grady v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. 155, 30 P. 613, Ex parte Robinson, 71 Cal. 608, 12 P. 794, Matter of Zany, 164 Cal. 724, 130 P. 710, and In re Begerow, 136 Cal. 293, 68 P. 773, 56 L. R. A. 528, as well as language to be found in In re Crandall, 59 Kan. 671, 54 P. 686, quoted with approval by this court in In re Begerow, supra.

Respondents disagree with this contention of petitioners. They further contend that the order of court discharging the petitioners in the habeas corpus proceeding was void for the reason that the superior court had no jurisdiction, to entertain the application for said writ, and therefore no power to grant the same, for the reason that the action then pending against petitioners was on appeal to the District Court of Appeal, and that while said appeal was pending the said superior court had no jurisdiction over petitioners or in the action pending against them. This question, so far as our knowledge goes, has never been directly before the appellate courts of this state.

[1-4] The general rule, of course, is familiar and universally recognized that a duly perfected appeal divests the trial court of further jurisdiction of the cause in which the appeal has been taken. The writ of habeas corpus, however, although granted to inquire into the legality of one imprisoned in a criminal prosecution, is not a proceeding in that prosecution, but, on the contrary, is an independent action instituted by the applicant therein to secure his discharge from such imprisonment (State v. Shrader, 73 Neb. 618, 103 N. W. 276, 119 Am. St. Rep. 913). In this state the power to issue the writ of habeas corpus is conferred by the Constitution upon the Supreme Court and each of the Justices thereof, the District Courts of Appeal and each of the Justices thereof, and the superior court and "generally speaking as far as the power to issue the writ is concerned the Supreme Court, the District Courts of Appeal, and the superior courts are upon the same plane." 13 Cal. Jur. 257; Matter of Zany, 164 Cal. 724, 130 P. 710; Matter of Hughes, 159 Cal. 360, 113 P. 684. By this is meant, however, as we understand these decisions, "that the decision of any court in a habeas corpus proceeding, provided the court has jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed by any other court in any way." Matter of Zany, supra, page 726, 130 P. 710. The same principle is enunciated in the Hughes Case, supra, although stated in slightly different language.

The precise point involved herein does not appear to have received an extensive consideration by the courts of other states. However, a case involving a question somewhat similar to the one now before us was before the Supreme Court in the state of Colorado. In that proceeding it appeared that James Doyle was adjudged guilty of contempt of court and committed to the county jail by the district court. From this judgment of conviction he appealed to the Court of Appeals and applied for a supersedeas, which was denied. He then presented to the Supreme Court his petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The latter court refused to consider such petition, holding that, as the case was then on appeal to the District Court of Appeals the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a petition during the pendency of said appeal. In so holding the court said:

"With the case pending and undetermined in the Court of Appeals, can this court assume jurisdiction of this proceeding? That tribunal has obtained jurisdiction of the cause instituted there at the instance of the petitioner. The questions which he seeks to have determined in that action are identical with those which he asks this court to pass upon by the proceedings instituted here; and, if this court can entertain jurisdiction of petitioner's application, it must be upon the theory that, by so doing, that of the Court of Appeals would be ousted, for, unless such would be the result, serious and embarrassing complications might arise. It is to prevent such difficulties and contests between courts over jurisdiction that the rule of law obtains that, where a court has obtained jurisdiction of an action, it cannot be interfered with by any other, but has the exclusive right to entertain and exercise such jurisdiction to the final determination of the cause. Works, Jur. 68; Merrill v. Lake, 16 Ohio [St.] 373 [47 Am. Dec. 377]; Taylor v. City of Ft. Wayne, 47 Ind. 274; Clepper v. State, 4 Tex. 242; Ex parte Booth, 3 Wis. 145. Under this rule, the Court of Appeals having first acquired jurisdiction of the cause, this court, pending final judgment in that, cannot invade it by reviewing the judgment of the trial court in another proceeding. In re Farrell, 22 Colo. 461, 45 P. 428. This rule is not only right in principle, but prevents unpleasant collision between different tribunals, and contests between them over the jurisdiction of causes, and has been universally recognized from the date when parties indicted in the federal courts for violation of the Fugitive Slave Law sought to be released by habeas corpus through the medium of the state courts; for it would be a subversion of judicial power for one court to take a case from another having jurisdiction, or exercise supervision before its final decision was given. Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean, 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935; Church, Hab. Corp. § 265; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 599." In re Doyle, 26 Colo. 52, 55 P. 1080.

Upon the authority of the case just referred to, and others of like character, the author of 29 Corpus Juris, page 116, lays down the following rule:

"Pursuant to a general rule of wide application, and upon which there is no conflict of authorities, it has been held that a court is without jurisdiction where it attempts by habeas corpus to interfere with the exercise by another court of jurisdiction theretofore acquired, whether such jurisdiction is acquired in another habeas corpus proceeding or on appeal, or otherwise, unless the prior jurisdiction has been terminated."

In 12 Ruling Case Law, page 1218, we find the following statement of the law:

"The fact that the judges of the inferior court have concurrent jurisdiction with the highest appellate court in habeas corpus proceedings does not authorize a judge of an inferior court to entertain habeas corpus proceedings for the release of a prisoner whose conviction had been affirmed by the appellate court."

Among the authorities relied upon for the above statement is the case of People v. Superior Court, 234 Ill. 186, 84 N. E. 875, 14 Ann. Cas. 753. In that case a defendant by the name of Ralph Lipsey had been convicted of receiving stolen property in the superior court of Cook county. He was sentenced to the penitentiary. Thereafter he sued out a writ of error to the Supreme Court to review the record of his conviction. Upon the hearing of said writ the judgment of conviction was affirmed, and Lipsey was taken to the penitentiary to serve his sentence. Thereafter and while so confined a petition was filed in his behalf in the superior court of Cook county for a writ of habeas corpus, and said superior court was proceeding to hear said petition when the Attorney General obtained leave to file in the Supreme Court a writ of certiorari directed to the said superior court and the judge thereof, before whom said habeas corpus proceedings were pending, to send up the record of said proceedings. Upon the hearing of said petition for a writ of certiorari the Supreme Court of Illinois quashed the habeas corpus proceeding and held that the superior court of Cook county was without jurisdiction to issue said writ of habeas corpus. The following language from this decision indicates the position taken by that court in said proceeding:

"The first question for determination is whether or not the Superior Court, or any judge thereof, had jurisdiction to order the issuance of this particular writ of habeas corpus. It appears from the petition for that writ that Lipsey had sued out of this court a writ of error to review the proceedings of the criminal court, and that the judgment of that court had been by this court affirmed. It also appears that the question of the sufficiency of the verdict returned by the jury in the case in the criminal court was not raised by assignment of error in this court when the case was brought here, and it is stated by that petition that neither Lipsey nor his attorney discovered the alleged insufficiency of the verdict until after the petition for rehearing which was filed in this court had been denied. It is urged in the brief filed in the present proceeding on behalf of Lipsey that, 'If the judgment of the criminal court is void, and the Supreme Court of Illinois did not decide that such judgment was valid, habeas corpus lies.' It is true that the question as to the sufficiency of the verdict, and the validity of the judgment based thereon, was not specifically presented when the case was brought here by writ of error. It is also true that this question might then have been presented to and passed upon by this court had Lipsey seen fit to invoke the judgment of the court in reference thereto. The general rule is, when a judgment is affirmed by this court, all questions raised by the assignments of error, and all questions that might have been so raised, are to be regarded as finally adjudicated against the appellant or plaintiff in error. A judgment or decree having been affirmed by this court must be regarded as free from all error. Gould v. Sternberg, 128 Ill. 510, 21 N. E. 628, 15 Am. St. Rep. 138. * * *

"It is true, as contended by counsel both for respondent and for Lipsey, that circuit and superior courts, and the judges of those courts, have concurrent jurisdiction with this court in habeas corpus proceedings. That fact, however, does not authorize either of those courts, or either of such judges, to decide a question contrary to the way it has been decided by this court. When this court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, has determined a question, either of law or of fact, the matter is ended so far as the circuit and superior courts, and the judges thereof, are concerned, and they may not, by reason of the fact that their jurisdiction in habeas corpus is concurrent with that of this court, overrule or review such decision of this court dealing with questions either of law or of fact. When the petition for the writ of habeas corpus was presented to Judge McEwen, it appeared therefrom that the judgment in the criminal case had been affirmed by this court, which, as we have seen, was an adjudication that the judgment of conviction was a valid one, and while he had all the power and authority in a habeas corpus proceeding that is vested in any other court or judge in the state he was without power or authority to determine that the judgment in question was void, when, as a matter of law, this court had determined that it was valid."

In Ex parte Barfield (Tex. Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1095, the defendant, the petitioner therein, was convicted of a felony and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary. He appealed from the judgment to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the state of Texas. Thereafter he applied to the district court where he had been tried for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted, but upon the final hearing thereon he was remanded to the custody of the officer having him in charge. From this order remanding him he appealed to the said Court of Criminal Appeals, a practice undoubtedly permitted under the practice of that state. The Court of Criminal Appeals held that:

"Relator has no right to the writ of habeas corpus under such a state of facts. Everything complained of by him in his application for the writ can be urged on his appeal."

[5] It may not be necessary for us to go to the extent to which the courts in some of these cases have gone, and especially the Supreme Court of the state of Colorado in Re Doyle, supra. But we think there is sufficient to be found in the foregoing authorities to support this court in holding that a trial court, after an appeal from a judgment of conviction rendered by it in a criminal action has been perfected, is without authority to discharge through habeas corpus proceedings the appellant during the pendency of said appeal, for any error, defect, or other infirmity appearing or existing in the proceedings taken in said action, which was or might have been legally presented to said appellate court on said appeal. There is nothing to be found in this state, nor for that matter in the courts of any other state to which our attention has been called or of which we have any knowledge, contrary to such a rule of procedure. We have not overlooked the provision of the Constitution of the state (art. 6, § 5), investing the superior courts with power to issue writs of "habeas corpus on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody in the respective counties," nor the provisions of the Constitution, conferring upon the Supreme Court and the District Court of Appeal power to issue like writs. It may be conceded that the superior courts of the state have concurrent jurisdiction with the appellate courts in habeas corpus proceedings, but this does not mean that they have the power to interfere with the appellate jurisdiction of either of said last-named courts in matters pending before said appellate courts or to overrule or set aside a judgment rendered therein. It is not claimed that this could be done directly by any proceeding instituted for that purpose in the superior court, but if the last-named court has power under the Constitution to discharge from custody by a writ of habeas corpus a defendant whose appeal is at the time pending before either of the appellate courts of the state, then the superior court may do indirectly that which it must be admitted it has no power to do directly. This question was considered by the Supreme Court of the state of Illinois in the case of People v. Superior Court, supra. The respective courts of that state are vested with jurisdiction in habeas corpus proceedings to the same extent and in like manner practically as are the courts of our state, and in determining the extent of these powers the Supreme Court of Illinois held that the superior courts of that state "may not, by reason of the fact that their jurisdiction in habeas corpus is concurrent with that of this court, overrule or review" a decision of the Supreme Court. In that case the Supreme Court set aside as void a judgment of the superior court of Cook county discharging on habeas corpus a prisoner whose conviction had been previously affirmed by said Supreme Court.

The court in that opinion went farther than it is necessary for us to go in the determination of any question before us in the present proceeding. That court held that an inferior court under its power to issue writs of habeas corpus was without jurisdiction to release from custody one imprisoned under a judgment which the Supreme Court of that state had determined to be valid. We are holding simply that, under the power invested in the superior courts of this state to issue writs of habeas corpus, they are not given the authority to invade the jurisdiction of an appellate court, and to oust said appellate court of its jurisdiction in a criminal action pending before it on appeal by discharging on habeas corpus the appellant in said action on any ground appearing upon the face of the record on appeal, and which is raised or could be raised on said appeal.

The failure of the courts to recognize such a rule of procedure or one similar thereto would lead to the greatest of confusion, resulting often in the failure of the courts to efficiently administer the law. In passing, we might call attention to the unusual condition shown by the record in the present proceeding, which might have been avoided if the above-mentioned rule had been observed.

[6] Upon the appeal taken by the petitioners herein to the District Court of Appeal the very question raised in the habeas corpus proceedings before the superior court, resulting in the order releasing petitioners, could have been presented to, and for aught that appears in the record was considered by, the District Court of Appeal, although no mention of it was made in the decision. There surely was no reason why it could not have been so presented. The record on appeal showed that the petitioners had been tried and convicted of the offense of burglary with explosives in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles. Therefore the question of the jurisdiction of said court over said action and over said petitioners was plainly apparent upon the face of said record, and there was no reason why it could not have been presented and decided on said appeal. Moreover, the Schiaffino Case, on the authority of which the superior court discharged petitioners in the habeas corpus proceedings, had been decided by the District Court of Appeal of the First appellate district almost six months prior to the rendition of the decision of the District Court of Appeal of the Second appellate district affirming the judgment of conviction against petitioners. It may be that the decision in that case was not called to the attention of the latter court or that said court did not consider the question decided therein in determining petitioners' appeal, but there was nothing to have prevented petitioners from directing the court's attention to it, nor was there anything which precluded said court from considering said decision and the questions decided therein. Therefore petitioners have no ground to complain that they had no opportunity of presenting to the District Court of Appeal having jurisdiction of their appeal the very question raised by them later in their habeas corpus proceedings before the superior court.

As the question was one which either was raised or might have been raised before the appellate court, it could not, during the pendency of said appeal, according to the rule announced herein, be raised before the trial court in habeas corpus proceedings instituted therein for the purpose of securing petitioners' release, and the trial court had no jurisdiction to entertain said proceedings during the pendency of said appeal. It follows, therefore, that the order of the trial court of date July 21, 1925, discharging petitioners was illegal and void; that said order did not deprive said court from later enforcing its judgment of conviction rendered against petitioners; and that said court has jurisdiction to entertain and decide the motion of the district attorney now pending before it to remand petitioners to the custody of the sheriff for the purpose of enforcing the judgment of conviction rendered against them in said superior court.

As the trial court had no jurisdiction to entertain the habeas corpus proceedings, it becomes unnecessary for us to consider whether or not the order made therein, and purporting to discharge petitioners from custody, was a final judgment releasing them from imprisonment, as provided by section 1496 of the Penal Code. Being a void order, it in no way affected the legality of petitioners' imprisonment. The petition for writ of prohibition is denied.

BAIRD et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 12224.)*

Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1927.

Rehearing Granted May 25 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1195(1)—Adjudication by Supreme Court that evidence was insufficient to support particular finding precludes such finding, in subsequent proceeding, on similar evidence.

Adjudication by Supreme Court that evidence offered upon trial was insufficient to support a finding of adoption precluded trial court from finding, in subsequent proceeding, on basis of same or substantially similar evidence, that an adoption did take place.

2. Executors and administrators $\S$ 315(6)—Judgment entered, after remittitur, denying petition for distribution of estate held to be judgment on merits finally concluding controversy.

Judgment by lower court denying petition for partial distribution of estate, after remittitur by Supreme Court, held to be judgment on the merits, finally concluding all controversy, and not judgment of nonsuit.

3. Judgment $\S$ 570(1)—Judgment of nonsuit does not bar subsequent action, while judgment on directed verdict does.

Judgment of nonsuit does not bar a subsequent action upon same cause, while a judgment upon a directed verdict is considered judgment upon merits and makes an end of litigation.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1176(3)—Petitioner's evidence being insufficient to sustain special verdicts and judgment granting prayer, Supreme Court could direct reversal and entry of judgment denying petition on merits.

Where petitioner's evidence was insufficient, as matter of law, to sustain special verdicts and findings and judgment granting prayer for distribution of estate entered pursuant thereto, Supreme Court could, on appeal, direct reversal of judgment entered in trial court and the entry of judgment denying petition for distribution, which would operate as adjudication upon merits and bar further inquiry into same subject of litigation.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1194(1)—Direction by Supreme Court held for entry of judgment, denying petition for distribution of estate effective as adjudication on merits.

Where Supreme Court found that petitioner's evidence was insufficient, as matter of law, to sustain special verdicts and findings and judgment granting prayer for distribution of estate entered pursuant thereto, directions given to lower court held to be for entry of judgment denying petition for distribution which would operate as adjudication upon merits and bar further inquiry into same subject of litigation.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1202—Insufficiency of defendant's evidence is not ground for new trial after Supreme Court has held that motion for nonsuit should have been granted.

When Supreme Court has declared that state of evidence was such as to warrant granting of motion for nonsuit or directed verdict, it would be improper for trial court, after judgment on merits for defendant, to grant new trial because of insufficiency of defendant's evidence, since motion for nonsuit or directed verdict is based entirely on sufficiency of plaintiff's evidence, defendant's evidence being disregarded.

7. Judgment ⇐650—Judgment denying petition for partial distribution of estate because petitioner did not prove adoption barred inquiry into question, on petition for final distribution (Civ. Code, § 230).

Judgment denying petition for partial distribution of estate on ground that petitioner did not prove that he had been adopted by decedent, under Civ. Code, § 230, barred inquiry into question, in hearing on petition for final distribution.

8. Prohibition ⇐17—Petitioners held entitled to prohibition preventing further proceedings on petition for distribution of estate, though objection was not made to subordinate court first.

Where minor child's rights to succeed to estate of deceased had been subject of controversy for nearly 20 years and questions presented were barred by former adjudication, petitioners held entitled to writ of prohibition to prevent further proceedings upon child's petition for distribution, even though objection to action of subordinate court was not first made to that court and overruled by it.

Application by Veronica C. Baird and others for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge, to prevent further proceedings on a petition for distribution. Writ granted.

Karl C. Partridge, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

R. P. Henshall, Robert R. Moody, C. M. Fickert, and E. A. Cunha, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of prohibition by Veronica C. Baird, Benjamin H. Baird, and Thomas R. Baird, who are named as devisees and legatees in the will of David J. Baird, deceased. The prayer of petitioners is that a petition for distribution of the estate of said decedent, filed by one David Jennings Baird, by his guardians, wherein it is alleged that said David Jennings Baird is the son and heir of decedent and entitled to his entire estate under the provisions of the laws of succession of this state, because not mentioned in the will of decedent, be ordered stricken from the files of the respondent superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and that said court and respondent Hon. T. I. Fitzpatrick, judge thereof, be restrained from further proceedings in the matter of hearing said petition. It is averred in the petition for distribution, which is annexed to the petition for the writ of prohibition herein sought, that David Jennings Baird, although born illegitimate was adopted and legitimated by the procedure prescribed in section 230, Civil Code.

The right of the minor child known as David Jennings Baird to succeed to the estate of David J. Baird, deceased, has been the subject of a controversy which has extended throughout a period of almost 20 years and has on several previous occasions engaged the attention of this court. Estate of Baird, 173 Cal. 617, 160 P. 1078; Id., 181 Cal. 742, 186 P. 351; Id., 182 Cal. 338, 188 P. 43; Id., 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974; Id., 195 Cal. 59, 231 P. 744; Id., 198 Cal. 490, 246 P. 324. Complete statements of the facts out of which the controversy arose appear in the opinions heretofore filed. We shall therefore briefly notice only those facts in the history of the litigation which we deem most pertinent to an understanding of the present inquiry.

David J. Baird died on November 25, 1908, leaving a will in which he neither provided for nor mentioned the minor, David Jennings Baird. On April 27, 1914, said minor, by his guardian, filed a petition for partial distribution of the estate of the decedent, in which he alleged that he was the son of decedent and his heir by virtue of an adoption and legitimation complying with all the requirements of section 230, Civil Code. His claim was opposed by the mother, brothers, and sister of decedent. Thereafter the court heard the petition sitting without a jury, the late Hon. James V. Coffey presiding, and found adversely to the claimant on all issues of adoption. The order denying the petition was reversed by this court on appeal because of the refusal of the probate judge to grant a jury trial on the issue of adoption. Estate of Baird, 173 Cal. 617, 160 P. 1078. The court expressly stated that it refrained from expressing an opinion regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to prove an adoption. After a jury trial, the matter again came before this court upon an appeal from an order distributing the entire estate of decedent to the claimant in pursuance of special verdicts of the jury finding for the claimant on all issues of adoption. This court reversed the lower court on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that the decedent had adopted said minor child. Estate of Baird, 182 Cal. 338, 188 P. 43. A second jury trial was had, which, as in the previous case, resulted in special verdicts favorable to the minor child on all issues of adoption. The order distributing the entire estate to said minor, which was entered in pursuance of the special verdicts of the jury, was likewise reversed by this court on appeal (Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974), the court being of the opinion, first, that the second appeal (Estate of Baird, 182 Cal. 338, 188 P. 43) established as the law of the case that all evidence adduced upon the second trial was insufficient to establish a legal adoption of the child, and that, since the evidence introduced upon the third trial was substantially the same as that introduced upon the former trial, the law of the case required a finding and judgment that an adoption had not taken place, and, secondly, that irrespective of the law of the case, the evidence introduced upon the third trial would not sustain a finding of adoption. This court thereupon ordered and directed the trial court to set aside the special verdicts and findings in favor of the child and to enter judgment for the appellants denying the petition for distribution upon the ground that the child was not the adopted son or heir of decedent. The trial court upon the going down of the remittitur entered judgment in accordance with the directions contained therein. It is upon the interpretation to be given this judgment, entered in obedience to the mandate of this court, that the rights of the applicants for the writ of prohibition in the present proceeding depend.

After the going down of the remittitur to the lower court, two notices of intention to move for a new trial were filed on behalf of said minor, David Jennings Baird. Both motions were granted. Upon appeal to this court the order granting the motions was reversed on April 23, 1926. On August 18, 1926, Veronica C. Baird and I. I. Brown, as executors of the estate of David J. Baird, deceased, filed their final account and petition for final distribution. The petition was set for hearing on August 30, 1926. On August 28, 1926, said minor, David Jennings Baird, filed a petition for distribution to him of the estate of said decedent. When the petition of the executors came on for hearing on August 30, the court, after hearing the account, continued the hearing on the executors' petition for distribution to September 20, 1926, and set the petition of said minor child for hearing on said date. Veronica C. Baird, decedent's mother, and Benjamin H. Baird and Thomas R. Baird, his brothers, all of whom are named as legatees and devisees in decedent's will, thereupon filed the petition for writ of prohibition now before us with the object of restraining further proceedings for the consideration of the petition of said minor child for distribution. The petition for distribution does not differ in material respects from the petition considered by this court on the four former appeals. In each the petitioner claims to be the legitimated son and heir of decedent by virtue of an adoption complying with the requirements of section 230, Civil Code.

[1] It is contended on behalf of said minor child that the judgment entered on April 22, 1924, in obedience to the mandate of this court (Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974), is not an adjudication on the merits of the claim of adoption which finally and conclusively determined that said minor child was not the legitimated son or heir of decedent, but merely a judgment of nonsuit, and hence not a bar to an inquiry into the question of heirship in a subsequent proceeding such as that here sought to be restrained. Even though the claimant's right to file the petition for distribution and to compel a hearing thereon be conceded, it seems extremely doubtful whether any benefit will result to him from an insistence on these rights. Although the judgment be a mere nonsuit and not a binding determination that an adoption did not take place, as a nonsuit it is, nevertheless, an adjudication that the evidence offered upon the trial was insufficient to support a finding of adoption, and as such precludes the trial court from finding in a subsequent proceeding on the basis of the same or substantially similar evidence that an adoption did take place. 2 Freeman on Judgments, p. 1532. Upon each successive appeal in this matter it has been vigorously contended that the evidence offered differed sufficiently from that introduced upon previous trials to sustain a finding of adoption. In each case this court has ruled the evidence insufficient. Approximately 16 years elapsed between the date of decedent's death and the date when the notices of intention to move for a new trial were filed by the claimant with accompanying affidavits purporting to set forth newly discovered evidence, and the proceedings have been vigorously contested throughout. Counsel representing said minor make no suggestion that they are now prepared to offer evidence differing in legal effect from that heretofore presented. In the absence of such evidence, the prolongation of this proceeding would seem to be in vain, wasteful of the time of the courts, and involving useless expense to the state and to the litigants.

[2] We do not, however, deem the judgment of April 22, 1924, a judgment of nonsuit. The remittitur, in pursuance of which said judgment was entered, contains the following provision:

"It is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the decree of partial distribution of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco in the above-entitled cause be and the same is hereby reversed and the trial court is ordered and directed to set aside the special verdict and findings, and to enter judgment for appellants denying the petition for partial distribution upon the ground that respondent is not the adopted son or heir of the deceased."

The judgment entered by the lower court, after quoting the remittitur provided as follows:

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the hereinbefore mentioned special verdicts and findings be and the same are hereby vacated, annulled, and set aside, and the said petition for partial distribution of David Jennings Baird, a minor, is hereby denied."

[3-5] In advancing the argument that this judgment is a nonsuit and not a judgment on the merits finally concluding all controversy, counsel for said minor child rely upon certain language in the opinion rendered upon the third appeal (Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974), and in the opinion reversing the order granting the motions for a new trial made on behalf of said child (Estate of Baird, 198 Cal. 490, 246 P. 324). In the decision in volume 193 of our reports, which reversed the decree distributing the entire estate to the child, this court held that the trial court erred in denying both the motion for a nonsuit and the motion for a directed verdict, for the reason that all evidence offered on behalf of said minor at the trial, with all inferences properly deducible therefrom, was insufficient to establish an adoption. A judgment of nonsuit and a judgment upon a directed verdict resemble each other in that each is available to the defendant when the plaintiff fails to establish his case by all evidence introduced in support of his claim, but they differ in that a judgment of nonsuit does not bar a subsequent action upon the same cause while a judgment upon a directed verdict is considered a judgment upon the merits and makes an end of the litigation. 9 Cal. Jur. 547; 15 Cal. Jur. 131; 24 Cal. Jur. 913; 2 Freeman on Judgments, p. 1590; Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 P. 283; City and County of San Francisco v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 96 P. 281; Mohn v. Tingley, 191 Cal. 470, 217 P. 733. If the trial court had granted the motion for a nonsuit, the minor might thereafter have filed a new action and on the basis of different evidence have established an adoption; but, if the trial court had granted the motion for a directed verdict, the judgment upon said verdict would have operated as a bar to subsequent litigation of the claim of the minor. When it became apparent that the evidence introduced to establish the child's claim, viewed in the light most favorable to the child, was insufficient to establish a legal adoption, it was within the power of the trial court to either grant the motion for a nonsuit, and thereby terminate the pending proceeding with the right to the petitioner to commence a new action, or to grant the motion for a directed verdict, the judgment upon which would operate as a bar to future litigation of the same question. The court did neither, but, instead, submitted the case to the jury, which erroneously returned verdicts in the child's favor (upon which was entered the judgment which this court later held unsupported by the evidence. The petitioner's evidence being insufficient as a matter of law to sustain the special verdicts and the findings and judgment granting the prayer for distribution entered pursuant thereto, it was within the power of this court, on appeal, to direct the reversal of the judgment entered in the trial court and the entry of a judgment denying the petition for distribution which would operate as an adjudication upon the merits and bar further inquiry into the same subject of litigation—the adoption of said minor child. We are of the opinion that the direction given by this court was for the entry of such a judgment. The procedure adopted by this court reveals an obvious design and purpose to put an end to this litigation for all time. If the court had intended to permit the petitioner for distribution to relitigate his right to succeed to decedent's estate, it is reasonable to suppose that it would simply have reversed the case, as it had done upon the two previous appeals, and thus have afforded an opportunity for the re-examination of questions of fact upon a new trial.

If, after the court had erroneously denied both the motion for a nonsuit and the motion for a directed verdict, the jury, upon the submission of the case to it, had brought in verdicts against the petitioner for distribution on all issues of adoption instead of the verdicts in his favor as in fact rendered, it could not successfully be contended that a judgment entered upon such adverse verdicts would not have been a judgment on the merits barring future litigation. If the jury had been given instructions consistent with the law of the case as announced in the earlier decision (Estate of Baird, 182 Cal. 338, 188 P. 43), it could not, this court has held, legally have reached the conclusion on the basis of the evidence before it that an adoption had been made out. It was the intent of this court to direct the trial court to enter a judgment denying the petition of said minor child for distribution to him—which was the only judgment that could lawfully be given—and that the judgment thus entered should operate as an adjudication on the merits barring subsequent litigation, with the same legal effect as a judgment based upon verdicts of the jury adverse to said minor would have had.

It was not necessary to the reversal by this court of the order of the court below granting the motions for a new trial (Estate of Baird, 198 Cal. 490, 246 P. 324) that the judgments directed by this court to be entered should be a judgment of nonsuit in the strict sense, and when the decision is read in the light of the facts it becomes apparent that it was not the intention of this court to hold that said judgment was a judgment of nonsuit in the sense that it would not bar a subsequent inquiry into a question which had already been extensively litigated.

The trial court, in its order granting the motions for a new trial after judgment entered in pursuance of the mandate of this court, made the following statement:

"And in this regard the court in accordance with said section 657, C. C. P., doth further grant said motion for a new trial in addition upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify and sustain the verdict and the decision, and in this regard the court doth specify that, in its opinion and decision herein, certain testimony of certain witnesses who testified on behalf of the respondent is not believed by the court to be credible and true, and therefore that the decision herein is not sustained by the evidence."

[6] A motion for a nonsuit or directed verdict is based entirely on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence, defendant's evidence being disregarded when such motions are under consideration. When this court has declared, as it has in the instant case, that the state of the evidence was such as to warrant the granting of a motion for a nonsuit or directed verdict, it would be improper for the trial court after judgment on the merits for defendant to grant a new trial because of the insufficiency of defendant's evidence, although a motion for a nonsuit or directed verdict had not been made, or, having been made, had been erroneously denied as in the instant case. In such cases plaintiff must lose because of the insufficiency of his own evidence and not as a consequence of any evidence offered by those who oppose him. Since the adverse evidence is entirely disregarded, its alleged insufficiency cannot constitute a ground for granting a new trial.

[7, 8] It is also contended on behalf of said David Jennings Baird that the application herein for a writ of prohibition is premature. In this connection said minor relies on the frequently reiterated statements of this court to the effect that objection to the action of the subordinate court must be made to that court and overruled by it before a writ of prohibition may be sought from this court. McAneny v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 6, 87 P. 1020; Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 P. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192; Shriver v. Superior Court, 48 Cal. App. 576, 192 P. 124; Drew v. Superior Court, 43 Cal. App. 651, 185 P. 680; 21 Cal. Jur. 627. We are of the opinion that the writ of prohibition may be issued in the instant case without doing violence to this long-established rule of practice. The petition of said minor was filed on August 28, 1926, after the executors had filed their final account and petition for final distribution on August 18, 1926. When the petition of the executors came on for hearing on the day set, to wit, August 30, 1926, counsel representing the executors and counsel representing the minor were present in court. Counsel for the executors challenged the right of said minor to compel a consideration of his petition and requested the court to proceed with the hearing of the executors' petition, on the ground that the question of said minor's right to inherit from decedent had already been determined adversely to him. It was apparent upon the face of the minor's petition, which was before the court, that the sole question presented by the petition related to the minor's right to succeed to the estate of decedent by virtue of an adoption, under the provisions of section 230, Civil Code, and the former adjudication barred any inquiry into this question. The remarks of the court showed a familiarity with the proceedings. Despite the apparent lack of jurisdiction, the court set the petition for hearing on September 20, 1926. We deem it the wisest exercise of discretion to issue the writ.

We feel constrained to say that the order here made is the logical and inevitable effect of the several orders and judgments made and entered in the original proceeding and others which followed it. In other words, the law of the case, as heretofore settled, rules our action in this proceeding.

Let the peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed for.

CORATO v. CORATO'S ESTATE.
(Sac. 3649.)

Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1927.

1. Trusts $\Rightarrow$ 44(1)—Evidence held to support finding that plaintiff placed money in hands of deceased as trust fund for her benefit 20 years before death.

In action on claims against estate, evidence held sufficient to support finding that plaintiff had placed $600 in hands of deceased as trust fund, about 20 years before his death, to be held and managed by deceased for benefit of plaintiff.

2. Limitation of actions $\Rightarrow$ 50(2)—One managing deceased's boarding house, with agreement for compensation but with no arrangement for amount or time of payment, held not to have continuing contract (Civ. Code, § 2011).

One managing boarding house for deceased for 23 years, with agreement that she should be compensated but with no arrangement for amount or time of payment, can recover compensation from his estate only for 2 years immediately preceding his death, in view of statute of limitations and Civ. Code, § 2011, providing that servant's employment is presumed to be by month in absence of agreement.

3. Executors and administrators $\Rightarrow$ 221(3)—Insufficient will of deceased held admissible as recognition of plaintiff's claim against estate.

In action on claims against estate of deceased, introduction of evidence of insufficient will held not error, it being admissible as constituting recognition of plaintiff's claim.

4. Executors and administrators $\Rightarrow$ 451(1)—Submission of equitable issues to jury, in action on claims against estate, held not error, in view of stipulation.

Submission of equitable issues to jury, in action on claims against estate of deceased, held not error, in view of findings that equitable issues were submitted "by stipulation of the parties and by order of the court."

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by Matilda Corato against the estate of Joseph Corato, deceased, on claims against the estate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded, with directions.

Edwin L. Forster, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gumpert & Mazzer, of Stockton, for respondent.

SHENK, J. Joseph Corato died on or about the 3d day of October, 1922, in the county of San Joaquin, leaving estate therein. The plaintiff is the administratrix of said estate. On February 28, 1923, she filed two claims against the estate, which were rejected by the court. She then filed her complaint thereon in two counts. The first count was for the recovery of the sum of $600, with interest, alleged to have been placed in the hands of the deceased, in 1903, as a trust fund, to be held and managed by the deceased for the use and benefit of the plaintiff. The second count was for services alleged to have been rendered by the plaintiff to the deceased in the capacity of a housekeeper and as manager of a boarding and lodging house run by the deceased, which compensation it is alleged the deceased agreed to pay to the plaintiff at the termination of said services at or before his death. A demurrer to both counts was interposed, and we think properly overruled. On the denials of the answer and the special plea of the statute of limitations the cause was tried before the court sitting with a jury. As to the first count, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,322, being the principal sum of $600 and interest thereon from February 10, 1903. The court adopted the verdict, submitted concededly in an advisory capacity, made its findings, and rendered a judgment accordingly. As to the second cause of action, the jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $5,500 for services rendered continuously for 23 years prior to the death of the deceased, and a separate judgment was entered on that verdict. From such judgments an appeal is prosecuted on behalf of the estate, and the matters are submitted on a single record.

[1] The defendant urges the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings as to the first count and the verdict as to the second count. With reference to the first count, the court found that on or about February 10, 1903, the plaintiff deposited with the deceased the sum of $600, which was her sole and separate property; that it was understood and agreed by and between the plaintiff and the deceased that said sum of $600 be held in trust by the deceased for the plaintiff and be kept by the deceased as a depository thereof; that the deceased was to invest the same, and the proceeds derived therefrom was to be held by the deceased for the use and benefit of the plaintiff until the same should be demanded by the plaintiff; that the deceased invested said fund in property, the character and description of which is unknown to the plaintiff, and commingled said fund with his own property and belongings and neglected and failed to keep a correct or any account of said trust fund or its increase, and that the said fund cannot now be identified either in its original or substituted form; that the plaintiff did not demand the said sum or any part thereof prior to the death of deceased; and that the whole thereof with interest is due from the defendant to the plaintiff.

The evidence shows that Joseph Corato and Mary Corato were husband and wife from their marriage in 1897 until they were divorced in 1911. A few years after their marriage they separated and Mary Corato, with her young son, took up her residence at Sonora, in Tuolumne county. About 1897 a young uneducated woman, Matilda Nave, known in this litigation as Matilda Corato, came from Italy and lived with her brother in Stockton. She was industrious and frugal, and from her earnings in the course of a few years saved the sum of $600, which she placed with her brother, who secreted the money in a can which he kept for that purpose. After the lapse of a few years she met Corato, the deceased, who was operating an express business in Stockton, began to live with the deceased, and continued to live with him, apparently as his wife, until his death. No marriage was ever solemnized. At the solicitation of the deceased the said sum of $600 was delivered to him by the plaintiff. The evidence as to what transpired at the time of such delivery is clearly subject to two interpretations. It is the insistence of the defendant that the only interpretation which may be placed thereon is that the money was transferred to the deceased as a loan, and that if that be true the statute of limitations has long since run. The plaintiff contends that the evidence is subject to the construction that the money was transferred to the deceased with the understanding that he should hold the same for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, invest and reinvest the same as in his judgment seemed best, and account to the plaintiff on demand. There is evidence to the effect that the deceased agreed to take the money and pay the plaintiff interest thereon. There is also evidence that the deceased agreed to take the money and hold it for the plaintiff and to account to her for the benefits and profits to be gained from his management and control thereof. The jury and the trial judge placed on the evidence the interpretation most favorable to the plaintiff. A survey of the record satisfies us that the evidence is subject to such interpretation and is sufficient upon which to base the findings.

[2] The evidence in support of the claim set forth in the second cause of action discloses that soon after the plaintiff and the deceased met the deceased acquired a boarding and lodging house. The plaintiff undertook the management thereof, and with the co-operation of the deceased conducted the same for about 20 years. She cooked for the boarders, sometimes 20 in number, cleaned the house, made the beds, and did the washing and ironing. In fact, she appears to have done almost all of the work incident to the conduct of the boarding house. She continued to act in that capacity until the death of the deceased. At times the plaintiff would complain to the deceased of the difficulty of the work and of the necessity for assistance, whereupon the deceased would promise her that he would pay her for her work, that if she would continue he would pay her well and that she would be glad in the end if she should do so. These conversations would usually terminate with a statement on the part of the plaintiff:

"All right, I will work if you will pay me."

The evidence is abundant to support the conclusion that the deceased promised to pay the plaintiff for work that she had done and for work to be done in the future. The record, however, does not disclose when the payment for such services would be made, nor the amount thereof. The allegations of the second cause of action are similar to those alleged by the plaintiff in the case of Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, 188 P. 1034. It is insisted by respondents that the proof of the allegations in the present case is so similar to the proof in the Mayborne Case as to render that case controlling in the determination of this branch of the present appeal. It is insisted that the evidence in this case shows a continuing contract such as was disclosed in that case, the interpretation of which called for the following declaration by that court:

"We think there is no merit in the contention that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations. The services were continuous for a period of 20 years, and it is a fair inference that it was the intention or expectation that they should be rewarded when terminated. They did not cease until the death of Mr. Dutton. The case falls clearly within the rule announced in Krumb v. Campbell, 102 Cal. 370 (36 P. 664) [and other cases cited]. * * * They are all to the effect that where the contract is for an indefinite time and no time for payment is specified, the statute does not begin to run until the services end. Of course, the same rule applies to an express contract and to one implied by law."

The defendant, on the other hand, contends that the contract proved was not an entire contract based upon an entire consideration, but was a contract of employment where the consideration became due and payable from month to month, and that recovery on account thereof is barred except for 2 years immediately prior to the death of the deceased, if indeed, any compensation may be recovered at all. The holding of the court in the Mayborne Case is undoubtedly a correct statement of the law applicable to a situation there presented; that is, where it is understood, expressly or by reasonable implication, as was held in that case, that the compensation should be paid at the termination of the rendition of the services. It appeared in that case by the production of the will of the deceased, although the will was insufficient in form and could not be admitted to probate, that the deceased intended to compensate the plaintiff therein at the termination of her services at his death by leaving her property "for care and faithful services rendered." In the present case, it likewise appears that the deceased made a will in which the plaintiff was named as a beneficiary, and that this will was also insufficient in form and was not entitled to probate. But there is not in this will any indication of an intention to cause the bequest to constitute payment for services rendered. It also appears that the plaintiff herein repeatedly suggested to the deceased the matter of immediate payment, but was put off with the statement to the effect that he would pay her some time. The facts here presented would seem to bring the case within the provisions of section 2011 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"In the absence of any agreement or custom as to the term of service, the time of payment, or rate or value of wages, a servant is presumed to be hired by the month, at a monthly rate of reasonable wages, to be paid when the service is performed."

Here there was no agreement either expressly or by implication for the term of service, the time of payment, or rate or value of the services, and no custom on the subject was alleged or proved. In the Mayborne Case there was an implied agreement as to the time of payment, and said section 2011 would therefore have no application for the reason that the presumption of a hiring by the month would not then be present. We are of the opinion that, under the facts in the present case, the plaintiff was entitled to reasonable compensation from month to month as the services were performed, and that the statute of limitations has foreclosed a recovery for any period except during the 2 years immediately preceding the death of the deceased.

[3] The defendant urges as prejudicial error the introduction of evidence of the insufficient will of the deceased. Although insufficient as a will, we think it was admissible as constituting some recognition by the deceased of a claim upon him for services rendered by plaintiff and as corroboration of the plaintiff's claim that her services were not gratuitous.

[4] The defendant complains because the trial court submitted the equitable issues tendered by the first cause of action to a jury. The contention is without merit. The findings recite that, "By stipulation of the parties and by order of the court, the equitable issues presented in and by the first cause of action herein" were "submitted by the above-entitled court to the jury aforesaid for its advisory verdict."

Other points made, if discussed, would not lead to a different conclusion on these appeals. It should be said, however, that the alleged meretricious relation between the plaintiff and the deceased is deemed of no controlling significance under the facts here presented.

The judgment on the first cause of action, dated and filed December 31, 1923, is affirmed. As the record does not disclose the reasonable value of the services performed by the plaintiff during the 2 years prior to the death of the deceased, we may not properly find on that subject and modify the judgment accordingly, but as the defendant does not seriously contest the right of the plaintiff to recover for said 2-year period, if she is entitled to recover at all, it is ordered that the judgment on the second cause of action entered on November 15, 1923, be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause as to said second cause of action is remanded to the trial court with directions to ascertain the reasonable value of the services rendered by the plaintiff for the 2 years immediately preceding the death of the deceased and render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount so ascertained. Let each party bear one-half the aggregate costs on this appeal.

BAAR v. SMITH et al. (S. F. 12316.) ★

Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 19, 1927.

1. Quelling title $\S$ 38—In action to quiet title to corporate stock, defendants not claiming any interest therein are out of case (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 738, 739).

In action to quiet title to corporate stock under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 738, defendants not claiming or asserting any right, title, or interest in such property are out of case, in view of section 739.

2. Judgment $\S$ 251(1)—Jury $\S$ 13(5)—Decree ordering delivery of stock or payment of value held void in action to quiet title to corporate stock (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580, 738).

In action to quiet title to corporate stock under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 738, in which possession in defendants, conversion by them, or value of stock was not alleged, decree ordering delivery to plaintiff or payment of value held void as in excess of jurisdiction and violation of defendants' right to have issues of possession, value, and conversion tried by jury, in view of section 580.

3. Pleading $\S$ 432—Parties may submit issue without specific pleadings, or may introduce new matter in answer, and be estopped after judgment from complaining; "issue" (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580, 590).

Parties may voluntarily submit and try issue without specific pleadings, or may introduce new matter in answer, and thus be estopped from complaining thereafter after judgment; since "issue," in Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580, may be broader than complaint, in view of section 590.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Issue (In Practice).]

4. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 396(2)—In action to quiet title to corporate stock, statement in finding as to stipulation as to value before suit was filed held insufficient to introduce issue of possession and damages for detention without pleadings.

In action to quiet title to corporate stock, in which complaint was filed February 24, 1923, statement in findings that parties stipulated that value of stock on February 23, 1921, was certain amount is insufficient to introduce issue of possession and damages for detention with alternative of value of stock and damages, without pleadings.

5. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 396(2)—In action to quiet title to corporate stock, finding that it was under control of defendant held not to introduce issue of detinue or trover.

In action to quiet title to corporate stock, finding that it was under control of defendant and continued under his control after transfer to wife held not to introduce issue of detinue or trover by consent or by silence, since finding was consistent with claim of fraud urged by plaintiff.

6. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 505—Judgment may be collaterally attacked as to relief not justified by pleadings.

Though court has jurisdiction of case, judgment may be collaterally attacked where it had no jurisdiction under pleadings of question which judgment assumes to determine or power to grant relief it assumes to afford; and prayer for general relief will not aid situation.

7. Action $\hookrightarrow$ 44—Trover and detinue cannot both be made basis of relief in one judgment.

Detinue and trover are inconsistent and cannot both be made basis of relief on same set of facts and in one judgment.

8. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 460(1)—General execution cannot issue pending appeal in action to quiet title to corporate stock, on judgment for delivery or payment of value, where defendant was not in possession (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 942, 943, 949).

General execution cannot issue pending appeal in action to quiet title to corporate stock, on judgment for delivery of stock or payment of value, where defendant was not in possession, since Code Civ. Proc. §§ 942, 943, are inapplicable, and under section 949 filing of notice of appeal stays execution.

9. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 460(2)—Statute relative to appeals from money judgments held inapplicable to alternative judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 942).

In case of alternative judgment, Code Civ. Proc. § 942, relative to appeals from judgment directing payment of money, and whether they stay execution, is inapplicable.

10. Execution $\hookrightarrow$ 7—General execution cannot issue on judgment for delivery of corporate stock or payment of value, which would confer on sheriff power to determine whether alternatives have been complied with.

General execution cannot issue pending appeal in action to quiet title to corporate stock, on judgment for delivery of stock or payment of value, since such execution would confer on sheriff power to determine whether previous alternatives had been complied with.

11. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 460(2)—Where appeal stayed execution of mandatory provision for return of corporate stock, it also stayed execution on ancillary money judgment.

Where appeal stayed execution on mandatory provision of judgment for return of stock to plaintiff in action to quiet title to corporate stock, it also stayed execution on ancillary money judgment in case of failure to return stock.

In Bank.

Suit to quiet title to corporate stock by L. Baar against F. M. Smith and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On application for supersedeas to restrain the enforcement of the judgment pending the appeal. Writ granted.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, Louis W. Bennett, of Oakland, and Charles W. Byrnes, and James F. Peck, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Cyril Appel and R. P. Henshall, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an application by the appellants, Evelyn Ellis Smith, F. M. Smith, and West End Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation, for a supersedeas to restrain the enforcement of the judgment in favor of the respondent, L. Baar, by an execution thereon pending their appeal therefrom. This relief is sought upon the ground that so much of said judgment as forms the basis for said execution is coram non judge and void, and also that their duly perfected appeal ipso facto stays the enforcement of the judgment in the respect in which it is about to be enforced without the giving by them of any bond to stay proceedings. There is no dispute as to the material facts.

Since the filing of this application the record, which includes the evidence as a part of the judgment roll, has been lodged in this court, and we have considered the same in disposing of this proceeding. For a determination of the question presented to us, it is necessary to give some consideration to the issues tendered by and litigated in the cause.

The amended complaint, filed February 24, 1923, after averring the corporate existence of the two defendant companies, and the representative capacity of certain other defendants, proceeds as follows:

"That plaintiff is now, and for some time past has been the owner of and entitled to the possession of 819,632 shares of the capital stock of the West End Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation."

Then follow the usual allegations of a complaint to quiet title, alleging that all defendants, save and alone the West End Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation, claim some right, title, or interest in and to said corporate stock adverse to the plaintiff, and that such claims are without right and said defendants have not any title to or interest whatsoever in said stock or any part thereof. Then follows the allegation that on the 8th day of July, 1913, almost ten years prior to the commencement of this action, said stock stood on the books of said corporation in the name of B. F. Edwards, giving the number of each certificate and the number of shares represented by it. It is then alleged as follows:

"That plaintiff has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to allege as to whether or not said shares of stock still remain in the name of said B. F. Edwards, or in whose name the same now stand on the books of said defendant West End Consolidated Mining Company, or in whose name certificates therefor are now issued and outstanding."

Then follows the usual prayer that defendants be required to set forth the nature of their claims and that it be decreed and adjudged that defendants, or either of them, have no right, estate, or interest whatever in or to said shares of stock, or any part thereof, and that the title of plaintiff thereto is good and valid; that defendants be forever enjoined and debarred from asserting any claim whatever in and to said stock adverse to plaintiff, "and for such other and further relief as to this honorable court may seem meet and proper, and for costs of suit."

It will be observed that as to defendant West End Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation, no allegation whatsoever appears that it in any way asserts any claim to said corporate stock adverse to plaintiff or otherwise. However, said defendant corporation filed its answer herein denying the ownership or right of the plaintiff to possession of said stock and further pleaded the statute of limitations, but asserted no claim of any kind whatsoever on its own behalf, or on behalf of any other person or corporation to said stock or any part thereof.

The defendant F. M. Smith answered denying the ownership in plaintiff of said capital stock or any part thereof and pleading the statute of limitations, but at the same time pleading a disclaimer as follows:

"Denies that the defendant, F. M. Smith, claims any right, title and interest in and to, or in or to, the stock alleged in plaintiff's amended complaint, or any part thereof."

The defendant Evelyn Ellis Smith likewise answered denying the ownership of plaintiff in and to said stock or any part thereof, denying on information and belief knowledge as to whether or not the shares of stock still remained on the books of the corporation in the name of B. F. Edwards or in whose name the same stood, pleading the statute of limitations and in addition thereto alleging as follows:

"Defendant Evelyn Ellis Smith alleges that she is the owner of and entitled to the possession of the shares of the capital stock of the West End Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation, described in the amended complaint."

All other defendants either filed disclaimers or made no defense. With the pleadings in this condition the cause went to trial, without submission to the court expressly, by inference, or otherwise, of any other or different issues, and without any evidence applicable to any other issue or issues and the cause thereafter proceeded to judgment. The attorney for plaintiff at the beginning of the trial explained the issues to the court and the relation of appellants thereto in the following language:

"Mr. Henshall: No one has any standing in this court except Mr. Harrison. This is an action to quiet title. All of the defendants, other than Mr. Harrison's clients, do not assert any interest in the property. That being the case, they are entirely without any standing in this court. The only person who has a right to be heard is Mr. Harrison's client, Evelyn Ellis Smith. * * *

"This is an action to quiet title, and the rule in regard to actions to quiet titles is very simple. You can join anybody in the world you want. The law permits that, for obvious reasons. If one of the defendants—if any person who is joined as a defendant has no interest whatever in the controversy, all he has to do is one of two things: He can default or he can disclaim any interest or claim in it, and no judgment of costs is to be taken against him. If he wants to answer, however, he has got to assert an interest or he has not got any standing in court whatever. * * * The answer of F. M. Smith is a legitimate answer, and the only legitimate answer along this line, in my humble opinion in this case. The defendant Smith denies that he has got any interest in the stock, so he is out. He is entirely out of the case. It is true that he goes on and denies ownership in the plaintiff, but we can regard that as immaterial. It is true that while he is president of the company, he says in his answer that he does not know whether the stock stood of record in the books at all. But that is immaterial. The defendant Smith says he has got no interest in the stock, and he is out entirely.

"The defendant Edwards not only defaulted, but expressly disclaimed, so he is out. We need not concern ourselves with him. The West End Consolidated Mining Company has no interest in the stock. It was joined, of course, your honor, so that one of two things might happen. In the first place, it was a proper party as a corporation. In the second place, it might, under certain conditions be—I withdraw that. It has no interest. It does not assert any interest in the stock. It simply says the plaintiff is not the owner, and it passes out along with the others.

"The defendant Evelyn Ellis Smith filed a proper answer, because she alleged ownership herself, and she denied practically all the other things in the complaint, even denial for want of information of this situation with regards to B. F. Edwards."

The court thereafter made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and made and caused to be entered its decree in favor of plaintiff and against appellants, the substance of which decree was similar, in all respects, to the usual decree quieting title and enjoining defendants from asserting any claim to the property adversely to the plaintiff, and enjoining also the transferring, conveying, or disposing of or incumbering of said stock; also enjoining and restraining the voting thereof by any person other than plaintiff; also containing a similar injunction respecting collection, payment, and receipt of dividends; also decreeing to plaintiff costs of suit against each of the appellants. Then appears in said decree the following anomalous language:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed: That the defendants Evelyn Ellis Smith, F. M. Smith, and any other defendant herein, in whose name said shares of stock are now issued, be and they are hereby required to indorse and deliver said stock to the plaintiff, L. Baar. That in the event the said Evelyn Ellis Smith and F. M. Smith fail to indorse and deliver the said stock certificates, above described, or certificates issued in lieu thereof, to the plaintiff herein, or are unable for any reason to do so, that said stock certificates, representing said 819,632 shares of the capital stock of the West End Consolidated Mining Company, are hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed to be canceled, and in such an event the defendant West End Consolidated Mining Company be and it is hereby directed to issue and deliver to the plaintiff, L. Baar, a new certificate for 819,632 shares of the capital stock of the West End Consolidated Mining Company, and if for any reason a delivery of said 819,632 shares of stock cannot be had, that the plaintiff, L. Baar, do have and recover of and from the defendants Evelyn Ellis Smith, F. M. Smith, and West End Consolidated Mining Company the sum of $408,316, the stipulated value thereof; and in the event that said defendants fail to deliver any part of said 819,632 shares, then the plaintiff have and recover of and from the defendants Evelyn Ellis Smith, F. M. Smith and the West End Consolidated Mining Company the sum of 50 cents per share for each and every share of stock, so undelivered."

The decree closes with the following language:

"This decree is rendered and is directed to be entered herein as and for a final decree in this action, but this court reserves to itself jurisdiction over plaintiff and over each of the defendants herein for the purpose of making any and all appropriate orders for the purpose of enforcing this decree and for the protection of the rights of the plaintiff awarded to him by this final decree."

The record shows that on November 10, 1926, plaintiff without order of court sued out an execution on said judgment, which said execution recited the above-quoted provisions of said judgment and directed the sheriff to secure possession of said stock and deliver same to plaintiff, and if this could not be done that said execution be levied upon the real and personal property of said three defendants sufficient to satisfy said alternative money judgment of $408,316, with interest and costs, or such lesser sum as might be due under said decree if a pro rata only of said stock be found and delivered to said plaintiff. On November 12, 1926, the defendants F. M. Smith, Evelyn Ellis Smith, and West End Consolidated Mining Company lodged in the court below a notice of appeal from said judgment and the whole thereof. Thereafter, on the 24th day of November, 1926, said defendants filed herein this petition for writ of supersedeas.

It should here be pointed out that neither the amended complaint nor the answer of any defendant alleges that the plaintiff was ever in possession of said corporate stock at any time or place. Neither is there any allegation that either of the defendants was in the possession of said stock at the time of the filing of the complaint or amended complaint. There is no allegation as to the value of said stock at any time or at all. In other words, there is no proper allegation whatever which would sustain a complaint for possession of the stock, an action known at common law as detinue or replevin. There is likewise no allegation as to the conversion of said stock by either of the defendants, nor is there any allegation as to the damage suffered had such conversion taken place. That is, there are no allegations whatever to sustain the action known at common law as trover. Indeed, an examination of the complaint excludes necessarily any intent by plaintiff to claim that he ever had possession of said property or that said defendants or either of them then had possession of it. The answers of appellants likewise tender no issue whatsoever that would sustain relief under our system of pleading in either or any of the actions known at common law as detinue, replevin or trover. In other words, in no one of the pleadings is the issue as to possession, value, damages, or conversion brought into the case. An examination of the proceedings on the trial itself indicates that not only were these issues not tendered, but no evidence to sustain either or any of them was introduced, and, as above noted, they were by necessary implication excluded on the trial of the cause by the statements of counsel for plaintiff.

[1, 2] Under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure a suit may now properly be brought in the nature of a suit to quiet title to determine adverse claims to personal property. This is essentially an action in equity, but in giving said remedy the Code has, to avoid confusion, specifically preserved by said section the right to a trial by jury on such law issues as those described above, and in so doing uses the following language:

"And provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive a party of the right to a jury trial in any case where, by the law, such right is now given."

In short, before judgment can be given for the possession of the property, the subject of this action, or for its value in case delivery thereof cannot be had or for damages for its conversion, if such has taken place, the defendants are entitled to have those issues actually tried and determined and, if they desire, tried by a jury. As to the defendant mining company, no cause of action whatsoever for any purpose was alleged against it. It neither claimed nor asserted any right, title, or interest whatsoever in said property. Under section 739 of the Code of Civil Procedure not even so much as a judgment for costs could be legally rendered against it. This was conceded by counsel for respondent, who at the beginning of the trial used this language:

"It has no interest. It does not assert any interest in the stock. It simply says the plaintiff is not the owner, and it passes out along with the others."

As to the defendant F. M. Smith, the same observation is true. He specifically disclaimed all interest in this property, and the language of counsel himself was that said defendant "is out entirely."

This leaves only the situation created by the claim of Evelyn Ellis Smith in her answer that she is the owner of and entitled to the possession of said stock. As pointed out above, the plaintiff neither alleges nor does said defendant in her answer claim to be in possession of said stock or any part thereof, and the findings not only fail to locate possession in her, but expressly state that the present possession of said stock is undisclosed, but that she had possession of same when suit was filed; that since that time "said defendants have not preserved said stock intact, but have allowed, without the consent of the plaintiff and with knowledge of his ownership, reissues and transfers of the same to be made. * * *

It likewise appears from the allegations of the petition herein, which are undenied, that neither of said appellants has possession of any of said stock nor any part thereof, nor have either or any of them power to make a present delivery thereof. Therefore the insertion of the above-quoted language in said decree in view of the state of the pleadings and record herein brings to the foreground the question for solution in this proceeding.

Petitioners assert that said language and said provisions of said decree were extraneous matter erroneously inserted therein in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and in violation of their constitutional right to a trial of such issues before the entry of such judgment; that said provisions undertake to dispose of legal issues that were neither tendered by the pleadings nor passed upon by the court; and that so much of said judgment is null and void and subject to collateral attack.

To this contention of petitioners we must give our unstinted indorsement, for the insertion of these provisions is an open challenge to our entire system of procedure. If such provisions of a judgment could be sustained, pleadings could be dispensed with altogether. A litigant under such laxity could receive benefits or injuries that he could not expect or anticipate until the chancellor, without restraint of any kind, announced the length of his own foot.

Section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure furnishes the stabilizer for the situation confronting us. It reads:

"The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but, in any other case, the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue."

In Johnson v. Polhemus, 99 Cal. 240, 245, 33 P. 908, 909, construing this section, the court said:

"In the section last quoted our Code adheres very closely to the rules in equity; that is to say, in case of default the relief is confined to the relief demanded in the complaint, as was the rule under a prayer for special relief in equity, while in other cases it is extended to granting relief similar to that granted under a prayer for general relief in the chancery courts. There being an answer in the case, the right of appellants to recover upon the agreement depends, not upon the prayer of their complaint, but upon the scope of that pleading and the issues made, or which might have been made under it."

To the same effect, see also, Mock v. Santa Rosa, 126 Cal. 330, 58 P. 826, and McKesson v. Hepp, 62 Cal. App. 620, 217 P. 802.

The court in Johnson v. Polhemus, supra, at page 244 (33 P. 909), defines the equity practice in vogue prior to the Codes as follows:

"Under the equity practice in vogue before the adoption of the Codes, the bill usually contained a prayer for that particular relief to which the complainant considered himself entitled. The usual practice was also to include a prayer for general relief. The object of the latter was to meet cases in which the plaintiff had mistaken the relief to which he was entitled, as under it he was regarded as entitled to any relief agreeable to the case made by the bill. Story on Equity Pleading, § 49. If he asked particular relief only he was restricted to his prayer by the decree. A court of equity would not, however, even under a prayer for general relief, permit a party to go beyond the general scope of the case made by the bill, and would not ordinarily permit a bill framed for one purpose answer for another and distinct purpose, especially if the defendant might be surprised or prejudiced thereby. Story on Equity Pleadings, §§ 41, 42."

[3] The word "issue" as used in this Code section is broader than the complaint where the answer enlarges the same by introducing new matter. Section 590, Code Civ. Proc., and Rogers v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 132 Cal. 9, 64 P. 95. It is also true that the parties may voluntarily submit and try an issue without any specific pleadings and thus be estopped from complaining thereat after judgment. Poladori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 375, 377, 48 P. 325; Mock v. Santa Rosa, supra; Sidler v. Bakersfield, 43 Cal. App. 349, 185 P. 194; and McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 163, 64 P. 278. But no such exceptions exist in this cause; the bare question of ownership and right of possession of plaintiff against the same claim by defendant Evelyn Ellis Smith were the issues, and no other issues were litigated in any manner whatsoever. So much of a judgment that exceeds the issues as thus defined and determines issues not tried or involved is coram non jure and void.

[4] The statement in the findings that by stipulation of parties the value of the stock in suit was on February 23, 1921, at least 50 cents per share cannot be held sufficient to introduce by consent and without pleadings the issue of possession and damages for detention, with the alternative of value of stock and damages, for the reason, first, that the value on February 23, 1921, is no criterion of the value of the stock on June 22, 1925, and particularly is this true of mining stock. Moreover, this evidence was consistent with and in support of respondent's claim of title and must be held to have been introduced in support of this issue.

In Crescent Lumber Co. v. Larson, 166 Cal. 168, 171, 135 P. 502, 503, we have this language:

"But here the pleadings raised no issue regarding security for the debt, and the finding, being entirely outside of the issues, must be disregarded. Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 469; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 279; Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 221, 26 P. 80. The rule just stated is subject to the qualification that a finding may be considered where the issue, though not formally raised by the pleadings, was tried in the court below without objection. Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 47 P. 60; Sprigg v. Barber, 122 Cal. 573, 55 P. 419. But this exception has no application to the case at bar. It is true that evidence of the execution of a deed by Larson to plaintiff's agent was introduced in evidence by the defendant without objection, and that it was also shown that at the same time the said agent had given Larson a paper agreeing to reconvey the land to him if he should, within ninety days, pay a certain sum, which was, in fact, the balance due on the note. But the defendant's contention was that the deed was made and accepted as payment of the note and the evidence introduced by plaintiff in this connection was offered for the purpose of rebutting the showing of payment. All of the evidence on this point was relevant to the issue of payment, which was in the case, and its introduction cannot therefore, be regarded as authorizing the determination of some other issue not presented by the pleadings. Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 P. 299."

[5] The above-quoted authority is also applicable to the claim that the findings show that the stock was under the control of defendant F. M. Smith, and after transfer to his wife continued to be under his dominion and control. This finding is consistent with and an integral part of the claim of fraud urged by plaintiff, and is not in any sense the introduction by consent or by silence of the issue of detinue or trover.

In the case of Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 282 (23 L. Ed. 914), the Supreme Court of the United States uttered the following appropriate language:

"Though the court may possess jurisdiction of a cause, of the subject-matter, and of the parties, it is still limited in its modes of procedure, and in the extent and character of its judgments. It must act judicially in all things, and cannot then transcend the power conferred by the law. If, for instance, the action be upon a money demand, the court, notwithstanding its complete jurisdiction over the subject and parties, has no power to pass judgment of imprisonment in the penitentiary upon the defendant. If the action be for a libel or personal tort, the court cannot order in the case a specific performance of a contract. If the action be for the possession of real property, the court is powerless to admit in the case the probate of a will. Instances of this kind show that the general doctrine stated by counsel is subject to many qualifications. The judgments mentioned, given in the cases supposed, would not be merely erroneous, they would be absolutely void; because the court in rendering them would transcend the limits of its authority in those cases."

This language is approved by our own court in Long v. Superior Court, 102 Cal. 449, 452, 36 P. 807.

Again, in Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 23 (25 L. Ed. 538), the Supreme Court of the United States used the following language:

"We do not overlook the point that there must be jurisdiction to give the judgment rendered, as well as to hear and determine the cause. If a magistrate having authority to fine for assault and battery should sentence the offender to be imprisoned in the penitentiary, or to suffer the punishment prescribed for homicide, his judgment would be as much a nullity as if the preliminary jurisdiction to hear and determine had not existed."

Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) pp. 737-739, § 355, reads as follows:

"* * * In some instances courts have undertaken to decide questions not involved in the suit or action before them and to grant relief therein; and their judgments have been assailed for that reason, and to the extent to which they departed from the matters embraced within the record they have been denied effect. A court is limited in its determination to the matters properly before it. Ordinarily it has no authority to pass upon questions not involved and in respect to which its jurisdiction has not been invoked. For courts cannot ex mero motu set themselves in motion, nor have they power to decide questions except such as are presented by the parties in their pleadings. What is decided within the issues is coram judice; anything beyond is void, unless the parties voluntarily try an issue outside the pleadings. A judgment outside the issues is not a mere irregularity, but is extrajudicial and invalid. The foundation of the rule that judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction are attended with presumptions of verity is the fact that the parties have been properly brought before the court and given an opportunity to be heard upon the matters determined. But the foundation falls, and the rule of verity ceases, when it appears that the judgment adjudicated matters beyond the issues and upon which the parties were not heard."

[6] Our own court has either specifically or inferentially decided the same issue many times. See Bachman v. Sepulveda, 39 Cal. 688, 690; Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Cal. 441, 17 P. 442; Noonan v. Nunan, 76 Cal. 44, 18 P. 98; Carpentier v. Brenham, 50 Cal. 552; Long v. Superior Court, supra; Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 46 P. 458; Simmons v. Simmons, 166 Cal. 438, 441, 442, 137 P. 20; Jacobsen v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 319, 219 P. 986, 29 A. L. R. 1399; and Tonningsen v. Odd Fellows Cemetery Association, 60 Cal. App. 568, 213 P. 710, where the court uses this language:

"Although a court may have jurisdiction of a case, yet, if it appears from the record that it did not have jurisdiction to enter the particular decree and judgment, it may be collaterally attacked."

The court, in the latter case, quoted approvingly 15 Ruling Case Law, § 327, as follows:

"A judgment may be collaterally attacked where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter of the action but did not have jurisdiction of the question which the judgment assumes to determine or power to grant the particular relief which it assumes to afford to the litigants."

The prayer for general relief will not aid the situation, for in such case the relief cannot exceed the issue presented by the pleadings or voluntarily submitted to the court and tried by it. Mr. Freeman again disposes of this question as follows (Freeman on Judgments [5th Ed.] p. 739, § 355):

"A prayer for general relief authorizes the court to grant any relief within the issues presented by the allegations of the bill of complaint and a judgment, though departing from the specific relief asked, if within the facts pleaded, is not void for lack of jurisdiction. But a prayer for general relief does not confer jurisdiction to determine matters beyond the issues presented by the allegations or the case, especially where there is no answer or defense pleading."

[7] Here not only is the common-law action of detinue or trover not included within the pleadings or within the issues submitted to the court, but these issues themselves are inconsistent and could not both be made the basis of relief in one judgment, for in Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192, 195, we have this language:

"The distinction between this action and one to recover damages for the wrongful conversion of personal property, is just as broad as that between the common-law actions of detinue and trover. A good pleader, under the Code, would never confound the two causes of action. One lies for the recovery of the property itself, with damages for the wrongful detention of it, the other for the recovery of damages for the wrongful conversion of it. In the former case the judgment must be for the possession of the property, if a delivery can be had, or for the value thereof, if a delivery cannot be had, with damages for the detention, in either case."

Again, in Richards v. Morey, 133 Cal. 437, 65 P. 886, we have this language:

"This is an action to recover possession of personal property which, it is alleged, the defendant took against the will of the plaintiffs, and now detains from their possession. But the finding shows that the property sought to be recovered was not in the possession of the defendant when the action was commenced, nor within his power to deliver, and therefore said finding would not have sustained a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the delivery of the buildings, or for the value of them in case a delivery could not be had."

While under our system there is but one cause of action and the name by which it is called is not determinative, nevertheless the principles that apply to conversion are distinct from those that apply to detinue or replevin, and the same set of facts that will support the one will not support the other. Cal. Packing Cor. v. Stone, 64 Cal. App. 488, 492, 222 P. 193.

[8] There are other reasons which forbid respondent to sue out an execution in this case. The findings specifically show that Evelyn Ellis Smith is not in the present possession of said stock and was not at the time said judgment was rendered; therefore it would be impossible for her to comply with any order requiring her to deliver such stock to plaintiff; hence, section 943 of the Code of Civil Procedure would be inapplicable. See Rohrbacker v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 631, 78 P. 22; Zappettini v. Buckles, 167 Cal. 27, 138 P. 696; Loudon v. Loudon, 63 Cal.

App. 204, 218 P. 442; and Halsted v. First Savings Bank, 173 Cal. 605, 160 P. 1075.

[9] There is no serious contention that this judgment is within the provisions of section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for in the case of an alternative judgment it has been specially held by this court that section 942 of said Code is inapplicable. U. S. Fidelity Co. v. More, 155 Cal. 415, 101 P. 302, and Churchill v. More, 7 Cal. App. 767, 96 P. 108. Since neither section 942 nor section 943 is applicable to the case, it must of necessity follow that section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies, and the filing of a notice of appeal stays execution upon the judgment.

[10] There is a third insuperable difficulty standing between respondent and the right to an execution in this case. This judgment has two or three alternatives that must be complied with before a money judgment could in any case take effect: (1) There is a command to any defendant in whose name the stock may stand to indorse and deliver the certificates. (2) There is an alternative that in the event no one of the defendants can or will indorse the certificates and deliver them to plaintiff, then it is adjudicated that said certificates be canceled, with a mandatory direction that the corporation issue new certificates to plaintiff for the stock in question. (3) If for any cause, and only if, the certificates are not indorsed, or if the corporation does not comply with the mandatory decree, then a penalty of 50 cents for each share not obtained by plaintiff, or of $408,316, if none are obtained, is assessed against the corporation and the two individual petitioners.

It will be seen that an execution such as the one issued in this case confers upon the sheriff judicial power to ascertain, rightly or wrongly, whether the previous alternatives have been complied with, and if he adjudges that they have not been complied with, he assumes the power to levy upon the real and personal property of defendants, two of whom do not claim any interest in the stock and none of whom have had their day in court on the matter adjudicated. A general execution where there was a previous alternative has been held improper. Freeman v. Donohoe, 188 Cal. 170, 174, 204 P. 593.

[11] Then, too, the judgment is not one giving the relief usually had in a suit for possession of personal property, but goes much further. It not only orders any defendant having possession of the stock to deliver it to plaintiff, but it directs in case of failure or inability to comply with this order that the corporation cancel the stock certificates upon its books in the name of whomsoever they may be and issue new certificates and deliver them to the plaintiff, and then, after failure to get both these sets of relief, is the money judgment against any of the defendants to be operative, but not otherwise. It will thus be seen that the money judgment is clearly ancillary and incidental only to the mandatory directions to which it is subjoined. The following language in Foster v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279, 284, 47 P. 58, seems particularly appropriate:

"The injunction, in the judgment, against the interference with Smith's right to act as a director was but ancillary to the judgment determining that he had such right, and was merely incidental thereto. Although preventive in form, it was, in effect, mandatory, as it required Foster and the other directors to recognize Smith as one of their number, and to refuse to recognize Lilienthal. As that portion of the judgment declaring that Smith was elected was suspended by the appeal, the injunctive portion of the judgment, being merely incidental thereto, was also suspended, and the power of the court to enforce any portion of its judgment by inflicting punishment for its violation was stayed. An enforcement of this portion of the judgment would operate to carry the decree into effect, and would change the relative positions of the parties from those existing at the time the decree was entered, and might render a reversal of the judgment entirely ineffectual."

See, also, Mark v. Superior Court, 129 Cal. 1, 61 P. 436, Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 P. 580, and Stewart v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 543, 35 P. 156, 563. The appeal from these mandatory provisions of the decree will therefore necessarily stay execution upon the incidental and subordinate provisions thereof.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

In re McKELVEY. (Civ. 5286.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 19, 1927.

1. Attorney and client $\S$ 61—Application of disbarred attorney for reinstatement should be denied, where applicant has defeated disbarment by practicing indirectly.

Application of attorney disbarred from practice for reinstatement should be denied, where it appears petitioner has been practicing indirectly, thus evading legal effect of disbarment.

2. Attorney and client $\S$ 61—Employment of disbarred attorney as law office assistant at small salary, and giving advice to employer's clients on small matters, held not to prevent reinstatement.

In disbarred attorney's application for reinstatement, evasion of disbarment by indirect practice of law, preventing reinstatement held not shown by fact that attorney was engaged at small salary as office assistant in law office, giving advice to employer's clients on matters of slight importance.

3. Attorney and client 61—Attorney, disbarred for conspiracy to violate mails, held entitled to reinstatement after 10-year period on positive showing of present good character.

Attorney, 67 years of age, disbarred after conviction on charge of conspiracy to violate United States mails, held entitled to reinstatement after 10-year period, in view of positive evidence as to present good character, though offense involved moral turpitude.

Application by Charles S. McKelvey for reinstatement and admission to practice law. Report of the board of bar examiners adverse to applicant, and he moves for admission notwithstanding the report. Application granted.

See, also, 247 P. 1114.

William M. Morse, Jr., Dana R. Weller, and W. H. Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Kenyon F. Lee, of Los Angeles, opposed.

CONREY, P. J. By order entered herein on May 17, 1926, the application of petitioner was referred to the board of bar examiners, with the direction that the board take evidence concerning the moral qualifications of the applicant; that the evidence taken, together with the findings of the board as such referee, upon the question whether or not the applicant is possessed of such moral qualifications as to entitle him to reinstatement, be filed herein. Matter of McKelvey (Cal. App.) 247 P. 1114. Thereafter a hearing was had and evidence produced, which is now on file, together with a report of the board of examiners. In that report the board presented a summary of the evidence, together with a finding or conclusion that "applicant is not of good moral character in the sense in which that phrase is used when applied to attorneys at law, and he is not a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the privileges of the office of an attorney at law."

After said report was filed, and pursuant to notice, the applicant presented his motion that the applicant be admitted to practice, notwithstanding said adverse report.

Passing without comment those parts of the notice of motion which only relate to procedure, the court will proceed directly to the principal ground of the motion, which, as stated, is "that all of the evidence adduced shows that applicant is of good moral character and competent to carry on the practice of law before the courts of this state." At the time when the order of reference was made the court in effect determined that the applicant possessed the necessary mental qualifications. The case is one in which an applicant heretofore disbarred after conviction in a federal court on a charge of conspiracy to violate the mails of the United States, and who has remained thus disbarred for a period now approaching ten years, should now be readmitted, and permitted again to practice law in this state.

The petition for reinstatement filed herein on the 28th day of December, 1925, is accompanied by verified statements of numerous persons, which in various terms attest the present good moral character of the petitioner and declare the belief of those persons that, if restored to his right to practice law, the applicant will be a credit to the legal profession. The persons furnishing these statements include William F. Palmer, W. S. Knott, W. H. Anderson, Ward Chapman, and other members of the bar, who would not, we assume, make such statements unless they believed that the petitioner is a man of good moral character. It further appears that after his conviction petitioner received a pardon from the President.

The report of the board of examiners states that none of the letters or affidavits on file with the application were offered or received in evidence before the board. The matter was submitted to the board on the oral testimony of eleven witnesses on behalf of the petitioner and one witness, Mrs. Julia Westover, on behalf of the Los Angeles county bar association. The witnesses for petitioner were C. C. Sinclair, J. C. Porter, Charles J. Kelly, J. C. Frank, Arthur Lasher, C. S. Mauk, J. Everett Brown, Curt E. Miller, W. H. Anderson, William M. Morse, and Charles S. McKelvey.

The following statements of fact are taken from the summary made in the report of the testimony received by the board:

First. That, after his disbarment, the petitioner, who is a mining engineer, remained away from Los Angeles about 1½ years. Since his return he has been listed in the telephone directory as a mining engineer; the directory showing the same telephone number as the law office of J. Everett Brown. Petitioner has not paid rent to Mr. Brown, but has been employed by him to do work in his office in looking up matters of law and writing briefs in various actions.

Second. That 3 or 4 years ago petitioner worked in the law office of William M. Morse, Jr., a few months; then went to Imperial county for a year; and again returned to the office of Morse, where he has been occupied as an employee of Morse in the examination of questions of law, drafting of pleadings, and writing of briefs. Petitioner's name is on Mr. Morse's office door as "Charles S. McKelvey, Mining."

Third. That during the 10 months preceding the hearing before the board petitioner has been doing work of a legal character for

Mr. Morse, including the giving of advice to clients of Mr. Morse on legal questions.

Fourth. That about 5 years ago the petitioner had space in the office of Mauk, Walters & Morse. Since then he has had space in the offices with the above named and other attorneys at law, and has been occupied substantially as stated in the preceding paragraphs.

Fifth. That petitioner has been the teacher of the men's Bible class of a certain church, where he has been a regular attendant during the past 6½ years, and is one of its officers.

[1-3] It has been suggested as a reason for denying the application for reinstatement that the evidence tends to show that petitioner has been practicing law indirectly, and thus has been evading the legal effect of his disbarment; and that this constitutes such misconduct that it shows his unfitness to be admitted to practice law. If it were true that he has been in fact acting as an attorney and counselor at law, or by his conduct has been attempting to do under cover that which he could not lawfully do at all, then, of course, his application should be denied. But the evidence wholly fails to establish the fact of such evasive conduct. It does not show, or tend to show, that the applicant has been obtaining clients or has retained his former clients, or has been serving them with the connivance and assistance and through the use of the names of the lawyers in whose offices he has been employed. The testimony is that he has been paid a small salary for his services as office assistant, but there is nothing to indicate that he was so paid in any other capacity than that of a clerk, or that his compensation was intended to be, or was, a substitute for fees which otherwise he might have received. The statement that petitioner has been "giving advice to clients of Mr. Morse" is based upon incidental matters of such slight importance that they should not be regarded as constituting an attempt to practice law. If there were any evidence tending to establish such an attempt to evade the consequences of the petitioner's disbarment, we should not only deny the present application, but we would not hesitate to call attention to such transactions as indicating misconduct upon the part of any attorney at law who thus assisted the applicant to conduct himself in violation of law. It cannot be denied that the offense of which the applicant was convicted, and on account of which he was disbarred, was an offense involving moral turpitude of a very serious character. The principal question presented is a test of the position which the court should take with regard to the permanence of disbarments. On the one hand, the important trusts involved in the practice of law, and the necessity for upholding high moral standards in the profession, forbid the court to yield to the pressure of sympathy for one whose misconduct has placed him in an unfortunate situation. On the other hand, a decent regard for justice should leave open the door of opportunity for men who have reestablished their integrity and the evidence of it by a long period of good conduct after the commission of a serious offense. In another case, this court endeavored to express the rule as follows:

"The petition for restoration should be granted when, and only when, the court upon the case as presented to it is convinced by positive evidence that the applicant has established, and now possesses, that good moral character which will make of him a trustworthy and honorable member of the bar." Matter of Nisbet (Cal. App.) 246 P. 120.

This petitioner, now 67 years of age, has remained under the ban of disbarment for 10 years. We appreciate the careful consideration given to this matter by the referees, as well as the importance which they attach to the proceeding in its possible effect upon the high standards which should be upheld by the legal profession. Nevertheless, upon the record here, we feel compelled to the conclusion that the petition should be granted.

It is ordered that the petitioner, Charles S. McKelvey, be and he hereby is restored to the rights and privileges of an attorney and counselor at law, and is authorized to practice in all courts of this state.

PEOPLE v. SHEASBEY. (Cr. 1364.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 21, 1927.

1. Robbery ☞ 1—Felonious element in robbery is not supplied solely by use of force or fear (Pen. Code, § 211).

Felonious element in robbery, as defined in Pen. Code, § 211, is not supplied solely by use of force or fear, since force and fear are not always unlawful or felonious.

2. Larceny ☞ 3(1)—Intent to steal is essential element of "larceny."

Intent to steal or animo furandi is an essential element of larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Larceny.]

3. Robbery ☞ 1—Larceny is essential element of "robbery."

Larceny is an essential element of "robbery."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Robbery.]

4. Robbery ☞4—Ownership or right of possession of property taken must be in some one other than defendant to constitute "robbery."

It is essential to crime of robbery that ownership, or at least right of possession, of property taken, must be in some one other than defendant.

5. Robbery ☞3—Seller taking property under claim of right of possession, without intention of stealing it, was not guilty of robbery.

Where seller took property from buyer under claim of right of possession, and not with intention of stealing it, he was not guilty of robbery.

6. Criminal law ☞29—Conviction for robbery and kidnaping for taking property and taking possessor to town with property was not conviction of two crimes for same series of acts (Pen. Code, §§ 207, 211).

Conviction of crimes of kidnaping, under Pen. Code, § 207, and robbery, under section 211, for taking property under claim of right of possession, and binding possessor of property and taking him to town with goods, was not conviction of two crimes for same series of acts, since taking of property sufficient to constitute robbery was done before trip to town was commenced, and kidnaping commenced with transportation to town.

7. Criminal law ☞390—Objections to questions regarding accused's intent regarding acts constituting alleged robbery held improperly sustained.

Objections to questions asked of defendant as witness with regard to his intent regarding acts constituting alleged robbery held improperly sustained.

8. Criminal law ☞390—Sustaining objection to question calling for motive of defendant in kidnaping prosecutor held not error.

In prosecution for kidnaping, sustaining objection to question to accused, "What was your reason for taking Mr. Brown on the truck with you to Riverdale?" held not error, since question called for motive or state of mind of accused only.

9. Criminal law ☞390—Where intent is element of crime, defendant may give direct testimony on that fact.

Where intent, state of mind, or belief of defendant is an element of crime, he is permitted to give direct testimony on that fact.

10. Kidnaping ☞1—No state of mind or belief is part of crime of "kidnaping," nor constitutes, by itself, a defense to charge (Pen. Code, § 207).

No state of mind or belief is a part of crime of "kidnaping," as defined in Pen. Code, § 207, nor constitutes by itself a defense to charge, and, where no circumstances are proven which would constitute a lawful excuse, no intent is necessary, except intention of doing acts denounced by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Kidnaping.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

G. W. Sheasbey was convicted of robbery and kidnaping, and he appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

M. F. McCormick, of Fresno, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of robbery and kidnaping. The facts out of which the charge grew are briefly as follows: Defendant sold the complaining witness J. T. Brown two pumps with operating machinery and an electric range, which were delivered and installed upon the ranch and premises of the latter. The sale was made and evidenced by a written lease contract requiring installment payments to be made by the purchaser. Trouble and disputes arose between the two men in respect of promises alleged to have been made by the defendant as to the character of installation and in respect of the failure of the buyer to make the installment payments as they became due. These disputes found their way into the justice's court and the superior court. Defendant sought legal advice, and finally came to the conclusion that he had the legal right to go upon the premises of Brown and retake the range, pumps, and machinery. The lease contract contained the provision that, should the buyer fail to comply with any covenant or condition of the contract, "the seller may retake said personal property as owner thereof." It also had the customary provision found in such lease contracts that the title and ownership of the property should remain in the seller until payment (or payment of the notes) had been made in full. To retake the property defendant selected Raisin Day, thinking, so he said, that the Browns would not be home. Defendant, with a truck and several men, went to the ranch to carry out his recapture operations. But Brown and his wife were at home. Defendant told Brown that he had come to collect for the personal property. Brown ordered defendant and his helpers off the premises with threats, and started to proceed rapidly towards his dwelling house. Fearing Brown was going to secure a firearm, defendant ordered his men to seize and bind him. Brown and his wife were then both seized and bound with cords and placed in the shade of trees under guard of some of the men, while others removed and placed upon the truck the personal property in dispute. After this the wife was released, but Brown, with his hands tied, was compelled against his will to go with the party in the truck to town, where he was released upon arrival.

It is the contention of the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to constitute the crime of robbery, because the defendant did not take the property animo furandi, or with intent to steal, but under claim of right of possession and of ownership. Respondent has not advanced any argument in support of the conviction of robbery, but has submitted this branch of the case upon the opening brief of the appellant. Defendant offered several instructions differently worded, but all generally to the effect of informing the jury that, if it found from the evidence that the defendant took the property openly and avowedly, believing in good faith that he had the right of possession, he should not be found guilty of robbery. This was the sole defense of the defendant. The court refused to give any of such instructions. Rulings upon evidence as well as the rulings upon the instructions refused and given to the jury by the trial court were apparently governed by the theory that the intent to steal was either nonessential or that defendant's intent could only be established by the circumstances connected with the offense as stated in Penal Code, § 21, and that defendant's claim of ownership and right of possession was immaterial. The trial and conviction of robbery were had upon this theory.

In Bishop's New Criminal Law, § 849, the author says:

"* * * One who takes another's goods to compel him, though in an irregular way, to do what the law requires him to with them—namely, to pay his debt—is on no legal principle a felon, though doubtless he is a trespasser. * * * A trespass is not theft, except when done with felonious intent. And he who carries away a thing openly, and not clandestinely, to enforce a just claim, not for fraud, not to injure the owner, but to compel him to do what the law requires, is not a thief, whatever the extent of the wrong viewed otherwise."

[1-4] In the Code definition of robbery it is stated:

"Robbery is the felonious taking of personal property * * * by means of force or fear." Pen. Code, § 211.

The "felonious" element is not supplied solely by the use of force or fear. Force and fear are not always unlawful or felonious. The intent to steal or animo furandi is an essential element of larceny. In re Bayles, 47 Cal. App. 517, 190 P. 1034; People v. Eastman, 77 Cal. 171, 19 P. 266; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 125, 204 P. 578; Wharton's Criminal Law (8th Ed.) 848, 853, 884. Larceny is an essential part of robbery. People v. Nelson, 56 Cal. 77; People v. Jones, 53 Cal. 59. It is essential to the crime of robbery that ownership, or at least the right of possession, of the property taken, must be in some one other than the defendant. People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 P. 15; People v. Vice, 21 Cal. 345; People v. Hale, 64 Cal. App. 523, 530, 222 P. 148.

[5] We conclude that the part of the judgment convicting the defendant of the crime of robbery should be reversed; the defendant having taken the property under claim of right of possession, and not with the intention of stealing it.

[6] Appellant attacks the part of the judgment convicting of the crime of kidnaping upon two grounds. One is that all of the acts constituting the charge of kidnaping were included in the crime of robbery, and that, therefore, the judgment convicts the defendant of two crimes for the same series of acts. He urges that the force used in taking the personal property was identically the same force used in the carrying away of Brown. With this we are unable to agree. The personal property was taken from Brown's possession sufficiently to constitute the element of "taking" in the crime of robbery, before the trip to town was commenced. The "taking and carrying" of Brown in violation of the section defining the crime of kidnaping commenced when his transportation to town commenced. Penal Code, § 207, reads in part as follows:

"Every person who forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any person in this state, and carries him into another * * * county, or into another part of the same county, * * * is guilty of kidnaping."

[7, 8] Appellant assigns as error the court's ruling sustaining objections to questions asked of the defendant as a witness with regard to his intent. Most of these questions related to the acts constituting the alleged robbery group of facts. As to them the defendant should have been permitted to testify to his intent in doing the acts proved. But, so far as these rulings relate to the charge of kidnaping, the record shows the court sustained an objection to only the one question: "What was your reason for taking Mr. Brown on the truck with you to Riverdale?" The record of the trial shows the question did not call for the statement of any fact which might have made the taking lawful, such as a warrant, consent, or the like. If any such purpose was in the mind of the defendant's attorney, unobjectionable questions could have brought out such facts, without using such expressions as "why" or "for what reason." No suggestion of any such facts was or has been made. The question called for, and the record shows that it called for, the motive or state of mind of the defendant only.

[9, 10] Where the intent, state of mind, or belief of the defendant is an element of the crime, he is permitted to give his direct testimony on that fact. 16 Cor. Jur. 565; People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576, 582; People v. Mulalely, 16 Cal. App. 44, 116 P. 88 (larceny); People v. Overacker, 15 Cal. App. 620, 115 P. 756 (murder, and facts showing intent); People v. Eastman, 77 Cal. 171, 19 P. 266 (larceny). But no state of mind or belief is a part of the crime of kidnaping nor constitutes by itself a defense to the charge and, where no circumstances are proven which would constitute a lawful excuse, no intent is necessary, except the intention of doing the acts denounced by the statute. The purpose or motive of the taking and carrying away has been held to be immaterial in prosecutions for kidnaping. People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 150, 26 P. 759; People v. Bruno, 49 Cal. App. 372, 193 P. 511.

In the Fick Case facts offered in evidence by the prosecution were held material to show the intent of the defendant, because it was an issue in that case as to whether the defendant carried away the person under a warrant which he held, or otherwise. The warrant was the defendant's defense, and in rebuttal certain facts were considered to show that the officer was not making an arrest in good faith followed by an escape, but that he used the warrant as a subterfuge. There the defense was a lawful warrant plus intent to execute it in good faith. Here nothing is urged as a defense except state of mind or motive alone.

The part of the judgment convicting defendant of the crime of robbery is reversed, and the part convicting him of the crime of kidnaping is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. McAFEE. (Cr. 1444.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 18, 1927.

1. Criminal law §1023(12)—Order denying motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable.

An order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is not such an order from which appeal may be taken.

2. Criminal law §673(2)—Admitting photograph showing cloth claimed to have been used after intercourse only as additional photograph of place of offense held not erroneous (Pen. Code, § 288).

Where in prosecution for incest and lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, prosecuting witness testified to using cloth to wipe away the blood after intercourse, admission of photograph showing cloth lying on ground near bushes pointed out as place where offense occurred held not erroneous, in view of judge's statement showing it was received only as additional photograph of locality.

3. Criminal law §404(4)—Testimony of finding cloth claimed to have been used after intercourse as preliminary to its offer in evidence held not erroneous (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct in violation of Pen. Code, §

288, permitting witness to testify of finding cloth claimed to have been used after intercourse at place shown by photograph held not erroneous, since such identification was necessary preliminary to offering cloth in evidence.

4. Criminal law §671—Discussion before jury relative to admissibility of handkerchief claimed to have been used after intercourse, and found four months later, held not erroneous under circumstances (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, discussion before jury relative to admissibility of handkerchief claimed to have been used after intercourse, and found four months later, held not to constitute ground for reversal, in view of court's cautious treatment of matter and his pointing out the lack of identification and its remote connection with case followed by express admonition to disregard all testimony bearing on handkerchief.

5. Criminal law §651(2)—Permitting prosecutrix to look about alone to locate place of incestuous intercourse in connection with jury's visit held not erroneous (Pen. Code, §§ 288, 1119).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, permitting prosecuting witness, in response to suggestion of prosecutor, to look about alone to locate place of offense in connection with visit of jury, as authorized by section 1119, held not erroneous.

6. Criminal law §1170(2)—Excluding evidence of divorce from former wife for adultery, to show her hostility as witness, held not erroneous when divorce otherwise shown (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, wherein defendant's former wife had sworn to warrant, and defendant claimed she had instigated prosecution, excluding evidence that he had secured divorce from her on ground of adultery held not erroneous, when purpose of showing hostility was accomplished by allowing evidence that divorce was granted to defendant.

7. Incest §13—Testimony relative to defendant's former wife, claimed to have instigated incest prosecution, having gonorrhea, held inadmissible as bearing on disease contracted by prosecuting witness (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, wherein it was shown that prosecuting witness had contracted gonorrhea, testimony that defendant's former wife, claimed to have instigated prosecution, had such disease and that divorce was based thereon, held inadmissible, since definite origin of disease, if attributable to defendant, was immaterial.

8. Criminal law §1170½(1)—Sustaining objection to question without striking negative answer, held harmless (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, sustaining objection to question asked de-defendant's divorced wife alleged to have instigated prosecution relative to bringing similar charges to cause defendant trouble, without striking negative answer thereto, held harmless.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 413(1)—Testimony of defendant's conversation with divorced wife, claimed to have instigated incest prosecution, after acquittal on charge of offense against her sister, held properly excluded as self-serving (Pen. Code, § 288).

Where, in prosecution for incest and lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, officer testified that defendant told him, after arrest, that divorced wife was to blame therefor, attempt to question defendant corroborating such testimony relative to conversations with divorced wife after acquittal on charge involving offense against her sister, held properly excluded, since declaration testified to was merely self-serving and did not justify additional testimony thereon.

10. Witnesses $\S$ 268(2)—Defendant's divorced wife cannot be questioned as to knowledge of family relation that would cause child to accuse father of incest (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, objection to questions asked defendant's divorced wife, claimed to have instigated prosecution, relative to knowledge of family relations which would cause prosecutrix to bring charge against defendant, held properly sustained.

11. Criminal law $\S$ 633(1)—Court may not treat assault on defendant outside of courthouse as attempt to obstruct justice.

Where assault was made outside of courthouse on defendant in prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, by husband of defendant's divorced wife claimed to have instigated prosecution; it not having occurred in presence of court, and no foundation having been laid for punishment as contempt elsewhere, court was not empowered to treat attack as attempt to obstruct justice.

12. Incest $\S$ 13—Evidence of attitude of prosecutrix towards stepmother claimed to have instigated incest prosecution held properly excluded (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, objection held properly sustained to question asked defendant relative to attitude of prosecuting witness towards stepmother, claimed to have instigated prosecution, as being ambiguous and not germane to issue.

13. Incest $\S$ 13—Evidence as to carrying notes between prosecutrix and boys to show improper associations held inadmissible in absence of showing knowledge of contents (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, defense testimony by schoolmate relative to carrying notes between prosecuting witness and boys for apparent purpose of showing improper association held inadmissible, in absence of showing knowledge of contents.

14. Incest $\S$ 1—Lewd and lascivious conduct, though ultimately relating to offense of incest, constitutes separate "crime" (Pen. Code, § 288).

Lewd and lascivious conduct preceding incest, though ultimately relating to such offense, constitutes separate "crime" under Pen. Code, § 288.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Crime.]

15. Criminal law $\S$ 829(14)—Refusing instructions on disregarding stricken evidence and misconstruing objections held not erroneous when covered by given charge (Pen. Code, § 288).

Refusal in prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, to give instruction to effect that jury were to disregard matters ruled out and not to construe objections as attempt to suppress truth, held not erroneous, in view of given instruction answering all purposes as requested.

16. Criminal law $\S$ 1171(1)—Alleged misconduct of prosecutor in attempt to introduce evidence and going outside record in argument held not to require reversal.

In prosecution for incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, alleged misconduct of prosecuting attorney in respect to persistent effort to introduce certain testimony and going outside record in argument, held not sufficiently reprehensible to require reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Robert McAfee was convicted of incest and for lewd and lascivious conduct, and he appeals. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

O. E. Mark, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Dep. Atty. Gen., for the People.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. The defendant was charged with the crime of incest with his daughter Melba, a child of 11 years, on two occasions, the first about the beginning of April, 1926, the second on June 19, 1926; and also with the commission of lewd and lascivious conduct on each occasion, in violation of section 288 of the Penal Code.

The information on which the defendant was tried contained four counts; the first and third relating to the occasion in April, the second and fourth to that in June. He was convicted on all four counts; but the Attorney General concedes, justly, that the evidence does not support the conviction under the fourth count—that of lewd and lascivious conduct in June—and that the conviction under that count should be set aside. Attention will therefore be confined to the grounds urged by defendant for a new trial as to the other three counts.

[1] In addition to his appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant has attempted to include an appeal from an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment. Such order is, however, not an appealable order, and hence needs no further consideration.

Upon the trial the child testified at considerable length. It appears that the defendant had been twice married, and that the little girl was the elder of the two children of defendant's first marriage, but had been living with the defendant and his second wife for about a year before the acts charged. There had been a divorce between defendant and the child's mother, who had also remarried, and who at the time of the trial was known as Mrs. Nancy Morgan. According to the girl's story, the defendant about the beginning of April, 1926, invited her, upon her return from school one afternoon to take a ride with him in his automobile to a rabbit farm near San Diego, in order to procure some rabbits to bring home. When they reached a remote spot, she testified that they alighted, and while sitting in a clump of bushes her father, after certain caresses, used his hands upon her in a lascivious way, and afterwards caused her to submit to sexual embraces, during which bleeding occurred. She testified further that to wipe away the blood a handkerchief or cloth produced by her father was used, and was then thrown upon the ground near by. On the occasion in June, the child said that the occurrence took place in her father's automobile near the spot visited in April. Upon her return home after this trip, the suspicion of her stepmother being aroused, as Melba testified, by spots of blood upon her skirt, the child related what had happened. In July following a medical examination showed that she had at some time contracted gonorrheal infection.

Upon the appeal, stress is laid for the most part upon asserted errors in respect of the evidence. Six of defendant's specifications of such errors deal with the introduction of photographs of the alleged locus and the effort of the district attorney to introduce a handkerchief or cloth such as was referred to in the child's testimony. These particular specifications can be advantageously dealt with together.

[2] The photographs were taken and identified by a photographer, Samuel S. Williams, who visited the scene on August 5, 1926, in company with the child and M. Quitsow, an assistant investigator in the district attorney's office. The photograph thought to be especially prejudicial to the defendant was one admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit No. 6, showing the cloth lying on the ground near bushes pointed out by the child—the same cloth which during the examination of other witnesses in court was presented to view, but not received in evidence. In admitting the photograph showing the cloth, the court said:

"It may not have much significance, but it is another photograph of the vicinity in which it is claimed that one of these offenses took place; and, whether the presence or absence of a cloth there is of any significance or not, I think perhaps the picture should be received."

The statement of the judge made it clear to the jury that the photograph was introduced merely as an additional picture of the locality; and, moreover, at a later stage of the trial the jury, properly accompanied, was permitted to view the premises designated as the scene of the offenses charged. In view of the subsequent action of the court, when the cloth itself was offered and excluded, no prejudice can have been occasioned by the mere introduction of the photograph. The same may be said of a photograph of a spot called "Dead Man's Hole," which does not appear to have had any bearing on the case.

[3] As to the cloth, it is contended that the court erred in allowing the witness Quitsow to testify that, on his visit to the spot in August with the child and the photographer, he found at the point indicated in the photograph the handkerchief and some rags produced in court, and had kept them ever since in his custody at his office until they were delivered at the time of the trial to the district attorney, and that their condition had remained unchanged. This identification was a necessary preliminary to the offer of the handkerchief in evidence, and there was no error in the allowance of such testimony.

After the handkerchief had been thus identified, Dr. J. Francis White, a bacteriologist, was called to the stand. It developed that he had subjected the handkerchief to a laboratory test in order to determine the characteristics of certain discolorations which the district attorney described as due to smears of blood and spermatozoa. After rather a lengthy colloquy in the presence of the jury, the court excluded both the handkerchief and the testimony of the doctor. At the same time the court instructed the jury to disregard all the evidence in reference to the handkerchief. Appellant insists, however, that the court was tardy in its ruling, and that the discussion heard by the jury was grievously prejudicial, and constitutes ground for reversal. It is best, therefore, to quote at length from the record:

"Q. (by the Prosecutor): Did you subject that handkerchief, or any spots or stains upon that handkerchief, to any bacteriological experiment?"

"Mr. Mark: Just a moment before you answer, Doctor. Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, no proper foundation laid, assuming an investigation or examination not in evidence, having no connection with the case."

"Mr. Johnson: Now, if your honor please, there has been testimony from the prosecutrix that at this time there was a handkerchief used."

There was a handkerchief used or piece of cloth. She described it. She could not identify this particular cloth, but she did state there was a handkerchief used there, white, of a similar character as the object that was exhibited. She made the best identification that she could under the circumstances. She did state that she used that handkerchief, and that there was blood on her person at that time, and that she wiped herself on it. She was wiped with that handkerchief. Now, then, we follow that up by showing that some months afterwards, within a radius of three feet of where that act took place, a handkerchief was found with certain stains upon it. Now, your honor, I propose to follow this up by showing that this witness, an expert in that particular field, a bacteriologist, with years of experience, subjected that handkerchief to a certain test, subjected certain spots there to all of the tests that are known to science to-day, and that those spots upon that handkerchief are blood. Now, isn't that testimony material, relevant, competent? The mere fact that it was found three months afterwards—we propose to follow that up by the testimony of this physician, this expert, to show that it does not make a particle of difference, under certain circumstances, if an object of that character were exposed to the elements, these things would remain there yet, these signs, after they are subjected to the experiments that are known, that science has led us to to-day, they can still be detected. That simply goes, of course, to the weight of the testimony, and not to its admissibility. If this was simply a handkerchief found here with spermatozoa on it, the human germ, seed, perhaps it would not be so strong. But here is the testimony of this prosecutrix. We have her testimony that she had never been violated before, that there was a penetration of her person on that spot for the first time, and that she had a hemorrhage. We follow that up by showing that on that spot, within three feet, we find a handkerchief with spots on it. These spots are subjected to a test known to science. And we have the expert testimony of a man that the spots show blood. Isn't that competent for the jury to determine? I say that the length, the duration, of time that intervened goes to the weight of the testimony, not to its admissibility. It is a question for this jury to determine, whether or not that was the handkerchief that she wiped herself with that time after she had been violated in the manner and form as she described in her testimony.

"Mr. Mark: That would be very well, your honor, if we could follow that up with any known test. If the doctor can answer two questions for me, I will remove my objection. I want to ask him if he can tell whose blood it was and whose spermatozoa it was, and we will subject this man here, this defendant, to examination of all his vital fluids to determine that. If that can be done, I will withdraw my objection.

"Mr. Johnson: That is the most absurd suggestion I have ever heard in a court of justice.

"The Court: I think this is too remote. I think the testimony shows that, if this handkerchief were left there at all, it was along about the 1st of April of this year.

"Mr. Johnson: Yes, your honor.

"The Court: And the testimony tends to show that it was found along about the 5th of August, or the early part of August, which would be four months later. After seeing that country, and the litter of things that were there, papers and cloths and tin cans and everything else, I think it is altogether too remote to be received in evidence.

"Mr. Johnson: Will your honor permit me to take a recess for a time. I think I have one or two authorities on the proposition, if your honor please.

"The Court: Of course, where it is a matter of remoteness, it is largely in the discretion of the court. In addition to that, there is a lack of identification.

"Mr. Johnson: Your honor, the authorities hold remoteness must be an extreme proposition. It must go to such an extent that there is not the remotest possibility of there being any connection between them. The remoteness under all the circumstances goes to the weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility. That's a settled rule in this state, your honor.

"The Court: Yes; that is true.

"Mr. Johnson: And I am satisfied I can show your honor one or two authorities where matters which would ordinarily be considered very remote from the issue involved have been held admissible by the Supreme Court of this state. I consider this testimony one of the most vital pieces of testimony in this important criminal prosecution, your honor. Here is the sworn testimony with reference to where this thing was found.

"The Court: Four months later.

"Mr. Johnson: Yes, your Honor; the peculiar significance of it is that there was testimony from this prosecutrix that she wiped herself with it.

"The Court: No; not with it. There is no testimony to that. If there were, I should admit it. That is, when you say 'it,' you refer to this particular piece of cloth or handkerchief.

"Mr. Johnson: That she used it? I so understood the testimony, your honor.

"The Court: She used a cloth.

"Mr. Johnson: That she used a handkerchief; yes.

"The Court: Or a handkerchief. If you had identified it as being the one that was there on the 1st of April, then it would not be nearly as remote.

"Mr. Johnson: Yes; but it is almost impossible to identify a handkerchief unless you have got a monogram upon it, or something of that sort.

"The Court: That is the difficulty.

"Mr. Johnson: He said it was a white object and had the same general appearance of this handkerchief.

"The Court: There are many, many things that could make it less remote. If that were way off from human habitation, where very few people went, or anything of that sort; but we all saw the nature of the country there.

"Mr. Johnson: Yes, your Honor, we did. We all saw that little hollow place there, that sort of cave in those trees, your honor; and this handkerchief is found, as the witness Quitsow has said, within an area of three feet. That was about the only object that was in there.

"The Court: I think there perhaps is some discrepancy in the testimony as to where that was found. One witness testified to three feet, but I think another testified it was much furthier than that. But, taking into consideration the nature of the country, taking into consideration the fact that this was not identified at all as the handkerchief that was used there, taking into consideration the nature of the country in general, I think it is altogether too remote to be admissible. As has been suggested here, if this could be identified as the blood of the defendant, or something of that sort, that would be entirely different.

"Mr. Johnson: I do not know how we are going to identify the blood on this handkerchief as the blood of the accused. It is humanly impossible.

"The Court: Surely; but it does not necessarily follow that I must admit it because it is impossible to get any better evidence, the mere fact that it is a difficult thing to prove.

"Mr. Johnson: Your honor, I feel this matter is of such importance that I want to—

"The Court: We will not take any more time for it now. I will sustain the objection for the present. If you find any authority between now and to-morrow morning that you want to submit to me, I will be glad to see it.

"Mr. Johnson: Yes, your honor.

"The Court: But ordinarily the different circumstances make cases so different that it is a little difficult to find an authority which would be a parallel case to this. The objection sustained.

"Mr. Johnson: I will try to find some authority on it before to-morrow morning.

"Mr. Mark: Then, your honor, may we repeat our request that, since this handkerchief in question has been paraded before the jury with hints and insinuations—

"Mr. Johnson: What kind of insinuations?

"Mr. Mark: Hints and insinuations, they be instructed to disregard it?

"The Court: Yes; the jury is instructed to disregard all the testimony with reference to this handkerchief in connection with this case."

[4] The court's cautious treatment of the matter could have left no doubt in any juror's mind that the court deprecated the evidentiary value of the handkerchief. Again and again the court pointed out that there was no identification of the handkerchief produced with any handkerchief actually used, while the circumstances under which the handkerchief was found, together with the lapse of four months' time, left its connection with the case too remote to justify its use as evidence against the defendant. The remarks of the court during the lively interchange of counsel, followed by the express admonition to cast out all testimony bearing on the handkerchief, cannot have failed to impress upon the jury that they were to banish from their minds all references to the handkerchief. Under these circumstances, the zeal of the district attorney in endeavoring to convince the court of the propriety of the evidence offered cannot be deemed ground for reversal.

[5] In connection with the visit of the jury to the premises mentioned in the child's testimony, complaint is made that there was some private conversation between the little girl and the prosecuting attorney. The attorney for the defendant, assuming some undue suggestion to have been made, insisted that the prosecutor was coaching the witness. The prosecutor explained, however, that he was merely asking the child something about the roadway, and then suggested that she be allowed to alight from the bus occupied by the party and move about by herself, so as better to locate the spot to which testimony had been directed. In response to a question by the judge, the child said she thought it would help her if she could look about alone, and this she was then permitted to do. The circumstance complained of could not have done defendant any harm. The viewing of the location was not conducted strictly in accordance with section 1119 of the Penal Code, but no objection based on nonconformity with the section was made, nor was any prejudice suffered.

[6] Another set of specifications of error deals with the exclusion of certain evidence bearing upon the family relations between defendant and his first wife, Mrs. Nancy Morgan, and the relations also between the child and the defendant's second wife, Mildred McAfee. Defendant, insisting upon his innocence, contended that the charges against him were instigated by his former wife, the child's mother, who had sworn to the warrant for his arrest. In the examination of Mrs. Morgan, there was an effort on two occasions to show that seven years previously the defendant had obtained a divorce from her on the ground of her adultery. While the court in each instance sustained an objection to inquiry concerning the grounds of the divorce, and each time struck out the answers of the witness when, notwithstanding the rulings, she answered the question affirmatively, yet, in response to other questions, the fact of a divorce in favor of the defendant was brought out by his attorney. The purpose of the questions was to show hostility of the defendant's former wife. In connection with considerable other testimony directed to the same end, defendant's purpose was sufficiently accomplished by the allowance of evidence of a divorce granted to the defendant, without retaining in the record Mrs. Morgan's admission of the specific grounds.

[7] While the defendant and his first wife were living together, according to the testimony given by her, the defendant told her that he had contracted gonorrhea. This was denied by defendant, and there was an attempt to show that the wife herself had had venereal disease and that the divorce in the husband's favor seven years previously was based on that circumstance. Such evidence was excluded, and likewise evidence designed to prove from clinical and police records that Mrs. Morgan had been treated for venereal disease. She herself admitted that while the wife of defendant she "did take treatments to keep from getting it." Though the presence of some old infection in the defendant was an issue in the trial, the defendant in his testimony told his own story about his relations with his former wife, and produced also as a witness Dr. Compton, who stated that an examination made by him of the defendant in August, 1926, showed no trace of venereal disease or of prior infection. If infection in the daughter was attributable to a diseased condition of the defendant in the year 1926, the definite origin of such condition was not material, and the court properly kept the trial within the bounds of the real issue between the people and the defendant.

[8] Again, while Mrs. Morgan was under cross-examination, she was asked by defendant's attorney whether she had been the complaining witness in a former prosecution of defendant for some offense involving Mrs. Morgan's sister. In the course of this inquiry this question was put: "As a matter of fact, Mrs. Morgan, whenever you have wanted to cause the defendant here trouble, either in your married life or otherwise, you brought some charge like this against him, have you not?" The answer was: "I certainly have not." The district attorney objecting after the answer, the court sustained the objection, but did not strike out the answer. Clearly the ruling was harmless.

[9] Officer John A. Kane, who arrested defendant under the warrant herein, testified that on the way to the station defendant had said that his former wife was to blame for the arrest, and that a couple of years previously she had tried "to frame him" in some matter affecting her sister. Later, when defendant was a witness in his own behalf, he corroborated the testimony so given by Kane; but, when effort was made to question him about details of conversations between himself and Mrs. Morgan after he was acquitted of the offense charged to have been committed against her sister, the court sustained an objection on the ground of immateriality. Defendant's declaration to Kane as well as his own testimony on the same subject were purely self-serving, and not really admissible in evidence. The court was therefore right in closing the door to additional testimony of like sort.

[10] Error is also predicated on the sustaining of an objection to the question put to Mrs. Morgan: "Do you know of anything in the family relations that might cause Melba to bring a charge against her father of this nature without foundation?" Objection having been sustained, the inquiry was not pursued further. There was no error in the ruling.

During an overnight continuance of the trial, the defendant, while outside of the courthouse, was attacked by the husband of Mrs. Morgan, his face bruised, and his lip cut. In a conference the following morning in the judge's chambers, defendant's attorney charged that Mrs. Morgan had been threatening witnesses, and had threatened many times to have her husband beat the defendant unless the latter turned over to her certain property. It was further stated that in the police court that morning Morgan had been fined $50, with the alternative of 25 days' confinement in jail. The discussion in chambers ended with the following understanding between the court and counsel:

"Mr. Mark: Then may the record show that the counsel for the defendant requests the court for permission to explain the presence of a wound upon the face of the defendant, which was not there yesterday, and which appears to be there this morning, in order to relieve him from any implication of wrongdoing that might get into the minds of the individual jurors? Also let the record show that counsel for the defendant requests the court for permission to state the reasons why certain witness, to wit, Joe Martinez and Augustine Brown, are not to be called to the stand, although referred to in previous testimony; the reason for their not being called being that threats against their lives have been made by the present husband of the ex-wife of the defendant? I presume the request will be denied.

"The Court: I will have to make that ruling—you will have to make your offer, ask questions, not make any statement, and I will have to make my ruling out there.

"Mr. Johnson: We resist the application, of course.

"Mr. Mark: Just how far, now, do you want me to go, for the purpose of the record? That is all. I want to follow the suggestion of the court.

"The Court: You may ask any question, but not make any offer, any statement, as to what you expect to prove.

"Mr. Mark: You mean ask questions of the court?

"The Court: No; ask questions of the witness.

"Mr. Mark: I see. Then I will put the young fellow on the stand. In the meantime I am serious about that proposition of protection.

"The Court: That will have to be done in a separate proceeding. There is a statutory provision.

"Mr. Johnson: Certainly, your honor. And, moreover, your honor, I told this man, when he came in there last night, not when he came in there last night, but when that alibi witness, or the first witness that took the stand, came in there—who is a special deputy, without any powers of serving criminal process, however, without permission from the sheriff, just simply a special deputy out in the back country—I told him that I did not want to have anything occur that would prejudice this case at this time. I told him and the accused in that particular case—this woman's husband promised me to be in the courtroom, in the district attorney's office this morning at 9 o'clock—I told this man if they wanted any redress in our office they could have it, but I did not want this case prejudiced. As soon as the case was concluded, which would be in the next 24 hours, if they wanted a complaint, action could be had in our office. That is what I told them. So they wait until about 10 o'clock last night and then come down and procure a warrant for him; and the case is heard at 8:30 down there in the justice court, and he is given no opportunity to defend himself whatsoever, had no testimony there.

"The Court: You see, we do not want to try out that other case in with this.

"Mr. Johnson: No; in so far as the testimony is concerned, there is just as much information in my hands that this man McAfee has threatened the life of his wife and the girl and that he ought to be put under peace bonds. I have all kinds of evidence in the district attorney's office there.

"The Court: We do not want to go into either side of it; it is too complicated, too long."

[11] The matter seems not to have been adverted to in any of the subsequent proceedings in court, and there is nothing in the judicial attitude of the court in reference to the unfortunate occurrence to justify criticism. The assault not having occurred in the presence of the court, and no foundation having been laid for punishment for a contempt committed elsewhere, the court was not empowered to treat the attack as an attempt to obstruct justice, as defendant seems to think was obligatory.

[12] During the examination of defendant, he was asked by his counsel: "What has been Melba's attitude toward Mildred [the stepmother]?" Objection to the question upon the ground that it was ambiguous and not germane to the issue was sustained; and this ruling is assigned as error. The question was merely general in character; and, if any pertinent instances of animosity existed, there was nothing to prevent counsel from adducing such evidence by more pointed questions. So also counsel could have made an offer to prove material facts or circumstances.

[13] For the purpose, apparently, of showing some association between defendant's daughter and boys at the same school with her, a schoolmate, Leslie Webb, was called as a witness by defendant and asked whether he had carried notes between the girl and a boy named Joe Martinez. Mrs. Gladys Webb was asked also whether she knew of such notes being exchanged between those children at school. Objections to such questions were in each instance sustained. It did not appear that either witness knew anything of the contents of such notes, if any; and the mere fact of the exchange of notes between school children is insignificant in this particular case.

The remaining assignments of error relate to instructions given or refused. Exception is taken to instructions stating to the jury in substance that an information may charge in separate counts two or more distinct offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense, and that as regards the counts in this case of incest and of lewd and lascivious conduct, the defendant, if found guilty, might be convicted on all, or any number less than all, of the four counts against him. The court further instructed the jury that, while an information might legally include a combination of charges, yet they were not to infer from anything the court had said that the jury were to find the defendant guilty of any of the charges on which he was being tried.

[14] As regards the first and third counts, relating to the April occurrence, the lascivious conduct charged in the third count, and found by the jury to have been practiced, preceded the more serious offense charged in the first count, and, though ultimately relating to that offense, was nevertheless distinguished from it and formed a separate crime under section 288 of the Penal Code.

As to the second and fourth counts, relating to the occurrence in June, the verdict on the fourth count is concededly without support. But the court was not asked to direct a verdict for the defendant on that count or any other, and the instructions complained of are correct statements of law.

[15] Complaint is made further of the failure to give two instructions requested by defendant, to the effect that the jury were to disregard matters ruled out by the court, and were not to construe objections made on behalf of defendant as attempts to suppress the truth or prevent a full investigation of the facts. The court did, however, give the following instruction:

"While you are the sole and exclusive judges of the facts and of the weight of the evidence, you are to judge of the facts upon the testimony and other evidence produced here in court. If any evidence has been admitted and afterwards stricken out, you must disregard the matter so stricken out, entirely. And if any counsel has intimated, by questions which the court has not permitted to be answered, that certain things are or are not true, you must disregard such questions and refrain from any inferences based upon them. If counsel upon either side have made any statements in your presence concerning the facts in the case, you must be careful not to regard such statements as evidence, and must look entirely to the proof in ascertaining what the facts are."

The instruction so given answered all the purposes of those requested by defendant.

[16] Finally, it is urged that defendant was deprived of a fair trial by reason of alleged misconduct of the district attorney. In this respect reference is made to the persistent effort of the district attorney to have the handkerchief received in evidence; and attention is directed also to some heated remarks made during the trial by the prosecutor in discussion with defendant's attorney, wherein the latter was charged with lack of good faith in opposing an attempt to show

Mrs. Morgan's friendly attitude toward defendant during his prosecution for the alleged offense affecting Mrs. Morgan's sister. That discussion ended when the court declared it out of order, stating at the same time that the matter had nothing to do with the case in hand.

In the closing argument to the jury, the district attorney went somewhat outside the record in referring to that prior prosecution. Defendant's counsel at once interrupted with a protest, whereupon the district attorney admitted that he was "overcharged," and the court forthwith directed the jury to disregard what had been said, again adding that it had nothing to do with the case. Under such circumstances the conduct criticized was not sufficiently reprehensible to cause a reversal.

The defendant was ably defended; and, while he stoutly denied guilt, the conflict in the evidence was resolved against him by the triers of the facts, after a trial lasting five days, which was guided throughout with fairness and moderation by the court.

On the record as a whole, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment of conviction are affirmed as to the first, second, and third counts of the information; and, as to the fourth count, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment of conviction are reversed. The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. COLOMBO. (Cr. 1379.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 22, 1927.

1. Intoxicating liquors ⚡213—Information charging maintaining nuisance at "place situated on F— street, adjoining and fronting" described lots where liquor was kept and sold, held sufficient (Pen. Code Cal. § 950, subd. 2; Wright Act [Cal.]; Volstead Act, tit. 2, § 21 [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½jj]).

Information charging defendant with maintaining nuisance at "place situated on F— street, adjoining and fronting" certain described lots "where intoxicating liquors, to wit, wine and whisky, were kept, sold, and stored, for beverage purposes," held sufficient in prosecution against the person only for violation of Wright Act (St. Cal. 1921, p. 79) and Volstead Act, tit. 2, § 21 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½jj), under evidence that defendant used place of taxi stand in street for selling liquor stored in rear lots; under Pen. Code Cal. § 950, subd. 2, providing that information must state acts constituting offense so as to enable person of common understanding to know what is intended.

2. Intoxicating liquors ⚡233(1)—Evidence of liquor storage on adjoining lots and of intoxicated loiterers held admissible under charge against taxi driver for maintaining nuisance.

In prosecution of taxi driver for maintaining liquor nuisance at taxi stand on street, evidence of adjoining lots and shack where liquor was stored and presence of intoxicated loiterers held admissible as tending to prove charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Joseph Colombo was convicted of maintaining a nuisance in violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. D. Johnston and H. M. Bishop, both of Martinez, for appellant.

U. S. Webb and Emery F. Mitchell, both of San Francisco, for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant was convicted of maintaining a nuisance in violation of the Wright Act (Stats. 1921, c. 80, p. 79) and section 21 of title 2 of the Volstead Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½jj). The information as amended charged in part as follows:

"The said Joseph Colombo, on the 16th day of September, * * * at Martinez, * * * did then and there unlawfully maintain a common nuisance, to wit, a place situated on Ferry street, adjoining and fronting on lots 1 and 2, block 319, and on said lots 1 and 2, block 319, as the same are delineated and designated on that certain map entitled 'Map of the Original and Additional Surveys of the Town of Martinez,' filed March 30, 1895, in the office of the county recorder, * * * where intoxicating liquors, to wit: wine and whisky, were kept, sold and stored, for beverage purposes. * * *"

[1] Appellant urges that his demurrer to this information should have been sustained, in that the place alleged to have been maintained by him is not described therein with sufficient certainty. It is sufficient if the place is designated sufficiently to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended (Pen. Code, § 950, subd. 2), and allege the facts in substantial agreement with the language of the statute constituting the offense. People v. Frankovich, 64 Cal. App. 184, 188, 221 P. 671. This prosecution does not proceed against the place as for abatement, but against the person only, and for that reason an exact description of the place is unnecessary. State v. Kruse, 19 N. D. 203, 124 N. W. 385; State v. Wheeler, 38 N. D. 456, 165 N. W. 574; 33 Corp. Jur. § 430, p. 717, cases cited in note 99.

The testimony was to the effect that defendant for several years had conducted a taxi business at a stand in the street fronting on the lots described in the information. He had no regular office, but had a telephone attached to one of the buildings on the lots for receiving calls. On September 16th special agents of the district attorney's office purchased from him one-half gallon of whiskey. They drove up to the taxi stand, found defendant sitting in his taxi, and asked for the liquor. Defendant went in behind the first building on the lot, and returned with the liquor, which he then delivered and sold. The agents then went behind the building, and, following a path into the rear of the lot, discovered a bottle of liquor concealed alongside a fence, and, upon looking into a small shack, found a number of containers holding whiskey and wine, also articles useful in the sale and dispensing of liquor, such as bottles and corks. The door was forced and the liquor taken for evidence. There was also testimony of several other sales of liquor made by defendant immediately prior to this one. The details of these sales narrated by the witnesses were quite similar in detail to the one described above. A diagram of the lots, shack, building, and taxi stand was used by the witnesses in explaining the operations of the defendant on such occasions and his acts and conduct in and about the place in general. The evidence warranted the jury in concluding that the defendant used the place of his taxi stand in the street in front of the lots described to receive orders for and deliver liquor in exchange for money, and that the source of the liquor supply and place of storage was in the yard or shack in the rear.

The information sufficiently informed the defendant of the nature of the charge proven in stating "a place situated on Ferry street adjoining and fronting on lots 1 and 2," etc.

[2] The evidence concerning the lots, shack, and yard is attacked, in that these were not shown to belong to the defendant, and that he was not proven to possess a key to the shack. It is also urged that, defendant's brother being the owner of the lots, defendant had no right to dispel the gatherings of persons "hanging around." These matters, however, do not purport to constitute a crime in themselves in this prosecution, but are admissible as circumstances from which the jury might infer the truth of the real charge.

The railroad station agent, at the depot close by, testified over objection that there were a good many intoxicated people "hanging around" that corner; more so than any other place in town. On cross-examination he stated he did not know that these people got their liquor from the defendant. Several other witnesses gave similar testimony. Possession or sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes is one crime, and maintaining a room, building, vehicle or place where intoxicating liquor is sold or kept is another, to wit, a common nuisance and misdemeanor. More proof is required for the latter than the former. The testimony of the witnesses last referred to is objected to as insufficient to connect the defendant with responsibility for the maintenance of the "place", and, on the other hand, the testimony as a whole is attacked by appellant as insufficient to establish the misdemeanor of maintaining a common nuisance, because it is claimed to establish only an isolated sale. He should say several isolated sales.

The testimony of the surrounding circumstances, including the congregation at the place of intoxicated persons, is material proof upon a prosecution for maintaining a common nuisance. In People v. Mehra, 73 Cal. App. 162, 238 P. 802, the following passage is quoted from Barker v. United States (C. C. A.) 289 F. 249:

"Though a single sale of liquor, or the mere unlawful possession, does not under all circumstances violate National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 21, making it punishable to maintain a nuisance by keeping a place for the violation of the act, the circumstances surrounding the sale or the single act of possession may be such as to warrant the inference that the single act was part of a habit, and therefore sufficient to sustain a conviction for nuisance."

After reviewing the authorities upon the subject, the court, in People v. Mehra, supra, at page 170 (238 P. 802), summarizes some of the facts which may or should be proven in addition to a single act of possession or sale in order to raise the inference of a purpose to sell and support the charge of a nuisance. The presence of numbers of intoxicated persons is of the same class as those mentioned. The evidence complained of was essential and material.

The case of People v. Johnson, 63 Cal. App. 178, 218 P. 449, relied on by appellant, is not contrary. It was there held error to admit proof of reputation of the place which was held hearsay, while here the trial court limited the witnesses to testifying to what they themselves had seen.

We see no error in the record, and it is ordered that the judgment and order denying new trial appealed from be, and the same are hereby, affirmed.

JEFFREYS v. POINT RICHMOND CANAL & LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 5555.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 14, 1927.

Hearing granted by Supreme Court June 13, 1927.

1. Constitutional law ⇨143—Municipal corporations ⇨907—Amendment to Street Improvement Act, permitting holder of bonds to foreclose, held not unconstitutional as impairing obligation of contract (Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. Cal. 1921, p. 297, § 10; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10).

Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. Cal. 1921, p. 297, § 10, permitting holder of street bonds to foreclose and providing for method of pleading and proof, for substituted service, and for attorney's fees and costs, and altering redemption period, held not to violate provisions of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, prohibiting impairment of obligation of contract.

2. Courts ⇨97(5)—Federal court rulings control question whether statute violates inhibition against impairment of obligation of contract (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10).

In considering whether statute offends constitutional inhibition against impairment of obligation of contract, under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, rulings of federal courts are controlling.

3. Constitutional law ⇨169—Statute providing additional remedy or enlarging existing remedy for enforcing contract is not invalid as "impairing obligation of contract" (Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10).

Statute may not be declared unconstitutional for violating Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, by impairing obligation of contract, for giving additional remedy or enlarging or making more efficient existing remedy for enforcement of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Impairing Obligation of Contract.]

4. Constitutional law ⇨169—Legislature may change existing remedies without impairing obligation of contract, provided substantial remedy remains.

Legislature may modify or change existing remedies or prescribe new modes of procedure without impairing obligation of contract, if substantial remedy remains or is given, notwithstanding rule that laws in force when contract is made enter into its obligation.

5. Constitutional law ⇨106—That Street Improvement Act provided method of summary sale to bondholders held not denial of right to pursue ordinary remedy (Street Improvement Act 1911 [St. 1911, p. 730]).

That Street Improvement Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), provided method of summary sale to holders of bonds without suit, cannot be taken as denial of right to pursue ordinary, legal, or equitable remedies to enforce contract, particularly in absence of some expression of such intention in statute itself, since there is no vested right in particular remedy or form of procedure.

6. Constitutional law ⇨106—Contracts are made in contemplation of state's power to amend remedy so long as parties' vested rights are not disturbed.

Contracts are made in contemplation of power of state to amend remedy or provide new one, so long as vested rights and obligations of parties are not disturbed.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1030—Any error in statutory foreclosure proceeding by holders of street bonds held not prejudicial (Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10).

Any error in bondholders' foreclosure proceeding under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10, prescribing pleading, making treasurer's certificate of nonpayment prima facie evidence of such fact, and in permitting recovery of attorney's fees and costs, held not prejudicial, in view of evidence, where no attorney's fees were allowed and costs were merely statutory costs.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨907—Amendment to Street Improvement Act, permitting holder of bonds to foreclose, held applicable to bonds issued prior to enactment (Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10).

Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10, permitting holder of street bonds to foreclose, held applicable to bonds issued prior to enactment, though it does not expressly provide that it shall be retroactive.

9. Statutes ⇨267(2)—Statutes affecting remedy or procedure for enforcement of existing rights apply to actions thereafter instituted, but not to pending actions.

General rule is that statutes, which merely affect remedy or procedure for enforcement of existing rights, apply to all actions thereafter instituted, but not to actions pending at time of enactment.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨950—Street Improvement bondholder foreclosing held entitled to judgment for amount of taxes assessed pending litigation and paid by him (Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10; Civ. Code, § 2876).

In action by holder of street bonds to foreclose under provisions of Street Improvement Act 1911, § 76, as amended by St. 1921, p. 297, § 10, judgment held not faulty for including amount of taxes assessed pending litigation and paid by plaintiff, in view of Civ. Code, § 2876.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action on street improvement bonds by W. M. Jeffreys against the Point Richmond Canal & Land Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Mintzer Estate Company appeals. Affirmed.

McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene and John F. Cassell, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rufus H. Kimball, of San Francisco, and A. F. Bray, of Martinez, for respondent.
Ernest A. Wilson, of San Mateo, amicus curiæ.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued as the purchaser for value of 250 street bonds issued by the city of Richmond in the year 1917 under the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730). Judgment went for the plaintiff for the amount prayed and also for the foreclosure of separate liens on the lots of land involved. From this judgment the defendant Mintzer Estate Company, which held a mortgage on these lots declared to be subsequent to plaintiff's liens, has appealed on a bill of exceptions. The other defendants, the city of Richmond, the treasurer of the city, and the owner of the lots involved, have not appealed.

There is really no dispute as to the facts. The appellant was the holder of two promissory notes from the owner of the lots involved, which were secured by a mortgage on the lots and which were taken in the year 1920 subsequent to the issue and delivery of all the bonds and at a time when the owner of the lots was in the hands of a receiver. Both notes were taken by the appellant to secure payment of a past-due indebtedness, and both the notes and the mortgage were taken at a time when the corporation debtor was insolvent. No question is raised on this appeal affecting the validity of the proceedings under the Street Improvement Act by which the bonds were issued, and no suggestion is made that the work, in payment for which the bonds were issued, was not properly done in accordance with the contract.

[1] The primary question involved on this appeal is whether the amendment in 1921 to the Street Improvement Act of 1911 permitting a foreclosure suit of this character is inapplicable to bonds issued prior to the amendment as violative of the constitutional inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts. The basis of the attack is this: The Street Improvement Act, as it read when the bonds were issued, specially provided two distinct remedies against the delinquent property owner—first, a summary sale of the property by the city treasurer on demand of the bondholder, and, second, a foreclosure of the lien of the assessment at the suit of the contractor. In addition to this, section 28 of the act seemed to contemplate some sort of legal action by the bondholder to enforce the lien of the bond which was established by the act as distinguished from the lien of the assessment. By the amendment to section 76 of the act made in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 297, § 10), it was expressly provided that "by way of a separate, distinct and cumulative remedy, the holder of any bond * * * may file and maintain a suit to foreclose the lien of the bond in the same manner provided in this act for the foreclosure of the lien of delinquent assessments." The amendment also provided for a simple method of pleading and proof in such cases, for substituted service of process where the lot owner could not be found, for the foreclosure of the lien of the bond, and for attorney's fees and costs. The right of redemption of the property after sale was preserved "as in other cases."

[2, 3] In considering the question whether the amendment offends the constitutional inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of a contract, it is well to point to the accepted rule that an attack upon a law on this ground is a federal question upon which the rulings of the federal courts are controlling. 12 Cor. Jur. p. 1057. The rule of the federal courts on this subject is correctly stated in 12 Corpus Juris, pp. 1070 and 1072, where it is said:

"A statute may not be declared unconstitutional for giving an additional remedy, or enlarging or making more efficient an existing remedy for the enforcement of a contract. * * * A statute providing an additional method of enforcing an existing statutory lien is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of any contract of the owner of the property subject to the lien."

See Livingston v. Moore, 7 Pet. (32 U. S.) 469, 551, 8 L. Ed. 751; Gross v. United States Mortgage Co., 108 U. S. 477, 488, 2 S. Ct. 940, 27 L. Ed. 795; People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332, 342 (76 Am. Dec. 521), where the court said: "It is nothing to say that the new remedy is more effectual than the old; so is, or ought to be, every new remedy." Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 80, 85, 24 P. 648; Teralto L. & W. Co. v. Shaffer, 116 Cal. 518, 523, 48 P. 613, 58 Am. St. Rep. 194; Boggs v. Ganeard, 148 Cal. 711, 720, 84 P. 195; Buck v. Canty, 162 Cal. 226, 233, 121 P. 924; Lantz v. Fishburn, 17 Cal. App. 583, 589, 120 P. 1068; Aikins v. Kingsbury, 170 Cal. 674, 679, 151 P. 145, 147, where the court said: "A remedy may be given where none existed before and it follows that a new and more liberal remedy may be substituted for one which was in effect at the time the contract of sale was made." The amendment of 1921 was designed to come within this rule as it was declared to provide merely an additional remedy for the enforcement of an existing obligation.

In support of the appeal the appellant is of course forced to contend that the bond is a contract and that the obligation of that contract has been impaired by the amendment. In support of the argument Chapman v. Jocelyn, 182 Cal. 294, 187 P. 962, and Oakland Street Improvement Bond Co. v. Fitzmaurice, 47 Cal. App. 258, 190 P. 499, are cited. In reply, respondent and amicus curiæ point out that the Chapman Case was an appeal by a property owner from a judgment quieting title based upon a sale of the property by the city treasurer, and that the only issue involved was whether the sale was void because the treasurer incorrectly computed the interest chargeable under the bond, and that the latter case was a suit of the street contractor against the city treasurer to require him to make a sale under the Street Improvement Act without payment by him (the contractor) of the costs for a title search in order to give notice to all lienholders as required by a later amendment. It is argued that the statements in these opinions to the effect that these street bonds, as well as the street assessments, were contracts, should be disapproved as mere dicta and not supported by the authorities. It is not necessary for us to do this in this proceeding. We may assume that these bonds are contracts, but that would not aid the appellant because, if they are contracts, they do not run to a mortgagee of the premises, but are obligations between the contractor and the city.

Appellant insists that because of Chapman v. Jocelyn, supra, we should hold that the bond is a contract to which the lot owner is in some measure a party. Conceding the point, we are unable to see how it may avail appellant in this proceeding. If the lot owner is a party to the contract, his obligation under it is to pay into the city fund sufficient money to meet the principal and interest on the bond and the penalties added in case of forfeiture. The obligation on the part of the city is to turn over these payments to the bondholder when, and only when, they have been paid into the special fund for that purpose. The obligation of the bondholder, if any, is to make proper acknowledgment of these payments and release of the lot owner's obligation. The obligation of the lot owner to pay is in fact fixed by the assessment proceedings under the statute rather than by the bond. These proceedings being regular (a matter which is conceded on this appeal), that obligation is just as firmly fixed as if it had been covered by a final judgment against the lot owner. By the terms of the act the bond was declared to be a lien upon the property to cover all these costs and penalties. This lien was made enforceable by sale by the city treasurer, but we have been shown no authority holding that no other method could have been employed to enforce the fixed obligation against the lot owner.

The case is similar to those arising under the arbitration statute of the state of New York, which has been held to apply to contracts providing for arbitration executed before the statute was passed. An attack upon the statute was based upon the claim that it impaired the obligation of these contracts, but the courts of the state of New York, as well as the Supreme Court of the United States, have held that the statute merely provides an additional remedy and is therefore not subject to the objection that it violates section 10 of article 1 of the federal Constitution. In the Matter of Berkovitz, 230 N. Y. 261, 272, 130 N. E. 288, 290, Cardozo, J., speaking for the Court of Appeals, said:

"The wrong to be redressed is the rejection of merchandise in violation of a contract. Such a wrong had a remedy for centuries before the statute. All that the statute has done is to make two remedies available when formerly there was one."

See, also, Red Cross Line v. Atlantic Fruit Co., 264 U. S. 109, 123, 124, 44 S. Ct. 274, 63 L. Ed. 582.

[4] The appellant lays considerable stress upon the rule of cases cited that the laws in force at the time a contract is made enter into its obligation, and it is argued from this that because the lot owner contracted to suffer foreclosure by sale without proceedings in a court of law, the Legislature was powerless to add such a remedy for the breach of his obligation. In Oshkosh Waterworks Co. v. Oshkosh, 187 U. S. 437, 439, 23 S. Ct. 234 (47 L. Ed. 249) Harlan, J., speaking for the court said:

"It is well settled that while, in a general sense, the laws in force at the time a contract is made enter into its obligation, parties have no vested right in the particular remedies or modes of procedure then existing. It is true the Legislature may not withdraw all remedies, and thus, in effect, destroy the contract; nor may it impose such new restrictions or conditions as would materially delay or embarrass the enforcement of rights under the contract according to the usual course of justice as established when the contract was made. Neither could be done without impairing the obligation of the contract. But it is equally well settled that the Legislature may modify or change existing remedies or prescribe new modes of procedure, without impairing the obligation of contracts, provided a substantial or efficacious remedy remains or is given, by means of which a party can enforce his rights under the contract."

To the same effect is National Surety Co. v. Architectural Co., 226 U. S. 276, 285, 33 S. Ct. 17, 57 L. Ed. 221, and Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 530, 27 S. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163.

Appellant advances the argument that the obligations of the contract are impaired because the period of redemption after sale is altered. In this connection it is pointed out that under a sale by the city treasurer under the original act the property owner was permitted to redeem within 12 months after sale and for a further period if the purchaser neglected to apply for a deed, while, under the amendment, the period of redemption was fixed at 12 months from the date of the foreclosure sale. As we read the statute, the amendment is more favorable to the appellant than to the respondent. Under the original act the purchaser was not required to wait until the expiration of the 12 months' period to apply for a deed; this application could be made at any time within that period, and, if made in time, the deed would issue immediately upon the expiration of 12 months from the date of the sale. Under the amendment the period of redemption ran from the date of the foreclosure sale after the judgment became final. It is unnecessary to do more than mention the fact that the time required for service of process, the delay in bringing the cause to trial and in executing the judgment, and the time required to give notice of the sale, would extend rather than shorten the rights of the property owner in so far as his right of redemption is concerned.

[5-7] It is also argued that the amendment impairs some obligation of the contract because it prescribes a special and simple method of pleading the complaint, because it makes the city treasurer's certificate that the bond has not been paid "prima facie" evidence of that fact, and because it permits the recovery of costs and attorney's fees. We are not able to follow appellant in its contention that under the original act the bondholder had no legal action to enforce the lien of the bond. If, as appellant argues, the bond is a contract, we are unable to perceive why the bondholder, as one of the contracting parties, could not have his suit to enforce his contract under the ordinary rules of procedure. Certainly the fact that the statute provided a method of summary sale without suit cannot be taken as a denial of the right to pursue the ordinary legal or equitable remedies for the enforcement of the contract, particularly in the absence of some expression of that intention in the statute itself. There may be no controversy on this principle—that there is no vested right in a particular remedy or in a particular form of legal procedure. Black Constitutional Prohibitions, § 192; 12 Cor. Jur. p. 974; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 74, 24 L. Ed. 610; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 633, 24 L. Ed. 365; Boggs v. Ganeard, 148 Cal. 711, 720, 84 P. 195. Contracts are made in contemplation of the power of the state to amend the remedy or to provide a new one so long as the vested rights and obligations of the parties are not disturbed. Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 415, 416, 22 S. Ct. 384, 46 L. Ed. 612; Aikens v. Kingsbury, 170 Cal. 674, 679, 151 P. 145. But, in any event, the point is not available to appellant on this appeal. Though a demurrer to the complaint was filed, it appears from the bill of exceptions that at the opening of the trial the respondent offered in evidence without objection the street bonds with the coupons attached thereto and all the proceedings under which the bonds were issued. It also appears from the bill of exceptions that the respondent "also offered proof sufficient * * * that the amounts thereof had not been paid, and also proof sufficient to sustain all of the remaining allegations of the plaintiff's complaint." It also appears that no attorney's fees were allowed and that the costs awarded were merely the statutory costs of suit allowable in ordinary actions. The appellant has therefore failed to show any prejudicial error in respect to any of these specifications.

[8, 9] The further point is made that the amendment is not applicable to bonds issued prior to its enactment because it does not expressly provide that it shall be retroactive. This question is always one of the intention of the Legislature—to be determined by the context of the act itself when possible and by the history and surrounding circumstances when necessary. Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 761, 103 P. 199, concurring opinion of Shaw, J. Here the amendment authorizes "the holder of any bond upon which any payment * * * has not or shall not be made" to maintain a suit to foreclose the lien. It would seem clear that the Legislature intended the amendment to apply to bonds outstanding and unpaid as well as to those issued in the future. Furthermore, the general rule is that statutes which merely affect the remedy or the procedure for the enforcement of existing rights are to be treated as prospective in that they apply to all actions thereafter instituted, but not to actions pending at the time of the enactment. Matter of Berkovitz v. Arbib & Houlberg, 230 N. Y. 261, 130 N. E. 288; Dowell v. Talbot Paving Co., 138 Ind. 675, 38 N. E. 389.

[10] Finally, it is argued that the judgment is faulty in that it includes the amount of taxes assessed against the property involved pending the litigation and paid by the respondent. There is no merit in the point. Section 76 of the Street Improvement Act under which this suit is prosecuted provides that the action to foreclose the lien of the bond shall be governed by the Codes of the state when not in conflict with express provisions of the act. Section 2876 of the Civil Code provides that: "Where the holder of a special lien is compelled to satisfy a prior lien for his own protection, he may enforce payment of the amount so paid by him, as a part of the claim for which his own lien exists." The latter section has been followed in Savings & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 54 P. 254; Windt v. Covert, 152 Cal. 350, 93 P. 67; and Morris v. Hartley, 26 Cal. App. 61, 146 P. 73. But appellant argues that all these cases were suits for the foreclosure of a mortgage and that they cannot be controlling here. The Code section refers to "the holder of a special lien"; it is not limited to the holder of a mortgage lien, and we can find no reason or equity in holding that the section does not apply to a street bond lien. In fact, the taxes were paid by the respondent upon the express stipulation and consent of the appellant to save the property from delinquent sales to the state. Under any view of the transaction it was a benefit to the appellant. The costs which would have arisen from the tax sales as well as the penalties which would have been added have all been eliminated by the payment of the taxes by respondent, and if appellant contemplates redeeming the property under the judgment rendered herein its burden is lessened to that extent at least.

Judgment affirmed.

MOORE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 5773.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 20, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 20, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 18, 1927.

1. Divorce $\S$ 289—Decree for maintenance of children against nonresident is void, unless he appears, or has been personally served within court's jurisdiction.

A decree for maintenance of children against nonresident is void, unless he has appeared in person or by attorney, or has been personally served with process within territorial jurisdiction of court.

2. Divorce $\S$ 309—Decree for maintenance of children need not reserve discretionary right to modify decree (Civ. Code, $\S$ 138).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 138, providing that decree for custody and maintenance of minors may be modified or vacated at any time, decree for maintenance need not reserve court's discretionary right to modify decree because of change in circumstances of parties.

3. Divorce $\S$ 309—No new service of process is necessary for modification of decree for maintenance of minors (Civ. Code, $\S$ 138).

No new service of process is necessary to confer jurisdiction on court to modify decree for maintenance of minors, as provided in Civ. Code, $\S$ 138, since power of court not having been exhausted, it has right and power to exercise unexhausted portions of its power in such manner as changed conditions and circumstances may require or indicate to be just.

4. Divorce $\S$ 309—Court may modify decree for maintenance of minors without service of new process, even though party affected has become resident of another state (Civ. Code, $\S$ 138).

Court retains power to modify decree for maintenance of minors under Civ. Code, $\S$ 138, as long as there is a minor child provided for by decree, without new service of process, even though either of parties, before modification, has become resident of another state.

5. Courts $\S$ 30—Jurisdiction over person once acquired, court may bind him by any subsequent order which court has jurisdiction to make, though party becomes nonresident.

Once a judicial proceeding is commenced with jurisdiction over person of party concerned, it is within power of court to bind him by every subsequent order which court retains jurisdiction to make, notwithstanding order is made after removal from state of party affected by supplemental order.

6. Divorce $\S$ 309—Where notice of motion to modify decree for maintenance was mailed to nonresident husband and filed with clerk, and husband appeared to question jurisdiction, order of modification was valid (Civ. Code, $\S$ 138; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1015).

Where notice of motion to modify decree for maintenance of minor children was mailed to nonresident husband, and filed with clerk, as provided for by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1015, and husband appeared for purpose of questioning jurisdiction of court, notice given was sufficient, and order modifying decree as provided for under Civ. Code, $\S$ 138, was valid.

Application by William H. Moore for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, John J. Van Nostrand, Judge, modifying final decree of divorce. Order affirmed.

Stanislaus A. Riley, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Leo A. Murasky and R. F. Mogan, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for a writ of review. It appears therefrom: That on the 8th day of April, 1914, the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco made and entered an interlocutory judgment and decree of divorce in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in an action entitled Alyce Moore, Plaintiff, v. William H. Moore, Defendant. That in and by said decree the care, custody, and control of the two minor children, the issue of the marriage, was awarded to plaintiff, with permission to defendant to visit them at reasonable times. The community property of the parties was awarded to plaintiff, and defendant was ordered to pay to her the sum of $30 per month for the support and maintenance of the children, and the further sum of $12.50 at stated intervals for necessary clothing. Thereafter, on April 12, 1915, a final decree was entered dissolving the marriage and restoring the parties to the status of single persons. This decree reiterated the provisions as to the custody of the children, and the payments to be made by defendant for their support and maintenance. Petitioner herein was represented by E. G. Ryker, Esq., in the action referred to, up to and until after the entry of the final decree, at which time he ceased to represent petitioner. That on September 8, 1926, said Ryker was served with a notice of motion reciting that plaintiff would, on September 24, 1926, move the court for an order amending the final decree of divorce by directing defendant to pay plaintiff the sum of $60 per month for the support and maintenance of the minor children, and the further sum of $50 at stated intervals to assist in the purchase of their clothing. That on November 5, 1926, said Alyce Moore, in person and by counsel, appeared before the superior court, whereupon the following proceedings were had: A notice of special appearance was served upon plaintiff by counsel representing petitioner and filed with the clerk. The special appearance recited that it was made for the limited purpose of moving the court to quash the attempted service of the notice of motion, upon the ground that it had not been legally made, and the court had therefore acquired no jurisdiction to entertain it or make any order in the premises. In support of said objection counsel representing petitioner read and filed an affidavit of E. G. Ryker, petitioner's former attorney, in which it was recited that his employment as attorney for petitioner had ceased at the time of the entry of the final decree, and that he was not the attorney for petitioner at the time of the service of the notice of motion. Thereupon the plaintiff in the action offered in evidence an affidavit of service of said motion upon petitioner herein. This affidavit recited that a copy of the notice of motion had been mailed to petitioner at his residence in Portland, Or., in which state petitioner has resided since the year 1917. Thereupon the court overruled the objection to its jurisdiction, and proceeded to hear and determine the motion. It appeared in evidence that one of the children, a son, had reached his majority at the time of the hearing. Thereafter, in November, 1926, the court made and entered its order modifying the final decree by allowing the plaintiff $50 for the maintenance and support of the daughter, a minor. It is under these facts that it is claimed that in hearing the motion for modification of the terms of the final decree the court exceeded its jurisdiction. It is argued that no proper service of the notice of motion was made upon petitioner, for the reason that at no time since a period long antedating the 8th day of September, 1926, had he been within the state of California, or within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, and that the only service alleged or relied upon so far as petitioner is concerned was the service by mail addressed to him at the city of Portland, state of Oregon, a place beyond the jurisdiction of the court. That no service was effected or acquired by leaving a copy of the notice of motion at the office of his former attorney, for the reason that he had no authority to represent him at any time subsequent to the entry of the final decree. With reference to the attempted service by the mailing of the copy of the notice of motion to petitioner in the foreign state, we are cited to such cases as Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 P. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165, to the effect that as a decree in alimony being in the nature of a judgment in personam, a court must acquire jurisdiction of the person by a personal service of process, and that such process cannot be served beyond the confines of the state to a sister state, so as to justify a personal judgment based upon such service. See, also, Johnson v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 578; Hobbs v. Tom Reed Mining Co., 164 Cal. 497, 129 P. 781, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112. Counsel for respondent has not favored us with a brief upon the subject.

[1-6] It is well established, however, that a decree for maintenance is allowed the wife in recognition of the husband's liability to support his children, an obligation which is personal, and, since a decree of this character is strictly one in personam, it must follow that such a decree against a nonresident is void, unless he has appeared in person or by attorney, or has been personally served with process within the territorial jurisdiction of the court. A discussion of this question, however, or of the question of the powers of a court over the res within the jurisdiction, when the proceeding becomes one quasi in rem, are questions that we do not think are in any manner involved in the instant proceeding. In divorce actions the statute expressly provides that a decree for the custody and maintenance of minors may be modified or vacated at any time as may seem necessary or proper, Civ. Code, § 138. The propriety of modification in this particular, as well as the extent thereof, because of a change in the circumstances of the parties, rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. A decree need not reserve this right of modification. In such cases it is not final as a matter of law because it does not purport to be final and conclusive as a matter of fact. This reservation by reason of the statute constitutes the order an unfinished determination of the judicial mind; that is, the court has not completely disposed of the case. The power of the court not having been exhausted, it has the right and power to exercise such unexhausted portion of its power in such manner as changed conditions and circumstances of the case may require or indicate, to be just. This being so, no new service of process is necessary to confer jurisdiction. In such a case the court does not undertake to confer power upon itself. It merely exercises the unexhausted portion of the jurisdiction it already has. The decree is a continuing one, and the jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject-matter remains so long as there is a minor child whose welfare and maintenance are provided for in the decree. Ruge v. Ruge, 97 Wash. 68, 165 P. 1063, L. R. A. 1917F, 721. And this retention of the power of modification exists, notwithstanding that either of the parties may, after the entry of the decree, and before the modification, has become a resident of another state. The decree being under the control of the court, and jurisdiction not having been lost, a modification thereof is binding upon the parties wherever they may be. Andrews v. Andrews, 15 Iowa, 425. Once a judicial proceeding is commenced with jurisdiction over the person of the party concerned, it is within the power of the court to bind him by every subsequent order which the court retains jurisdiction to make (McSherry v. McSherry, 113 Md. 395, 77 A. 653, 140 Am. St. Rep. 428), and this notwithstanding the order is made after the removal from the state of the party affected by the supplemental order (Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 16 S. Ct. 366, 40 L. Ed. 525). Nor is there any merit in the further contention that the order is void for want of proper notice. Petitioner was fully advised as to the pendency of the motion, and appeared for the purpose of questioning the jurisdiction of the court to hear the application. Evidence was taken upon the hearing, and he had full opportunity to be heard. As above indicated, the court was not attempting to acquire jurisdiction over the person of the defendant under the notice, for it already had jurisdiction, and petitioner was given all the notice possible that the court intended to exercise its jurisdiction. Any other conclusion would be to say that, the court having jurisdiction, it was without power to exercise the same. Moreover, section 1015, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, when a plaintiff or defendant, who has appeared, resides out of the state, and has no attorney in the action or proceeding, service may be made on the clerk for him. The notice of motion was filed with the clerk. For the reasons given, the order is affirmed.

FISHER v. BROTHERTON et al.*
(Civ. 5568.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 26, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Exchange of property §8(3)—Complaint in action to rescind exchange of property sufficiently alleged that false representations were inducing cause.

In action to rescind contract for exchange of real and personal property, complaint alleging that the false representations were the inducing cause of the contract and that it was made on account of them, sufficiently alleged that without the representations the contract would not have been made.

2. Exchange of property §8(3)—Complaint in action to rescind exchange of property for fraud need not expressly allege pecuniary damage, but should allege injury to property rights.

In action to rescind contract for exchange of property, because of fraudulent misrepresentations, no express allegation of pecuniary damage is necessary, but it should be alleged that plaintiff has suffered injury to her property rights by reason of the fraud.

3. Appeal and error §1039(2)—That plaintiff, seeking to rescind exchange of property for fraud, did not expressly plead injury to property rights, held not reversible error.

In action to rescind contract to exchange property because of fraudulent misrepresentations as to the existence of springs and a supply of gravity water, and as to the productivity of the soil, failure to expressly allege pecuniary damages or injury to property rights held not reversible, particularly where no demurrer was interposed, and case was tried without objection on theory that complaint was sufficient.

4. Exchange of property §8(3)—Plaintiff, seeking to rescind exchange of property, for fraud, need prove only one specification.

In action to rescind contract to exchange real and personal property because of fraud, it is not necessary to prove that all of the specifications of fraudulent misrepresentations are true, but proof of one material representation is sufficient.

5. Exchange of property §8(3)—That complaint to rescind exchange of property alleges representations not actionable is immaterial.

In action to rescind contract to exchange real and personal property because of fraudulent misrepresentations, it is immaterial that the complaint alleges representations which are not actionable.

6. Exchange of property §8(1)—That findings in action to rescind exchange of property, included representations not actionable is immaterial.

In action to rescind contract to exchange real and personal property because of fraudulent misrepresentations, it is immaterial that the court's findings included representations which are not actionable.

7. Exchange of property §3(1)—Representations respecting water and productivity held each to authorize rescission of exchange of property.

False representations that there were several large springs on ranch and a vast supply of gravity water available, and that the soil was very productive, there being 60 acres of good bean land and 50 acres of bottom land, nearly all irrigable or subirrigated, and that the side hills were very dark loam, held each sufficient to authorize rescission of contract to exchange real and personal property.

8. Exchange of property ⇨5—Party to exchange of properties, who took possession in October and attempted to rescind in September following, for misrepresentations, held not to have unreasonably delayed.

Party to exchange of real and personal property, who took possession October 1, 1917, and attempted to rescind in September, 1918, did not unreasonably delay, in view of nature of false representations.

9. Exchange of property ⇨8(4)—Excluding defendant's evidence that agent who negotiated exchange of property sought to be rescinded for fraud was financially interested with plaintiff held error.

In action to rescind exchange of property because of fraud, it was error to exclude defendant's evidence that the agent who conducted the transfer was financially interested with plaintiff in the transaction, and received a profit other than the commission therefor.

10. Witnesses ⇨275(4)—Refusing to permit cross-examination of plaintiff, seeking to rescind exchange of properties, respecting alleged misrepresentations, held error.

In action to rescind exchange of real and personal property on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations, it was error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to cross-examine plaintiff regarding alleged misrepresentations.

11. Appeal and error ⇨1056(4)—Excluding evidence held not prejudicial, where court was sitting in equity and assumed matter was proven.

In action to rescind exchange of real and personal property, excluding defendant's evidence that agent who conducted exchange was financially interested with plaintiff in the transaction, and received a profit other than the commission therefor, held not prejudicial error, where the court was sitting in equity without a jury and assumed matter to have been proven when it made its ruling.

12. Appeal and error ⇨1048(6)—Refusing to permit cross-examination held not prejudicial, where matter was later covered, and findings thereon favored defendant.

In action to rescind exchange of real and personal property on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations, refusing to permit cross-examination of plaintiff regarding oral misrepresentations, which she claimed were made by defendant, held not prejudicial error, where the matter was covered at another period of the trial, and findings thereon were in favor of defendant.

13. Pleading ⇨329—Where party fails to comply with demand for bill of particulars within prescribed time, he may not introduce evidence on subject of account (Code Civ. Proc. § 454).

By the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 454, where a party fails to comply with demand to furnish a bill of particulars within 5 days after the demand, he is precluded from giving any evidence on the subject-matter of the account.

14. Pleading ⇨329—One suing to rescind exchange of property and for moneys expended, who failed to file demanded bill of particulars within prescribed time, held not entitled to recover for moneys expended (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 454, 473).

In action to rescind exchange of real and personal property and to recover for moneys expended in the care, operation, or maintenance of the property, where defendant demanded a bill of particulars, which was not furnished until first trial of action and granting of new trial, held, plaintiff was not entitled to recover for moneys expended, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 454, providing that failure to furnish bill of particulars on demand shall preclude introduction of evidence of account, in view of section 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action to rescind a contract for the exchange of property, brought by Anna Mae Fisher against Theodore Willard Brotherton and another. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Wm. A. Freeman and C. E. Spencer, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kemp, Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis, Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, and Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind a contract for the exchange of real properties executed on September 20, 1917. Judgment went for the plaintiff, from which the defendants have appealed on a bill of exceptions.

The complaint is based upon charges of fraudulent misrepresentations on the part of the defendant T. W. Brotherton, who will hereafter be referred to as the defendant, inasmuch as the property exchanged was his separate property, and his codefendant took no part in the transactions. The complaint alleged that at the time of the exchange the plaintiff was the owner of certain real property situated in Los Angeles county, of the value of $23,500, subject to a mortgage of $7,500, and that the defendant was the owner of a ranch situated in San Diego county, of the reasonable value of $10,000, and of personal property on the ranch, of the reasonable value of $1,500; that the defendant caused a certain written prospectus or advertisement to be prepared, which contained many false representations, namely, as to the climate on the ranch, the water supply and its value, the quality of the soil, the description and value of the lands, the values of the buildings, improvements, live stock, equipment, and household furniture, and the estimates of the crops and the values thereof. It was also alleged that, in addition to the misrepresentations contained in the written paper, the defendant orally represented to the plaintiff facts relating to the number of cattle and horses on the ranch, material for building a fence and for repairing a dwelling house, the quantity of wheat and hay then upon the ranch, that a certain spring was on the ranch and available for the water supply, and that there was sufficient water available to irrigate a 70-acre field of alfalfa; that the net income from the cows on the ranch was $90 per month; that the farm implements were in good condition; that the ranch was a money maker and paid interest on $20,000, and that a tractor had been rented for $6 per day and with the income from the chickens had been sufficient to pay running expenses; and that all these oral representations were false and untrue, and that they were known to have been untrue by the defendant.

It was also alleged that the plaintiff went into possession of the ranch on October 1, 1917, and spent the sum of $6,860 in the operation of the ranch before she discovered that any of the representations alleged were untrue. In this connection it is alleged that the plaintiff did not discover that these representations were untrue until about the month of July, 1918, and that she thereupon gave to the plaintiff written notice of rescission, offering to restore everything of value which she had received, upon condition that the defendant would do likewise, and also that he would pay to her all moneys which she had paid out, amounting to said sum of $6,860.

The answer denied all the charges of false misrepresentations, and alleged that the plaintiff herself was the one who brought about the exchange of the properties, that she falsely represented the value of the property which she transferred to the defendant, that none of the alleged false oral representations was made by the defendant, and that in fact all said oral representations pleaded in the complaint as untrue were in fact true. In reference to the spring, it was alleged that prior to the transfer the defendant informed the plaintiff that he had not had his land surveyed, that he did not know whether said spring was on his property, that he was informed and believed that it was, but that the matter was in dispute. It was also alleged that this information was given to the plaintiff in September, 1917, but that the plaintiff made no complaint regarding this or any other representation claimed to have been false until after September 3, 1918, when the defendant demanded of the plaintiff that she meet the payment of accrued interest on the mortgages given to him as a part of the exchange.

The trial court found that the value of the property exchanged by the plaintiff was $16,000, subject to a mortgage of $7,500, and was not of the value of $23,500, subject to this mortgage, as represented by the plaintiff at the time of the exchange, and as alleged in her complaint. It found that prior to the exchange the plaintiff was ignorant of the character and value of the farm lands, but that defendant did not know of her inexperience, and did not take advantage thereof; that the property of the defendant, free of incumbrances, was of the value of $31,588; that the written representations referred to in the complaint were all made by one Pierce, an agent of the defendant, with full knowledge of the truth or falsity thereof; that certain statements contained in said written paper were untrue, particularly those respecting the climate, water supply, and values of the water, soil, land, and crops; that other statements therein were mere matters of opinion, and that all statements therein respecting the number and value of the buildings, improvements, personal property, and stock were correct and true.

It was also found that the defendant did not make any of the 12 oral representations charged in the complaint, and that in fact all the facts detailed in said representations and alleged to be untrue were in fact true; that Pierce, as agent of the defendant, represented to plaintiff that a certain spring was on the ranch, but that the defendant himself personally pointed out the lines of the ranch to the plaintiff, and told her at that time that he had not had the land surveyed, and knew there was a dispute over the position of the line and the ownership of the spring. It was found that all false statements were made for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff, and that she did not discover the falsity of these until July, 1918; that she was in possession of the ranch from October 1, 1917, to September, 1918, and made no complaint until after the defendant had demanded the payment of interest on her mortgages. In reference to the inspections made by the plaintiff prior to the exchange, it was found that she made three trips to the ranch, but that they consumed short periods of time, and covered only such matters as were pointed out to her. As to her opportunity to discover, during her year of occupancy of the ranch, whether any of the representations were true or false, no finding was made, and likewise upon the issue of whether she would have consummated the exchange had these representations not been made there is no finding.

[1-3] In respect to the complaint, it is argued that it is insufficient, because there is no allegation that any of the representatives alleged to be false induced the contract, or that without them the contract would not have been made, and also that it is insufficient because there is no allegation that the plaintiff suffered any injury or damage by reason of the exchange. Though the complaint is immaturity drawn, we think it sufficient to raise the issue that without the alleged false representations the contract would not have been made, when it alleges that these representations were the inducing cause of the contract and that it was made on account of them. In the matter of pleading damages, it is true that no express allegation of pecuniary damage is necessary, but it should be pleaded that the plaintiff by reason of the fraud has suffered injury to her property rights. Though the plaintiff here has not expressly pleaded any injury, we are satisfied that the judgment should not be reversed upon this ground, particularly when there was no demurrer to the complaint, and the action was tried without objection, and upon the theory that the complaint was sufficient.

[4-7] The serious question presented here is that the findings do not support the judgment. In an action of this kind it is not necessary to prove that all the specifications of fraudulent representations are true. "The judgment may be sustained upon evidence supporting any one material misrepresentation. Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 98 P. 1047; Thomas v. Hacker, 179 Cal. 731, 178 P. 855. It matters not that there may have been included in the allegations and findings representations which are not actionable." Scott v. Delta Land, etc., Co., 57 Cal. App. 320, 324, 207 P. 389, 391. Though the complaint is full of allegations of a great number of misrepresentations, many of which were found not to have been made, while others were found to be true in fact, there were certain material representations charged in the complaint and found to be untrue which are sufficient to sustain the judgment. It was found that the representations that there were several large springs upon the ranch and a vast supply of gravity water to be had; that the soil was very productive, being 60 acres of good bean land, and 50 acres of bottom land, nearly all irrigable or sub-irrigated; and that the side hills were very dark loam—were all untrue. Each one of these representations was a representation of a material fact within the knowledge of the appellant, and was sufficient to support the rescission of the contract.

[8] Excepting the representation relating to the location of what is termed the large spring, all the others could be proved false only by a thorough examination of experts in the use and development of water for irrigation purposes and of experts in the use of soils for farming purposes, or by personal experience gained by actually farming the land over a considerable period of time. Such being the case, we are unable to say upon the record before us that the respondent delayed an unreasonable time in making her discovery of the falsity of any of these representations. There is some uncertainty in the finding as to when the respondent discovered the falsity of the representation as to the location of the large spring. There is certainly evidence in the record to show that she was at least notified before the transaction was closed that the location of this spring was in dispute, that the line of the ranch at that place had not been surveyed, and that the appellant was in doubt as to whether the spring belonged on the ranch or to the adjoining property owner. The meaning of the finding seems to be that, though this information was conveyed to the respondent, she did not take it seriously, and that she did not in fact discover that the spring was not upon the ranch until July, 1918. This being so, the rule of the cases that an unreasonable delay in making a rescission after the discovery of the falsity of the representations should bar a recovery is not applicable.

[9-12] The appellant criticizes the ruling of the trial court in refusing to permit him to make proof that the agent who conducted the transfer was financially interested with respondent in the transaction, and received a profit other than the commission therefor, and also the ruling refusing to permit the appellant to cross-examine respondent regarding certain oral representations which she alleged to have been made by the appellant. We are satisfied that error was committed in both of these rulings, but cannot say that either was prejudicial, because, the matter being before the court in equity sitting without a jury, the relationship of the agent which the appellant sought to prove was assumed by the court to have been proved when it made its ruling, and the inquiry directed to the respondent was covered at another period of the trial, and the trial court in respect thereto found for the appellant.

[13] The error committed in permitting the respondent, in the course of her examination before the referee, to refer to the bill of particulars which had been prepared by her counsel, is of a different character. When the respondent gave her notice of rescission of the contract, she included a demand upon appellant that he pay the sum of $6,860 to reimburse her for the moneys expended by her in the care and maintenance of the ranch, which sum she alleged to be in excess of all moneys which she had received from the proceeds of the operation of the ranch. Her complaint was filed October 8, 1918, and on November 6, 1918, the appellant served upon her a demand for a bill of particulars covering such items. This demand was ignored, and the cause went to trial on December 20, 1918; the first trial resulting in a judgment for the appellant herein. Thereafter, and on the 18th day of June, 1920, a new trial having been granted, the cause again came on for trial and the matter of adjustment of accounts of operation of the respondent's properties was ordered heard before a referee.

At this hearing a bill of particulars dated June 12, 1920, was offered by the respondent and the objection of the appellant that it was inadmissible, because a copy had not been delivered within the time required by law, was overruled. Exception to this ruling was certified to the trial court, and the ruling was sustained. This was error. Section 454, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, when a party demands a bill of particulars covering the items of an account in suit, a copy thereof must be delivered within five days after the demand; otherwise, evidence thereof is to be precluded. In St. John v. Consolidated Construction Co., 182 Cal. 25, 28, 189 P. 276, 277, the Supreme Court held that it was within the power of the trial court to relieve a party from his default in complying with the demand for a bill of particulars, and we assume that what was meant by this decision is that, when timely application is made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, for relief from the mistake, inadvertence, or neglect of the party, the court may grant the relief as if some order or proceeding had been taken against the party in default. There is, however, no uncertainty in the meaning of section 454 of the Code that, when the demand is not complied with within the prescribed time, the party is thereby precluded from giving evidence on the subject-matter of the account. As the record stands here, no application for relief from this default was requested or granted, and all evidence touching the subject-matter included in that demand was improperly admitted.

[14] Another question arises as to the use of this bill of particulars by the respondent in the course of her examination before the referee. It appears that when she left the ranch in the fall of 1918 she delivered to her attorney a copy from a statement made from memoranda which she had kept during the year when she had resided upon the ranch, showing items of expense incurred by her in its operation. From this information, and from information received through another source, her attorneys made up the bill of particulars, including therein items upon which they had no information from either source. This bill was dated June 12, 1920. This was two years after these memoranda had been prepared by respondent and delivered to her counsel—memoranda which, her counsel testified, he had lost immediately following the first trial in 1918. While she was a witness before the referee she was asked to refresh her memory from this bill of particulars, and objection was made on the ground that it had not been prepared by her or through her direction or advice. This objection was overruled, and on this appeal the respondent practically concedes that the ruling was error, and stipulates that the judgment might be modified to the extent of eliminating therefrom the sum of $1,151.70. The original demand made by the respondent upon the appellant was $6,860. The bill of particulars filed about two years later showed a claim of $4,923.56. On the hearing before the referee this amount was reduced to the sum of $3,120.40, but when the matter was returned to the trial court and objections made to the referee's report by the appellant this sum was again reduced to $1,884.45.

The sum of $1,151.70, which the respondent consents may be stricken from the judgment, is arrived at by eliminating from the amount found due by the referee such items alone as respondent now insists were testified to by her without reference to the bill of particulars. This however, does not appear in the bill of exceptions, and respondent concedes that to support her claim it is necessary to go outside of the record. We are satisfied from what has been said that, because of the failure to file a bill of particulars within the time required by law, the respondent is not entitled to recover for moneys expended in the care, operation, or maintenance of the property, and, as the parties agree that the amount allowed for this purpose by the trial court was the sum of $1,884.45, it is ordered that the judgment be modified, by eliminating that amount, and that, as so modified, it is affirmed, with costs to appellant.

PEAVEY et ux. v. MUTUAL REALTY CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 4839.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 26, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨706(5)—Evidence held to sustain recovery for injuries by runaway car.

In pedestrian's action for injuries sustained by collision with runaway car, alleged to have resulted from driver's failure to set emergency brake or from defective condition of brakes, evidence held sufficient to sustain plaintiff's recovery.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1033(5)—Defendant in action for injuries could not complain on appeal of instruction favorable to him.

In action for injuries defendant could not complain, on appeal from judgment allowing plaintiff recovery, of instruction that fact of accident was no evidence of negligence.

3. Trial ⇨296(3)—Instruction that violation of Motor Vehicle Act, if sole cause of injuries, warranted recovery held not prejudicial, where jury were required to find failure to exercise care (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 14).

In action for injuries caused by runaway car, instruction that, if jury found defendant violated Motor Vehicle Act, § 14 (St. 1915, p. 406) and that such violation was sole proximate cause of injuries, they should find for plaintiff, held not prejudicial where other instructions required jury to find defendant had been wanting in exercise of due care to keep automobile in good condition, and where instructions were required to be considered together.

4. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 260(1)—Refusal of instruction is not error, where matters requested are otherwise covered.

Refusal of requested instruction is not error, where matters are fully covered by other instructions given jury.

5. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 1170(9)—Judgment will not be reversed for error in instruction not affecting appellant's substantial rights (Code Civ. Proc. § 475).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, judgment cannot be reversed by reason of error in instruction or ruling unless appellant sustains substantial injury and different result would have been probable if error had not occurred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by James Peavey and wife against the Mutual Realty Corporation and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Culver & Nourse, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment rendered upon a verdict by a jury. The action was prosecuted by plaintiffs to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff Laura Peavey, and to recover resulting damages alleged to have been suffered by her husband, James Peavey, the other plaintiff, by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendants in the operation of an automobile. The complaint alleges that the accident which caused the injuries was caused alone by the negligence of the defendants, by their failure to properly or at all adjust or set the brakes on said automobile, and by negligently permitting the brakes on said automobile to become and remain old, defective, and unsound to such an extent that, when the said brakes were attempted to be set, they did not hold said automobile "from rolling down a decline in the street."

The answer of defendants denies these allegations and all the material allegations of the complaint, and pleads affirmatively that, if the brakes were defective, the defect was unknown to defendants, and by the exercise of reasonable care could not have been discovered by them.

Van Horne avenue (a public highway in the city of Los Angeles) runs north and south, and at the place of the accident declines to the south on a grade of approximately 2½ per cent. On the day of the accident, defendant De la Guardia drove said automobile to a point on the easterly side of the avenue and about 100 feet north of the home of plaintiffs. At that point he stopped said automobile and with a companion who was with him entered a house then in the course of construction. A short time after, which defendant De la Guardia estimates to be 5 or 6 minutes, said car coasted down the street and struck the plaintiff Laura Peavey, who was standing in front of her home purchasing vegetables at a peddler's wagon. She did not see or hear the approach of the driverless car which caused injuries to her, and for which plaintiffs have sued to recover damages. The defendant De la Guardia testified that before leaving the automobile, he pulled on the emergency brake and set it, and that after the accident he found that it was "horizontal" or "vertical"—or one-half on or set. But he testified positively that the position of the brake lever had been changed since he left the machine. He had not noticed that there was any down grade when he left the automobile and could not account for its moving. He said the brake was strong enough to hold the car.

[1] The condition that the emergency brake was in after the accident, without any explanation of its alleged changed position, is sufficient evidence to justify the jury in finding that the brake was in the same position after the accident as when the car was left by De la Guardia. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that he did not know that there was any decline in the grade of the avenue. The fact that the automobile did not start down the decline immediately may have been as explained by the witness Hinkley, who said he had been in the business of repairing and examining and driving automobiles for more than 20 years continuously. He stated that the brakes would hold the car if they were properly set. That they would stay in a proper condition to hold the car until someone releases them. He said:

"If they were in proper condition, there would not be any contact that would release them except by hand."

[2] It appears from his testimony that if the brake bands were heated when set only sufficient to hold the car, and should then cool off, that this might release the brakes sufficiently to allow the car to start down hill. De la Guardia's testimony was the only testimony that the brakes were pulled entirely on. We find on a review of all the testimony that it was sufficient to justify the verdict. Plaintiffs' case did not depend on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and the court instructed the jury that the fact that the accident in question occurred is, of itself, no evidence that it was caused by any carelessness or negligence of the defendants. We are not called upon to approve or disapprove this instruction, but surely defendants cannot complain of it. In fact, a contrary doctrine seems to have been invoked on behalf of the defendants, who would have the court consider that the brakes had held the automobile in the same or a similar place a short time before. Horcasitas did testify that the brakes were set, but not that they were sufficiently set. There was no direct evidence that the brakes were defective.

[3] The instruction as to the terms of the Motor Vehicle Act (section 14; Stats. of 1915, p. 406), in which the jury were instructed that if the jury found that the defendants violated the provisions specified, and that such violation, if any, was the sole proximate cause of any injuries to plaintiff, then they will find damages in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants, is criticized by appellants, who insist that the instruction is defective in that it leaves out all elements of reasonable care to keep the automobile in good condition. But the court specifically instructed the jury that it was their duty to consider not one of the instructions, but all of them together, and to construe them together for the purpose of definitely ascertaining what the law is upon the various questions submitted to them. The court thereafter gave a correct instruction fully covering the matter referred to in the instruction above mentioned. The court instructed as to ordinary care, negligence, proximate cause, and thereafter instructed:

"You are instructed that in this case, before the plaintiffs can recover, they must prove by the preponderance of the evidence either that the defendants negligently permitted the brakes upon their car to be defective and unsound, or that they carelessly failed to properly set the brakes. These two matters are the only matters with which the defendants are charged with being negligent, and no other acts of negligence which you may believe they may have committed can be considered by you."

And thereafter the court instructed the jury that before they could find that the defendants were negligent in failing to have the brakes on the automobile in question in effective and sound condition, they must find from the preponderance of the evidence not only that the brakes were defective, but that they must further find that the defective condition of the brakes was known to the defendants, or that the defect in them, if any there was, was such that it could have been discovered by them by the exercise of that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent man would use under the circumstances. The court also instructed the jury in regard to reasonable care in keeping the automobile and its brakes in sound condition, and that the defendants were not liable for injuries caused by latent or hidden defects such as an ordinarily prudent man would not have discovered under the circumstances, and that an automobile driver or owner was not an insurer of the safe condition of its brakes, and that the law only requires him to use reasonable care to maintain them in an efficient condition; and then said:

"And if you believe from the evidence that the defendant De la Guardia did properly set his brakes when he left the car just prior to the accident in question, and further believe from the evidence that the brakes were in good condition, or that they were defective but that the defect was unknown to the defendants and could not have been discovered by them by the exercise of reasonable care, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendants."

The court further instructed the jury that the fact that the accident occurred did not even raise a presumption of negligence—an instruction most favorable to the defendants. The court, in an evident desire to prevent the jury from considering the accident in itself as any evidence of neglect, even went so far as to instruct the jury:

"And you might each ask yourselves, Did the defendants do anything under the circumstances I would not have done, or failed to do anything in regard to the brakes upon their car or to the care of the same, which I would have done? If your answer is 'No' to this question, your verdict must be in favor of the defendants."

The record does not disclose whether the above instruction was given at the request of defendants, but its apparent substitution of each juror as a psychological defendant in the case might be deemed sufficient to cover a multitude of technical errors such as appellants contend were favorable to plaintiffs. Considering all of the instructions together as the court directed the jury to do, the instructions with regard to the Motor Vehicle Act are not in conflict with the instructions that follow, and the following instructions explain the meaning of the Motor Vehicle Act instructions as clearly as though the instructions had contained the clause introducing them with "provides that." In the case of Mora v. Favilla, 186 Cal. 204, 199 P. 17, cited by appellants, an erroneous instruction was left to stand without giving instructions asked by the defendant, which the Supreme Court said would have cured the error in the instructions given. It should have been apparent to any reasonable juror that the instructions, which appellants claim to have been conflicting, were, when construed together, explanatory to each other, and they produced no prejudicial error.

[4] Appellants also except to the court's neglect or refusal to give their requested instruction, which was as follows:

"You are instructed that the plaintiff is only entitled to recover for such injuries as she may have received as were a proximate result of the accident. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the injuries which she now complains of were proximately caused by the negligence of the defendants."

This instruction was amply covered by several instructions given to the jury. The jury was specifically instructed as follows:

"Negligence on the part of the defendants is of no consequence, however, unless it is the proximate cause of the injuries complained of."

And they were further instructed:

"You are further instructed that, while the plaintiff is entitled to recover for disability or pain that she may suffer in the future, she can only recover for such pain or disability as she is reasonably certain to suffer, and you are not entitled to guess or speculate on these or any other matters."

And they were instructed further:

"If you find for the plaintiff Laura Peavey, you should find such reasonable sum as will compensate her for the injuries which were the proximate result of the accident and for the pain and suffering she has experienced by reason of such injuries or is reasonably certain to suffer therefrom in the future, but you have no right to speculate or guess as to that. And so far as suffering in the future is concerned, such suffering must be reasonably certain to occur. * * * The amount sued for by plaintiff Laura Peavey is not, however, the slightest criterion or guide for you to go by."

[5] This court is required by section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure to disregard any improper instruction, which, in our opinion, did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and not to reverse any judgment by reason of any instruction, error, or ruling unless it shall appear to us that by such instruction, error, or ruling the appellants sustained or suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if such instruction, error, or ruling had not occurred. It is also provided that there shall be no presumption that error is prejudicial or that injury is done if error is shown.

We therefore find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

WHITING v. DELOZIER et al. (McDONALD et al. Interveners). (Civ. 5316.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 26, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨8(3), 37—Evidence held to support findings of agency and fraud of brokers sued by principal for accounting.

In action against real estate brokers for accounting, their testimony and written agreement with plaintiff, and offer of apartment house owner to plaintiff, held to support trial court's findings that they were plaintiff's agents to negotiate exchange of bank stock for apartment house, and represented that it could not be procured for less than 141 shares, which plaintiff placed subject to their order, but acquired it for 100 shares, and retained rest without plaintiff's knowledge or consent.

2. Brokers ⇨34—Brokers retaining part of stock, placed subject to their order for exchange after completing exchange for remaining shares without principal's knowledge, must account therefor.

Brokers withdrawing from escrow 41 of 141 shares of bank stock, placed subject to their order by their principal, to be exchanged for apartment house, after completing exchange for 100 shares, without disclosing either party's proposition to other, must account to principal therefor.

3. Brokers ⇨21—Brokers, without option to purchase stock received for exchange, must report to principal more advantageous terms obtainable.

Brokers, without option to purchase shares of bank stock, placed subject to their order to be exchanged for other property, must report to principal any more advantageous terms of sale obtainable than required by their instructions.

4. Brokers ⇨34—Agent cannot retain fruits of fraud on plea of principal's willingness to pay more rather than not obtain property.

Agent will not be permitted to justify violation of his trust and retain fruits of his fraud from principal on plea that latter was willing to give greater price for property rather than not obtain it.

5. Brokers ⇨34—Principal may recover from agent obtaining secret profit difference between price of land purchased and amount paid agent by principal.

In action against agent for breach of trust and secret profit obtained, principal may recover difference between price of land purchased for, and amount paid agent by, principal.

6. Appeal and error ⇨843(2)—Defendants' objections to intervention by parties not appealing from judgment for plaintiff, nor recovering judgment against defendants, raise mere moot questions.

Where no judgment was entered on interveners' complaint against defendants, and interveners did not appeal from judgment for plaintiff, defendants' objections against right to intervene raise simply moot questions, which will not be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by D. G. Whiting against J. G. Delozier and another, in which William E. McDonald and another intervened. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendants and interveners, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. A. Lane, of Los Angeles (Edw. F. Crawford, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

W. H. Evans, and E. R. Baskerville, both of San Diego, for interveners.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by appellants from a judgment entered in favor of respondent and against appellants and interveners. The interveners have not appealed.

On August 1, 1919, the appellants Delozier and Colvin, being real estate brokers located in Los Angeles, but formerly located in Imperial Valley, where they had known, and had business dealings with, respondent, received a letter from one Francisco inviting them to come to San Diego, saying, "I have a real big trading proposition for you." This Francisco was a real estate dealer in San Diego, and was either an agent for, or jointly interested with, the interveners McDonald and Evans. He introduced appellants to the interveners, and proposed that appellants make some kind of a trade with the interveners for a large partially constructed apartment house in San Diego known as the Winchell Apartments. The interveners had, according to the evidence, acquired this apartment house for practically nothing. The former owner had died after expending considerable money upon the building. There were a number of judgments against the building, and the interveners had bought it at the sale. They had promised to protect these judgment creditors, but had not done so. It did not cost them very much money, and they said they could offer a big deal to turn it quick.

The interveners were brothers-in-law. McDonald was a real estate agent who had acted in many deals as such, but who handled practically his own properties and occasionally employed other brokers. Evans was an undisclosed partner or co-owner with his brother-in-law, and a practicing attorney. At the trial they testified, first, that they two were sole and equal owners and solely interested except for the lien or mortgage holder in the amount of $16,600, but later admitted that Francisco had bought the property for them, and owned a one-fourth interest in the net profits they should make.

Prior to the transaction here in question, the appellants had acted as agents for the respondent in exchanging an apartment house in Los Angeles for 251 shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank of San Jacinto, and respondent had complained to appellants that they had misrepresented the facts to him, and it was to adjust this complaint that appellants agreed to act as respondent's agents in exchanging the bank stock for the San Diego apartment house. According to the testimony of respondent appellants told him that they would get him a trade for the bank stock that would enable him to recover the loss and more, and would ask him no commission. Appellant Delozier prepared a written contract by which respondent employed appellants to make the exchange. Appellant Delozier testified:

"I wrote up the agreement there at the desk at the Maryland Hotel. Then I just drew a line through the commission part. Then he went to sign it, and he said, 'You haven't got net in here,' and I had to write that in before he signed it, and I think, by looking on the agreement which you have here in your files, that you will see it is a little different colored ink, as Mr. Colvin handed me his fountain pen then."

The agreement itself provides:

"This agreement witnesseth that I, D. G. Whiting, of El Centro, Cal., the owner of the following described first piece of property, situate, lying, and being in the city of _____, county of _____, state of _____, particularly described as follows, to wit: 141 shares of bank stock of the First National and the Savings Bank of San Jacinto, Cal., which I agree to exchange for the following described second piece of property, situated, lying, and being in the city of San Diego, county of San Diego, state of California, particularly described as follows, to wit: One apartment house known as the Winchell Apts., located on lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, in block 239 of University Heights in the city of San Diego.

"It is further agreed and understood that all principals to this agreement have investigated the respective properties, and this exchange is being made on representations of the owners only, and the agent is hereby released from all liability regarding the same.

"And J. G. Delozier & B. E. Colvin is hereby authorized to act as my agent in negotiating said exchange.

"And it is further agreed with said J. G. Delozier & B. E. Colvin that when he has secured an acceptance of the proposition to exchange the above-described properties on the above terms, or such other terms which may hereafter be accepted by me, I will then pay the sum of nothing dollars, making it a net proposition, as commission for such services."

With this authority from the respondent, Whiting, the appellants went to the owner of the apartment house, and received from him a proposition addressed to the respondent, Whiting, as follows:

"I, William E. McDonald, hereby make the following proposition to D. G. Whiting, for a transfer of all my right, title, and interest in and to the following described property situated in the county of San Diego, city of San Diego, state of California: Lots 5 to 8, inclusive, in block 239 of University Heights, improved with a 4-story building known as the Winchell Apartments, the said property being free of all incumbrances, with the exception of a mortgage in the sum of $16,600, and state and county taxes for the year 1920. The consideration for said transfer to be 100 shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank of San Jacinto, Cal."

When the construction of the contract was put squarely to the defendant Delozier, he testified:

"The Court: I want to know how you considered yourself operating at that time, as to whether you were agent for either of these parties, or whether you were a free lance, making what you could in this deal. A. In this case I suppose it would be agent for Mr. Whiting, a net proposition. In other words, it would be about the same as an option."

Mr. Lane, attorney for the defendants, cleared the matter up for the trial judge when he said:

"Mr. Lane: Mr. Delozier's evidence has scarcely died from our ears, his testimony that in this document that they charged a commission, but, after he had seen Mr. Whiting they came back, and told Mr. McDonald and Mr. Evans that the deal would be made on a net proposition, and no commission. Now, there is one ground upon which that instrument may be material. I want to call your honor's attention to that. The preliminary instrument shows they did contemplate acting as agent for Mr. McDonald in this matter, and it so recites, but the later instrument, which is the final agreement between the parties, recites just exactly the opposite; namely, that Mr. Delozier and Mr. Colvin were to be the agent of Whiting."

The offer of the interveners to transfer the apartment house to respondent for 100 shares of stock was admittedly concealed from respondent by appellants.

[1] The written agreement for exchange, the written offer of the interveners, and the testimony of appellant Delozier recognize that appellants were the agents of respondent, as also does the testimony of respondent establish such fact, and amply support the findings of the trial court:

"That within two years prior to filing his complaint herein, and on or about the 1st day of August, 1919, plaintiff being then the owner of two hundred and fifty-one (251) shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank of San Jacinto, employed the defendants as his agents to negotiate for the purchase of an apartment house in the city of San Diego, then owned by interveners, to be paid for with shares out of said shares of the capital stock of said First National Bank of San Jacinto so owned by plaintiff.

"That defendants, and each of them, represented to plaintiff that said apartment house could not be procured for plaintiff for less than one hundred and forty-one (141) shares of said capital stock, and plaintiff, relying upon said representations of defendants, as his agents aforesaid, placed one hundred and forty-one (141) shares of said capital stock and the certificates representing the same, all properly indorsed ready for transfer on the books of said corporation, subject to the order of the said defendants.

"That on or about October 1st, 1919, defendants acquired said apartment house for plaintiff for and in consideration of one hundred (100) of said shares of the capital stock of said First National Bank of San Jacinto, and without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff said defendants took, retained and converted to their own use the remaining forty-one (41) shares of the capital stock of said First National Bank of San Jacinto so owned by plaintiff and so placed subject to the order of defendants. That defendants so conducted said negotiations as to hinder and prevent plaintiff and interveners consulting together during said negotiations.

"That plaintiff did not at any time consent that defendants might purchase his said one hundred and forty-one (141) shares of the capital stock of said bank in consideration of their acquiring for him the said apartment house."

[2] As has been said, the evidence supports the findings. The evidence shows that, with an offer from the plaintiff to give 141 shares of bank stock for the apartment house, and an offer from McDonald to take 100 shares of the bank stock for the apartment house, and with the principals separated from each other, with neither proposition disclosed to the person to whom the offer was made, the appellants open the escrow at El Centro and obtain respondent's instruction, placing the 141 shares subject to the order of the appellant Delozier. The exchange being completed between the principals, Delozier withdrew the 41 shares, for which he received. If appellants were respondent's agents, then they must account. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486; Great Western Gold Co. v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 308, 95 P. 151; Id., 155 Cal. 366, 101 P. 6.

The case of Robinson v. Easton, 93 Cal. 80, 28 P. 796, 27 Am. St. Rep. 167, on which counsel for appellants rely, has been sufficiently explained in the case of Smith v. Blodget, 187 Cal. 235, 240, 201 P. 584, 587, as follows:

"The written instrument in the case at bar contains no express provision that plaintiffs shall retain that portion of the purchase price which exceeds the specified selling price. * * * It may mean that all net proceeds above the specified price belong to him, the owners of the property agreeing to part with all interest in the property, whatever the price may be, provided they receive the sum of one hundred dollars per acre free from all deductions, in which case Smith would be in the position of a vendor selling on his own account; it may mean that the owners of the property are entitled to receive all of the net proceeds of the sale and that Smith cannot look to them for any compensation for services unless he obtains for them a net price in excess of one hundred dollars per acre, and in that case he would be a mere agent. Ford v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551 (52 P. 817); Wolverton v. Tuttle (51 Or. 501) 94 P. 961, 963."

[3] The evidence introduced to clear up the ambiguity clearly shows that the offer of the respondent was to the interveners, and that the offer of the interveners was to the respondent. The appellants had no option to purchase either from the respondent or from the interveners. The reason respondent was to pay no commission to appellants is clearly explained. The testimony of all parties was to the effect that the appellants were acting as the agents of the respondent, and counsel for the appellants so represented to the trial court in presenting an objection to the introduction of testimony. On this evidence the trial court solved the ambiguity by a specific finding that respondent did not at any time consent that defendants might purchase his shares of bank stock. Under such circumstances it is the duty of the agent to report to his principal any more advantageous terms of sale he can obtain than that required by his instructions.

Plaintiff placed 141 shares of bank stock subject to the order of appellants with which to purchase the apartment house from interveners. They used but 100 shares in making the purchase. The judgment requires them to account to respondent for the remaining 41 shares which he had placed subject to their order for a specific purpose.

[4] "An agent will not be permitted to justify the violation of his trust and retain from his principal the fruits of his fraud upon the plea that the principal was willing to give a greater price for the property rather than not to obtain it." Calmon v. Sarraile, 142 Cal. 642, 76 P. 486.

[5] In an action against an agent for breach of trust and to recover a secret profit obtained by such agent as the result of the agency relationship, the principal should have from the agent the difference between the price of the land purchased by him for the principal and the amount paid him by the principal. Langford v. Thomas (Cal. Sup.) 252 P. 603; King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628, 634.

[6] Appellants urge a number of points, all of which have to do with the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and to errors in rulings on the right of the interveners to intervene. We have disposed of the question of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and, while we are of the opinion that the rulings of the trial court on the objections raised against the interveners' right to intervene are correct, it is not necessary to distinguish the authorities cited, as the judgment is in favor of respondent and against both appellants and interveners. No judgment having been entered on the interveners' complaint against appellants, and the interveners not having appealed, these objections raise simply moot questions.

The judgment is affirmed.

BELL v. KELLY. (Civ. 4606.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 29, 1927.

1. Libel and slander §112(1)—Evidence not showing utterance of words charged, that plaintiff "had committed perjury," held insufficient to support verdict for slander.

In slander suit, based on statement that plaintiff "had committed perjury," testimony that defendant submitted to district attorney evidence of perjury and demanded issuance of criminal complaint against plaintiff, but not proving alleged statement directly or indirectly, held insufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

2. Trial §335—Verdict in libel and slander suit, not segregating damages, will be set aside on insufficiency of evidence as to one count.

In libel and slander suit, a verdict specifying amount awarded for compensatory and for punitive damages but not segregating the damages as to each count of the complaint, will be set aside where evidence is insufficient to support one of the several counts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action for damages for libel and slander by Mary Jane Bell against Mike Kelly. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John L. Richardson, Anderson & Anderson and T. E. Parke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Weber & Crawford, of Santa Monica, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered on a verdict in an action for libel and slander.

The complaint contained four counts; each of the first two thereof being for both compensatory and punitive damages on account of an alleged libel published by defendant, and each of the last two counts of the complaint being likewise for similar damages alleged to have been occasioned to plaintiff by reason of certain slanderous remarks made by defendant—all of and concerning plaintiff.

The verdict was general in form, and, without segregating the damages (if any) as to each count or as to any of the counts of the complaint, awarded to plaintiff for actual damages the sum of $2,500 and for punitive damages the sum of $3,500, making a total damage of $6,000.

The principal attack of appellant regarding the judgment is directed to the fourth count of the complaint, the gravamen of which was that, with the intention of injuring plaintiff in her good name and reputation, and with actual ill will, malice, and hatred toward plaintiff, defendant stated to one McClelland that plaintiff had committed perjury in the trial of a certain action and sought to have plaintiff arrested and charged with the commission of such offense.

In effect, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict is the question presented—for a determination of which it becomes necessary to examine the evidence in the case which pertains to the point at issue.

In substance, the witness, McClelland, testified that he was a deputy district attorney of the county of Los Angeles in charge of the issuance of complaints in that office against persons charged with the commission of criminal offenses; that some time during the month of September, 1921, defendant called to see the witness in his official capacity as such deputy district attorney. In reply to a question as to what conversation occurred at that time between the deputy district attorney and defendant, the witness stated:

"He came in to make a complaint against some one who had been a tenant of one of his buildings, I think, over the tenancy of which there had been some litigation in the superior court of this county. He wanted to lay the facts before the office with a view to having a complaint issued against his tenants for perjury in connection with that litigation. * * * I think he produced at that time, or at a later conversation, a transcript of the testimony of the party against whom he stated that he wanted a complaint to issue."

A few days later a second conversation took place between the deputy district attorney and the defendant, in which defendant stated that he wished a complaint against the defendant in a certain action, who the deputy district attorney "thought" was the plaintiff in the instant case. The witness further testified:

"He demanded a complaint against the woman for perjury. * * * He told me about this lawsuit that he had had with this woman over a piece of property down at the beach somewhere, produced a record of her testimony showing that the case had been pending before Judge Valentine on an ouster proceeding of some kind—ejectment proceeding—and he also showed me a copy of a newspaper article reflecting upon the integrity of Judge Valentine, which I think he told me he has inserted in the newspaper himself. * * * He asked if I would issue a complaint for perjury upon that testimony. I told him I would not."

No criminal complaint was issued for perjury against the plaintiff herein.

In substance, defendant testified that, when he went to see the deputy district attorney, he "threw him over those nine affidavits, * * * or ten," which constituted the "facts" which defendant presented to the deputy district attorney, and which affidavits theretofore had been prepared by defendant from statements made to him by each of the persons, respectively, who made the affidavits—at the same time making the statement to the deputy district attorney that "here are some papers which I think will show that the party has violated the law," and that, prior to presenting the matter to the deputy district attorney, he consulted a private attorney who advised him to take it up with the district attorney.

Reduced to some what lower terms, the total evidence regarding the charge, that defendant stated to the deputy district attorney that plaintiff had committed perjury, is that defendant went to the office of the deputy district attorney for the purpose of having a criminal complaint issued against plaintiff; that at said time defendant produced a transcript of testimony given by plaintiff in a certain case; gave the deputy district attorney nine or ten affidavits of different persons which tended to establish the commission of the crime of perjury by plaintiff; and asked or demanded that a criminal complaint be issued.

The case of Haub v. Frieremuth, 1 Cal. App. 556, 82 P. 571, is an authority in point. That was an action for slander, in which the defendant was charged with having spoken of and concerning the plaintiff the following defamatory words:

"I have a man to prove that George Haub struck Richard Schwartz in front of his place of business, that he had two witnesses who had tracked the bloodstains from Haub's shop to the place where Schwartz fell unconscious, and that he had proof that Haub was guilty of the murder of Schwartz."

On cross-examination, which differed from the direct examination in no material respect, one of the witnesses gave the language of the defendant as follows:

"He stated that 'they' or 'we' had a witness that had seen Mr. Haub strike Mr. Schwartz; he said he was struck in the butcher shop and that they had a witness that saw Mr. Haub strike this man. He said there was a witness that had followed Mr. Schwartz up the block and saw him stagger all the way and fall at the corner; and also that there were two witnesses that had traced the blood back to the butcher shop."

A second witness testified that in a certain conversation the defendant stated:

"No, I don't believe he had heart disease; somebody hit him because he had a hole in the back of his head. * * * You know that Mr. Haub and Mr. Schwartz had some business troubles and it is George Haub that hit him; * * * he did not say 'killed' or 'murdered,' but he said 'hit' him."

A third witness testified that the defendant said to him, "Mr. Haub might have killed him anyhow;" and a fourth witness testified that defendant said:

"If you will follow up Haub pretty close you will find that this man's death came that way; * * * he might have something to do with it."

In ruling upon the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, the court said that the gravamen of the cause of action was that the defendant falsely charged the plaintiff with the murder of Schwartz; that to authorize a recovery it was necessary to prove that defendant had spoken the words set out in the complaint; that, if the complaint had not set out those words or contained an allegation that they were spoken by the defendant, it would have failed to state a cause of action, since the other words did not of themselves or by reason of any averments in the complaint charge the plaintiff with the commission of a crime, and proof that the defendant had spoken only those other words was equally insufficient to authorize a recovery; and that there was nothing in the testimony which indicated that the defendant had said that he had proof that Haub was guilty of the murder of Schwartz, or that he had uttered any words substantially the same.

[1] The facts in the instant case are much weaker than are those in the case just cited. In the case here under consideration, to summarize the evidence, it is disclosed that defendant submitted to the deputy district attorney evidence of the commission by plaintiff of the crime of perjury, and demanded that a criminal complaint be issued charging her with that offense. He made no statement, either directly or indirectly, that plaintiff "had committed perjury," as charged against him, but to all intents and purposes left the question of the probabilities of whether she had done so to the determination of the deputy district attorney.

There was nothing other than a surmise which would indicate that defendant had spoken the words regarding plaintiff which are set forth in the fourth count of the complaint; nor is there even a suggestion that he used language which would be the equivalent of that with which he is charged. So far as appears from the record, all defendant did was to intimate that plaintiff had "violated the law," which is a far cry from a direct or indirect statement that she had committed perjury. It is therefore apparent that as to the fourth count of the complaint the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict.

[2] It will be remembered that the verdict was general as to the amount of damages awarded; that is to say, the damage sustained by plaintiff as to each count of the complaint was not segregated from either or any of the other counts thereof, but, with the exception of specifying the amount awarded for compensatory damages and for punitive damages, respectively, was aggregated into one lump sum. The effect of the joinder in the verdict of damages not specified in amount which were unwarranted in law is obvious. This court cannot determine the amount of the damages which the jury included in its verdict on a cause of action which was not supported by the evidence. It may have been insignificant as compared to the damages which the jury had in mind as a proper recompense to plaintiff for the wrong caused her by the libelous or slanderous remarks concerning plaintiff, contained in the other three counts, of which the jury found the defendant guilty; or, on the other hand, it may have comprised the greater part of the total amount of the verdict. As was said in the analogous situation in the case of Lewis v. Hayes, 165 Cal. 527, 534, 132 P. 1022, 1024 (Ann. Cas. 1914D, 148):

"It is not within our power or province to segregate the general verdict of the jury into its component elements of an award for compensatory and an award for punitive damages."

Appellant specifies several other alleged errors occurring at the trial, but, as the point hereinbefore considered is determinative of the question as to whether a new trial should be granted, it becomes unnecessary to devote further attention to the appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

M. C. THRELKELD COMMISSARY et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5839.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 22, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨375(1)—Injuries to assistant cook, sent by head cook for laundered aprons for commissary car crew, held to arise in "course of employment" (St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 [a], as amended).

Injuries to assistant cook on commissary car, returning from express office, to which head cook had sent him to procure aprons which members of crew wore and which were laundered apparently at head cook's expense, held to have occurred in "course of employment," under St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 (a), as amended.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

2. Master and servant ⇨375(1)—That injury to commissary car employee, without regular hours or definite work, occurred outside car did not make it noncompensable; "course of employment" (St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 [a], as amended).

That employee was engaged as assistant in commissary car did not prevent accident outside car from being injury in "course of employment," under St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 (a), as amended, where employee had no regular hours of labor nor definite character of work to perform, being subject at all times to head cook's orders.

3. Master and servant ⇨375(1)—Injury outside usual duties arises "out of employment," where work was ordered by one authorized (St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 [a], as amended).

Though injury to employee occurs in performance of work outside scope of his usual duties, injury may nevertheless be considered as arising out of and in "course of employment," under St. 1923, p. 375, amending Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 (a), as amended, where ordered by one authorized to give directions.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Ong Thlu Lem, known as Kee Ong, against the M. C. Threlkeld Commissary and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation. From an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in claimant's favor, the employer and insurer apply for certiorari. Award affirmed.

Redman & Alexander and R. P. Wisecarver, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Petitioners seek by this proceeding in certiorari to have annulled an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of respondent Ong Thlu Lem, known also and referred to in the record as Kee Ong, who suffered injuries on May 29, 1926, which resulted in the amputation of his right arm at the shoulder.

The Industrial Accident Commission found that the injury occurred in the course of and arose out of Kee Ong's employment (section 6 [a], Workmen's Compensation Act [Stat. 1923, p. 375]), and the question presented by this proceeding is whether such finding is supported by substantial evidence. Petitioners contend that it is not, claiming that Kee Ong was injured while on a personal errand for the benefit of himself and another employee.

The record discloses the following facts: The injured man had been employed for about six months as assistant cook on a commissary car located on a siding at a construction camp named Norden, on the lines of the Southern Pacific Company, which car was being operated by M. C. Threlkeld Commissary, a copartnership, as a "short-order" boarding house for the accommodation of the men employed by said railroad company in its maintenance of way and construction department. Sam Dong, as head cook, was in full charge of the crew of said commissary car, having absolute power to "hire or fire" any member thereof and being given unrestricted authority to direct their services. He had hired Kee Ong, whose entire time and services were subject to Sam Dong's orders. The hours of labor were irregular, the work being assigned by Sam Dong as the volume of business demanded. The wages of the men employed on said car were paid by said copartnership. As was customary in such employment, the members of the cook's crew wore aprons while performing their work which were supplied by the crew and were laundered apparently at the expense of the head cook. Kee Ong had worked through the night preceding the accident, and when Sam Dong came on relief duty in the morning he found there were no clean aprons to wear, whereupon he directed Kee Ong to go down to the express office at Soda Springs, a station about a mile away, to fetch the kitchen laundry which Sam Dong had sent to a Chinese laundry in Sacramento to be washed, and telling Kee Ong that when he returned he could go to sleep. In order to reach Soda Springs from the car, it was necessary for pedestrians to follow the railroad right of way. Complying with Sam Dong's orders and accompanied by another Chinese employee, Kee Ong started immediately, before eating his breakfast, and walked along the railroad track to Soda Springs, but upon reaching there ascertained that the laundry was not there. Kee Ong and his companion then started on their return to the car, and after proceeding some distance along the track were overtaken by a freight train traveling in the same direction. They stepped to one side of the track, but after the engine and several cars had passed them, started forward, walking along the side of the track, when Kee Ong, who was behind his companion, stumbled and fell in such a manner that his right arm fell across the rail and under the wheels of the moving train, with the result that his arm was crushed, necessitating amputation at the shoulder.

[1] We are of the opinion that the foregoing evidence supports the commission's conclusion that said injury occurred in the course of and arose out of Kee Ong's employment, and therefore its findings must be sustained. As said in Dearborn v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 591, 203 P. 112:

"At the outset of this inquiry we may repeat what was said by the present Chief Justice in Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 378, 380, 170 P. 822 [823]: 'This court, in reviewing awards of the commission, is not acting as a court of appeal. It has no power to weigh the effect of positive evidence. It must assume that the commission believed all the evidence given which tends to sustain the award made. * * * Section 84 (section 67 of the present act) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which gives us the power we are now exercising over this award of the commission, authorizes us to annul an award only when the commission acted without or beyond its powers, or when the award was procured by fraud, or is unreasonable, or when the findings of fact do not support it. The findings are not subject to review except in so far as they may have been made without any evidence whatever in support thereof. The review of the findings, even in such cases, is not based on the theory that they are not supported by the evidence, and that we are weighing evidence to determine that proposition, but upon the theory that the commission has no jurisdiction to make a finding where there is no evidence to support it.'"

Appellant contends that because Kee Ong was sent to bring back a package of laundry containing articles of apparel, which the employees themselves furnished in their employment, Kee Ong was on a personal errand, and consequently was not performing any service for his employer. We find no merit in the point. The sole purpose of his trip to Soda Springs was to procure articles to be used in the operation of the business of his employer, and, that being so, it would seem to be immaterial whether those articles consisted of kitchen laundry which the employees furnished or articles supplied by the employer, such as a carving knife which might have been left at Soda Springs to be sharpened or some kitchen utensil sent there to be mended. Petitioners appear to have assumed that the package also contained personal articles of apparel belonging to Sam Dong, but we think this assumption is not borne out by a fair construction of the evidence. Although Sam Dong, in reply to one question, did say that the package of laundry contained "apron and my other clothes," he doubtless meant by the latter phrase his other kitchen clothes, because later on he testified clearly that the laundry consisted of "all kitchen material," and Kee Ong also testified that the package contained "kitchen laundry." If the laundry had consisted entirely of articles of common wearing apparel not particularly identified with a cook's employment, or if Kee Ong had been sent on an errand to obtain a supply of tobacco or other merchandise for the personal use of the cook's crew which had no connection with the operation of the commissary car, a different case would be presented. But the undisputed evidence here shows that the only purpose in sending Kee Ong to Soda Springs was because, when Sam Dong came on duty that morning, he found there were no clean aprons to wear in carrying on the work. If clean aprons had been available that morning, Kee Ong would doubtless not have been required to make the trip.

[2] Petitioners further contend that Kee Ong's duties required his presence only in and around the commissary car; that when Sam Dong arrived at the car on the morning of the accident Kee Ong was relieved from further duty for the day and was then on his own time; that consequently it cannot be said that in complying with Sam Dong's instructions to go to Soda Springs for the laundry Kee Ong was acting within the scope of his employment. The evidence before the commission proved, however, that Kee Ong had no regular hours of labor, nor was there any definite character of work which he was obliged to perform. He was at all times subject to Sam Dong's orders. This point was made clear by the sworn statement of one of the employers to the effect that Kee Ong took his orders directly from Sam Dong, and that if Sam Dong sent Kee Ong to Soda Springs it was his duty to go. The testimony of both Sam Dong and Kee Ong was substantially to the same effect.

[3] Even granting that the task of going for the laundry was not strictly within Kee Ong's duties as assistant cook, such fact alone would not excuse the employer from compensating the injury, for it has been held that, when an employee is injured in performing work outside the scope of his usual duties, the injury may yet be considered as arising out of and in the course of his employment if he was expressly ordered to do the work by some one authorized to direct him. Engels C. Min. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 183 Cal. 714, 192 P. 845, 11 A. L. R. 785; Burian v. Los Angeles Café Co., 173 Cal. 625, 161 P. 4; Oakland v. Industrial Acc. Com., 35 Cal. App. 484, 170 P. 430.

We do not deem it necessary to differentiate the facts of this case from those of the numerous ones cited by petitioners. The legal principles stated in those cases are well settled, but the facts upon which they are grounded are materially different from those of the one before us, as respondents have pointed out in their briefs, and for that reason those principles are not applicable here.

The award is affirmed.

et al. (Civ. 3143.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 22, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 20, 1927.

1. Railroads ⇐320—Motorman operating railway car may presume autobus driver approaching crossing will use due care, and need not check speed.

Motorman operating railway car may presume that autobus driver approaching railway crossing will use due care, and need not check the otherwise rightful speed of his car in passing such crossing until he has reason to believe that the bus driver is neglecting to use care.

2. Trial ⇐168—Rule for granting new trial is not applicable to directed verdict.

The consequences following from a directed verdict and a new trial are so different that the rule applicable in the two instances is not the same.

3. Trial ⇐178—Court should direct verdict only for clear insufficiency of evidence in its most favorable aspect, determined without weighing opposing evidence.

Court should direct verdict for defendant only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all reasonable value, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in plaintiff's favor should such verdict be given.

4. Appeal and error $\Leftrightarrow$ 927(7)—Appellate court, in determining propriety of directed verdict for defendant, should disregard conflicts in evidence and indulge every reasonable inference from plaintiff's evidence.

In determining the correctness of court's action in directing a verdict for defendant, appellate court will disregard all conflicts with testimony on plaintiff's behalf and resolve in plaintiff's favor every reasonable inference that may be drawn from testimony in his behalf.

5. Railroads $\Leftrightarrow$ 350(12)—Whether railway motorman seasonably attempted to warn bus driver, or could have stopped car and avoided accident, held for jury.

It was for the jury, and not for the trial court, to pass on conflict in testimony as to whether railway car motorman seasonably attempted to warn bus driver, and as to whether he could have stopped car and avoided collision with bus.

6. Evidence $\Leftrightarrow$ 77(1)—Autobus driver not testifying held presumed to have seen railway car approaching crossing just before collision.

In action following collision between bus and railway car at crossing, where evidence of passengers on bus showed that railway car could easily have been seen, and bus driver did not testify, held that he was presumed to have seen the railway car approaching the crossing.

7. Carriers $\Leftrightarrow$ 300—Autobus driver approaching railway crossing coincidentally with railway car must presume car motorman would continue over crossing without slowing.

Autobus driver approaching railway crossing coincidentally with railway car must presume that the motorman of the car, in reasonable probability, would continue up to and over the crossing without slowing down.

8. Carriers $\Leftrightarrow$ 300—Autobus driver approaching railway crossing coincidentally with railway car has continuing duty to use caution in protecting passengers from collision.

Where autobus driver approaches railway crossing coincidentally with railway car, the continuing duty rests upon him to use reasonable caution in protecting his passengers from collision.

9. Carriers $\Leftrightarrow$ 320(21)—Evidence held to justify directed verdict against bus owner for driver's negligence in approaching railway crossing.

Evidence held sufficient to justify directing verdict against bus owner, where driver approached railway crossing coincidentally with a railway car without using due care to avoid a collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by W. J. McCarthy against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and A. B. Watson, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Crown Stages. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant Watson, he appeals. From a judgment for defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company against plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Judgment against defendant Watson affirmed. Judgment in favor of defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company reversed.

Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BUCK, Justice pro tem. Action to recover damages sustained by plaintiff while a passenger on an autostage, operated by defendant Watson, which collided at a railroad crossing with an electric railway car operated by defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company.

On behalf of the plaintiff it was alleged that the collision resulting in plaintiff's injuries was caused by the concurrent negligence of the defendant. The case was tried with a jury, and at the close of the evidence offered on behalf of all parties, the trial judge directed the jury to return a verdict against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, and a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Watson for such sum as they should assess as damages. The jury followed these directions and assessed damages against the defendant Watson in the sum of $7,500. From the judgment rendered against him Watson has appealed, and the plaintiff also has appealed from the judgment rendered in favor of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company and against plaintiff. By stipulation of counsel these appeals are heard together, and upon the same transcript prepared and certified under § 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

First, as to the appeal of plaintiff, wherein plaintiff claims that the court erred in directing a verdict against plaintiff and in favor of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company.

The accident occurred at a place on the highway where the highway is 24 feet wide and crosses a double track of the defendant railway company. The highway crosses at an oblique angle, extending from the southeast to the northwest, so that although the distance between the outside rails of the two tracks, measured perpendicularly, is only 19 feet, the distance traveled by the autostage in a northwesterly direction in passing over the tracks would be 53½ feet. The evidence is that the stage was 22 feet long, with a seating capacity of about 20 passengers, and, before undertaking to cross the tracks as it was approaching them, stopped at a distance of from 15 to 25 feet from the southerly rail of the first, or southerly, track. The electric car weighed 69,600 pounds, was 50 feet 10 inches long and 9 feet 8 inches wide, and was approaching the crossing from the east, and collided with the autobus on the north rail of the northerly track while the bus was attempting to cross.

[1] Under the rule laid down in the case of Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992, it may be assumed that at least up to the time the bus stopped at a distance of about 20 feet from the southerly track, and while it was stopping there the motorman operating the railway car had "the right to presume" that the bus driver would exercise his faculties of observation and caution and would not essay a crossing until the danger due to the approaching car had passed, and that therefore the operator of the car up to that time was not bound to check the original speed of his car in approaching the crossing. Consequently, on this appeal the whole controversy touching the degree of care exercised and required to be exercised by the motorman pertains solely to the conduct of the railway motorman during the time while the bus was traveling on the highway a distance of about 75 feet from the place where it stopped on the highway up to the place where it was struck by defendant's approaching railway car on the north rail of the north track. Therefore, it does not seem that the above rule applied in the Billig Case and cases cited therein would foreclose the following inquiries in the case at bar. But, on the contrary, taking the language of the decision in that case as a whole, they are quite pertinent. First, after the bus had stopped, did the railway motorman see the bus as it started up and see it as it continued to approach the railroad track on which his car was moving towards the crossing at the rate of 35 or 40 miles an hour; and did he continue to see the bus as it crossed the first track, going at the rate of about 5 miles per hour; and did he see the bus in its progress arrive at a point where it would reasonably appear that a collision with his approaching car was reasonably likely to occur unless something should be done by him to prevent it? Second, if the motorman did see all the foregoing, was he, when and if he saw the dangerous situation of the bus as it was so approaching the track, himself in a position and situation effectively to warn the driver of the bus of the imminent danger, or himself slacken the speed of his car so as to avoid the collision? Third, if the foregoing was the fact, did the motorman, as a matter of fact as a prudent man, exercise ordinary care in the use of the appliances at his command to warn the driver of the bus or to otherwise avert the collision?

At the close of the evidence offered by the plaintiff in support of plaintiff's contentions upon the foregoing propositions, the trial judge denied the defendant railway's motion for a nonsuit, giving as his reason therefor "that the inferences that must be indulged under the familiar rule respecting nonsuits were such in the circumstances as to require the court to deny the motion." But, as already noted, after the defendants had presented their testimony, much of which was in persuasive conflict with the testimony offered on behalf of the plaintiff, the court gave the instruction complained of herein, directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant railway company. Upon a review of the testimony, it is apparent that this action of the court was based to a large extent upon the views entertained by the court as to the law covering his duty and power in the matter, as stated by the court as follows:

"I did not permit full presentation of arguments pro and con on the motion for nonsuit, for the reason that I felt that the inferences that must be indulged under the familiar rule respecting nonsuits were such in the circumstances as to require the court to deny the motion. The case has reached a different stage. All of the testimony is in. A different rule prevails. The rule which guided the court in determining whether or not a new trial should be granted is the rule that guides the court at the present juncture of the case, all of the evidence is in. You all are familiar with the rule. It has been stated and restated time and time over. So that is what I have in mind at the present time."

[2, 3] It is true that there are a number of cases whose language may be susceptible of the foregoing construction. But, on principle, it is evident that the consequences which follow from a directed verdict and from a new trial are so different that the rule applicable in the two instances should, in reason, not be the same. This is clearly expressed by our Supreme Court, in the case of Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 P. 631, where the question was directly involved, and the court stated as follows:

"It is beyond controversy that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, touching the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of the court to grant a nonsuit. It may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given. Of course, if in such a case no motion for nonsuit has been made and the issues have been turned over to the consideration of the jury, and that jury has rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, such verdict being unsupported by any substantial evidence, it becomes the imperative duty of the court to set it aside. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252; Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 P. 130; Marron v. Marron, 19 Cal. App. 326, 125 P. 914. But when, and only when, the evidence of the proponent is thus insufficient, the court may and should, as has been said, grant a non-suit, and may and should on motion direct a verdict. * * *

"The rule as to directed verdicts is not that a verdict may be directed whenever the evidence is such that upon motion the court would grant a new trial. The court may grant a new trial even when there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict if it believes that the evidence preponderates against the verdict. It is under compulsion to order a new trial, and may do this of its own motion when the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict. This is the meaning of the language in Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 P. 267, where it is said that a directed verdict is proper 'whenever upon the whole evidence the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence.' For a detailed and satisfactory discussion of this proposition reference may be made to McDonald v. Metropolitan Street Ry. Co., 167 N. Y. 66, 60 N. E. 282."

See, also, Kohn v. National Film Corporation of America, 60 Cal. App. 112 at page 116, 212 P. 207.

[4] Therefore, in the case at bar, in determining the correctness of the court's action in directing a verdict, we should follow the rule indicated above and disregard all conflicts with testimony on behalf of the plaintiff, and resolve in plaintiff's favor every reasonable inference that may be drawn from testimony in his behalf.

And, first, as regards the knowledge of the motorman of any reasonable likelihood of peril attaching to the occupants of the motorbus after the bus left its position of safety and was approaching the crossing toward which the motorcar was moving at the rate of 40 miles per hour: One witness testified that when the bus stopped, as just stated, defendant's car was approaching the crossing at the rate of about 40 miles per hour, and when the motorbus stopped, defendant's car was at a distance of from 1,000 to 1,200 feet from the crossing. While another witness testified that at the time referred to defendant's railway car was at a distance of about 800 feet from the crossing. Defendant's motorman testified that he was at a distance of about 500 feet from the crossing when he saw the autobus stop at a place about 15 feet from the south rail of the south track, and that he continued to approach the crossing at that rate of speed until he was distant about 150 feet from the crossing, when, as he testifies, he blew a number of short blasts of the whistle and applied his emergency brakes, his testimony being as follows:

"Q. You didn't blow the whistle and you didn't apply the emergency brakes until you got about 150 feet? A. Yes, sir; about that distance.

"Q. You say you saw the bus stop when you were at a distance of about 500 feet? A. Well, between 4 and 5. I could not give the exact distance. Between 400 and 500.

"Q. You saw him start up immediately? A.

No, sir; not immediately. It may be a second or so.

"Q. Well, you saw him start? A. Yes.

"Q. And you had your eyes on him all the time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you went from where you saw him—you got to 150 feet before you blew the whistle or applied the emergency? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And, as a matter of fact, didn't you think all that time it was going to stop again? A. I didn't know whether he would stop a second time or not.

"Q. You didn't know whether he would? A. No; I didn't know what he was going to do.

"Q. Didn't you know, as soon as you saw him start again, that he was attempting to go ahead across in front of you? A. No; I figured he would hear the whistle, and that he would stop."

[5] From the foregoing, the jury could have believed that the motorman did, as a matter of fact, see the bus stop when he was at a distance, not of 500 feet, but 800 or 1,000 feet from the crossing. And, so believing, the jury could have drawn a reasonable inference not only that the motorman was in doubt, as he seemed to have been, as to whether the bus would stop again, but they could also have reasonably inferred that, as a prudent man, the motorman should and could have acted thereon by giving immediate warning, or by bringing his car to a stop before it was too late. And in this connection it was within the power of the jury, and not the trial court, to pass on the conflict in the testimony as to whether the motorman sounded the warning bell or as to whether he could have stopped within 250 feet or 125 feet. As stated in the case Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748 at page 752, 134 P. 709, 711:

"We think it must be held that there was enough in the evidence to justify the jury in finding that the motorman was negligent in not giving proper warning, by bell or whistle, of his approach. It is true that the only evidence that he did not give such warning was negative, consisting of the statements of the people in the automobile that they heard no signal. But, if they were so situated, as they undoubtedly were, as to have been able to hear a bell or whistle sounded from the motorcar, their failure to hear is some evidence that no such signal was given [citing cases]. That there was positive testimony to the contrary does not conclusively establish that a warning was given."

It would therefore seem from the foregoing, irrespective of what the opinion of the trial court or the appellate court might be as to the weight of the testimony, that in this case there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury to enable the jury to pass upon the conflicts in the testimony and the conflicting inferences that might be drawn therefrom, and that it should be for the jury to determine, after hearing the testimony, whether the defendant was within the qualification of the rule laid down in the Billig Case, as follows:

"And it has accordingly been held that the operator of such train or car was not bound to check the otherwise rightful speed of his train or car in approaching and passing such crossing until at least he has reason to believe that such person so approaching such crossing is not performing, or is not likely to perform, his duty in the foregoing regard."

And as regards the appeal of the defendant Watson from the judgment entered against him on the directed verdict:

In the case of Forbell v. Pac. Electric Railway Co. et al. (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 890 (decided March 28, 1927), the Supreme Court passed upon an instructed verdict given against the defendant Watson in an action arising out of this accident on behalf of another passenger in the bus. In that case the Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that the defendant Watson was liable. But in the case cited it would seem from the opinion that the evidence relied upon by the court is not the same as the evidence in the case at bar. In the first place, the driver of the bus testified in the case cited, as stated by the court, that he was "unable after glancing to the right and left, to see the approaching car of the defendant Electric Railway Company." But he fails to testify at all in the case at bar. And as regards the statement of the court to the effect that "a passenger sitting directly behind the driver testified that he was unable, after glancing to the right and left, to see the approaching car of the defendant Electric Railway Company," the court evidently refers to the witness Phillips, who testified in the case at bar that he occupied the second seat directly behind the driver, and when the bus stopped he stopped reading and looked at the driver, and when he started up, "I looked both ways, east and west. When I first looked up the driver was looking to the east. I looked to the east. I did not see any car. I did not look to the east before the bus started up. I looked to the east after the bus started up. When I was looking to the east, the bus was crossing the first two rails, that is, what we would call the east-bound track." From the foregoing it would appear that the passenger did not look to the east while the car was stopped, as it was stopped about 15 feet from the track. But he does testify that when the car stopped, "the driver was looking to the east." Furthermore, the witness testified that when he did look to the east, which was not at the point from which he says the driver looked to the east, he "did not see any street car approaching." Furthermore, the witness Phillips testifies, in effect, that what interfered with his vision when he was on the crossing were the poles of the electric car wires in between the two tracks. But he does not testify that these poles interfered with his vision, or any one's vision, at the time the bus was stopped 15 feet from the crossing. Also, in the case cited, as indicated in the opinion of the court, "the plaintiff himself testified that he was sitting on the second from the rear seat of the bus and that he did not see the approaching car until the position of the bus placed him practically on a direct line therewith, thus tending to indicate that the electric car was not discernible until the bus was well upon the tracks of the defendant railway company."

In the case at bar, Mr. Forbell, who was the plaintiff above referred to in the case cited, testified that he was riding in the bus in the next to the rear seat; that the bus stopped approximately 15 or 20 feet before it reached the railroad tracks:

"I looked toward the east; the bus had started when I looked east. It was going over the first tracks on the south side. I saw a street car toward the east."

The witness then indicated on the map where the car was, and pointed to a place about 350 feet from the crossing.

"Just as soon as the bus started I looked to the west. I then turned around and looked to the east. And by that time the bus had started, and that is when I saw the car."

It therefore fails to appear from the testimony in the case at bar, so far as Forbell's testimony is concerned, that the car was not discernible as it approached from the east before Forbell was crossing the track and while the bus was at a standstill. For he distinctly states that he did not look to the east until he was in a position on the track where he did see it.

Furthermore, in the absence of the testimony of the driver of the bus in this case, there is no evidence whatever in the record that the bus driver could not or did not see the approaching railroad car during the time when he had stopped the bus and the bus was standing within 15 to 25 feet from the crossing, and at the time when other witnesses stated the driver did look to the east and in the direction where the car was approaching. But, on the other hand, there is affirmative evidence, without conflict, that during the time while the bus was standing still within 15 to 25 feet of the crossing, passengers in the bus could and did see the approaching railway car, and passengers in the approaching railway car could and did see the bus at that time.

Admiral Barr was a passenger upon the bus, sitting in the second seat from the driver on the right-hand side. He testified that the bus stopped more than 15 feet, "possibly 20 feet, maybe 25 feet," from the first track; that he looked to the east to see whether there was a car coming, and that, when he first saw the car:

"It was something near 1,000 to 1,200 feet below the crossing from the place where the accident happened.

"Q. Were there any objects of any kind between where you were sitting looking to your right the way this car was coming from to prevent the driver from seeing this electric car if he had looked? A. I don't see what it would be. There was nothing to hinder me from seeing.

"The Court: The question is, Were there any? Did you see any? A. I did not.

"Q. (By Mr. Morris): You saw those poles along there, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did they bother you about seeing this car? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. After the bus had stopped and started up to go across the track, how fast did it go? A. Very slowly; 2 or 3 miles an hour. There is quite a raise there. He had to go up grade there.

"Q. You knew the car was coming? A. Yes, sir; I watched it almost continuously.

"Q. And you knew the bus was going? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When the front of the bus had just passed the north rail of this lower track, where was the street car? A. Well, as I remember, it was about 2½ poles away.

"Q. 250 feet? A. Something like that.

"Q. Did you see the driver look before he started the car? A. Yes, sir; I did.

"Q. Did he look in both directions? A. Well, he seemed to."

H. P. Shipman was a passenger on the railway car. He testified that he saw the bus stop at the crossing, and at that time he was at a point which was shown to be approximately 890 feet from the crossing, and that he did not notice the bus again until after the accident.

Samuel Moore, the motorman on the railway car, testified that he saw the bus stop approximately 15 feet from the crossing, and at that time that he was about 500 feet away from the crossing, and he also saw the bus after it started up.

"Q. As a matter of fact, you saw him stop and start up, both, didn't you; you saw him stop and start up immediately, didn't you? A. I did.

"Q. Your eye was on him continuously, wasn't it? A. He was always in front of me. I could not help but see him."

[6-9] As already noted, though the driver did not testify, other witnesses testified that when the driver stopped he looked to the east. And, as already noted, there is no evidence in the record that he could not see the approaching car at that time, but the evidence is to the contrary, that the car at that time was visible to any person looking for it in the direction and at the time that the testimony shows the driver did look towards it. It will therefore, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be presumed that he did see what was visible. Also, it was his duty to presume that the motorman of the car, in reasonable probability, would continue up to and over the crossing without slowing down. Therefore, the continuing duty rested upon the driver of the bus to use reasonable caution in the protection of his passengers from the further approach of the car, which it will be presumed he saw when he looked for it at the time he stopped. And that the bus driver neglected to perform this duty appears without conflict in the evidence.

This case is, so far as the evidence is concerned, not within the facts appearing in the Loftus and Tousley Cases in 166 Cal. at pages 465 (137 P. 34) and 457 (137 P. 31), respectively. In each of those cases the driver himself of the automobile testified he could not see the approaching railroad car. Consequently, the evidence in those cases did not, as in the case at bar, show conclusively that the driver, with an apparent willingness to take a chance, did leave a place of safety where he could see, as others saw, the approaching railway car a few seconds before the collision.

The judgment, therefore, in favor of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company and against the plaintiff, is reversed, and the judgment against the defendant Watson and in favor of the plaintiff is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by James C. Whitworth and another against Michael M. Fernandez. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. De La Monte and Walter J. Little, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Kilgore, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiffs and respondents instituted this proceeding against the appellant and several fictitious defendants for the purpose of quieting title to real property situated in the city of Los Angeles, and described in the complaint as all of lot 13 of of the Whitworth tract, and those portions of the Preuss road on the west and Pico street on the south, within the present fence lines, which lies south of a line described by metes and bounds, and all of lot 13 of said tract and that portion of Preuss road on the west lying within the present fence line of such street line. The plaintiffs alleged that they and their predecessors in interest had been in actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse possession of all of said lot 13, including the land embraced within the present fence lines, continuously for a period of 20 years next preceding the commencement of their action, and that they had paid all of the taxes of every kind and nature levied or assessed thereon continuously for a period of five years last past immediately preceding the filing of the complaint.

Defendant Fernandez, by answer and cross-complaint, denied the foregoing allegations upon the ground of lack of knowledge or information sufficient to enable him to answer as to ownership of portions of lot 13, and denied the payment of taxes on the whole of said land, or any part of it, for a period of five years, or that the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest had been in actual, open, notorious, exclusive, or adverse possession thereof. The defendant affirmatively alleged that by a good and sufficient deed of conveyance from Christopher Greve, dated February 15, 1915, he acquired title to, and that he had ever since been the owner and entitled to possession of, lands in the Rancho de las Aguas, consisting (1) of those portions of lot No. 1 lying north of Pico street, not included in tract No. 470, or in that portion of lot No. 1 theretofore deeded by Greve to Joseph Whitworth, defendant's parcel being the easterly 42.1 feet of lot No. 13 described in the complaint; and (2) a parcel consisting of a portion of lot No. 13 described and claimed by the plaintiffs, and commencing at the northeasterly corner thereof, which also was described by metes and bounds. By cross-complaint Fernandez alleged that these two parcels had been owned continuously by Christopher Greve and himself for a period of 35 years, and prayed a decree quieting title thereto. The land in controversy consists of a strip 42.1 feet wide on Pico street, and extending northerly therefrom a distance of 298.32 feet. No evidence appears to have been offered concerning the second parcel described by the defendant, and it therefore should not have been made the subject of a finding on behalf of the plaintiffs.

The case was tried by the court, without a jury, and findings and judgment were rendered in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant appeals from such judgment, upon the alleged grounds that the uncontradicted evidence showed plaintiffs' land under their purchase from Greve to have been 42.1 feet westerly from the line upon which the judgment awarded them was erroneously based; that defendant's property lay between the "three acres, more or less," belonging to the Whitworths, and the westerly line of the lands of Greve, their common grantor; that the plaintiffs had paid no taxes upon appellant's 42.1 feet, except as hereinafter noted, and that the latter's line had never been disputed.

[1] The plaintiffs' only claim to the strip of land in dispute is that of adverse possession. Without stating the evidence in detail, it is sufficient to say that the finding of the court to the effect that they had been in actual possession for a period of 20 years has sufficient support in the record to be sustained. The defendant has record title to the same property, and it is essential to the respondents' success in maintaining their claim that they prove payment by them of the taxes for a period of at least five consecutive years during the time that they had possession.

It appears that in 1883 Greve conveyed to respondents certain lands lying westerly of and adjacent to the westerly line of the 42.1 feet in controversy, but that for a period of about 30 years they occupied and cultivated all of the land lying between their westerly line and the easterly line of said strip. Public records, including the tax assessments, described the respondents' property as "three acres," or, at times, "three acres, more or less." It further appears that in 1915 Greve entered into an agreement with Fernandez, whereby the latter contracted to survey and quiet title to said 42.1 feet, and conveyed the same by quitclaim deed to appellant. Previously thereto, and in 1910, a new tract embracing Greve's easterly lands, and known as lot A, tract 470, was recorded. The tax records tend to show that all of the lands lying easterly of respondents' "three acres" were assessed to Greve from 1901 to 1911, and that he paid the taxes thereon; and that from 1911 to the date of the filing of this suit, the strip of 42.1 feet, lying between said "three acres, more or less," and tract 470, was assessed to, and the taxes thereon paid by Christopher Greve or his surviving widow.

[2] We are unable to find in the record evidence tending to show that the respondents paid taxes upon the strip of land in controversy, except during the years 1916, 1917, and 1918, when they had also been paid by the Greves. They contend that appellant's quitclaim deed of 1915 was without consideration. While this would not mitigate against its validity, the contrary has been shown, and appellant testified that he spent time and money in surveying, negotiating with the Whitworths, and endeavoring to clear the title, according to his agreement with Greve. "A quitclaim deed is as efficient to transfer title as a grant, bargain, and sale deed. Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341, 344; Myers v. City of Oceanside, 7 Cal. App. 87, 93, 93 P. 686," Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892. It appears that the respondents in 1922 obtained from the heirs at law of Christopher Greve a quitclaim deed to appellant's 42.1 feet of real property, but from what has been said it becomes obvious that they had no title thereto, and could convey none.

[3] The judgment and findings below are not supported by the evidence. As to the strip of 42.1 feet, the judgment should have been for the defendant. As to the other portion, no evidence having been introduced, neither party was entitled to judgment.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff purchased from the defendant a Flint sport roadster for $2,245 and delivered to defendant in payment therefor a Flint touring car and the plaintiff's promissory note for $945; that "defendant agreed to give plaintiff a credit upon the purchase price of said Flint sport roadster of $1,300 on account of said Flint touring car, and defendant further agreed that in the event he (defendant) was able to dispose of said Flint touring car for $1,300, he (the defendant) would pay to plaintiff the sum of $500 out of the proceeds of said sale, less $100 to be retained by the defendant for possible service charges which might accrue upon the Flint sport roadster above mentioned; and the defendant further agreed that in no event would he sell the said Flint touring car for less than $1,100, in which event he (defendant) would pay to plaintiff the sum of $300, less $100 for possible service charges as above set forth"; that the defendant sold the touring car for $1,300, and that he performed no services on the roadster; and that the plaintiff had fully paid the amount due upon his promissory note. The prayer is for judgment in the sum of $500.

The answer admits the alleged sale and that defendant agreed to give plaintiff a credit of $1,300 on account of the touring car, but "denies that defendant further agreed that in the event he (defendant) was able to dispose of said Flint touring car for the sum of $1,300, he (said defendant) would pay to plaintiff the sum of $500 out of the proceeds of said sale, less $100 to be retained by defendant for possible service charges which might accrue upon the Flint sport roadster in plaintiff's complaint mentioned; defendant denies that he (defendant) further agreed that in no event would he sell the said Flint touring car for less than $1,100, in which event he (defendant) would pay to plaintiff the sum of $300, less $100 for possible service charges as set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and in this connection defendant avers that he did agree and would give a credit to plaintiff upon the purchase price of said Flint sport roadster of $1,300 on account of said Flint touring car, and that defendant agreed with plaintiff that upon the receipt by him (defendant) of said Flint touring car, he would put said Flint touring car in a marketable condition and repair the same, and if upon a resale of said Flint touring car there should be or remain any profit to the defendant, that he (defendant) would pay said amount to plaintiff, less the sum of $100 to be retained by the defendant for service charges; that there was no profit to defendant by reason of said transaction, and that there was nothing, nor is there now anything, due plaintiff from defendant by reason of such transaction."

The defendant's commission, or profit, on the sale of the roadster was $511. It is clear from his testimony given at the trial and the admissions and allegations of his answer that he agreed that if, after deducting $100 from such commission, the remainder thereof, added to the amount for which the touring car might be sold, should exceed the sum of $1,- 300, then the defendant would give the plaintiff credit for the excess. The defendant sold the promissory note shortly after he received it, and the plaintiff paid the amount thereof before this action was commenced. At the time of the transaction the defendant signed and delivered to the plaintiff an instrument reading as follows:

"Auburn, California, December 17, 1924.

"We agree to sell to C. J. Maguire one Flint sport roadster, model 55. * * * We agree to allow C. J. Maguire the sum of $1,300 on Flint touring car that is to be repaired and put in shape and sold for the highest possible amount. This amount to be at least $1,100. We agree to retain the sum of $100 from our commission of $500 that we obtain from the sale of said roadster. This amount is to be used in the form of service on sport roadster if any should occur. All other money obtained from resale of Flint touring car is to be applied on note of $945 held by us as balance due on Flint roadster."

The italicized words were inserted by the defendant at the plaintiff's request. The court found that:

The defendant "agreed that in the event that he (defendant) was able to dispose of said Flint touring car for the sum of $1,300, he (said defendant) would pay to plaintiff the sum of $500 out of the proceeds of said sale, less $100 to be retained by defendant for possible service charges which might accrue upon the Flint sport roadster; * * * that defendant did not further agree that in no event would he sell the said Flint touring car for less than $1,100, in which event he, defendant, would pay to plaintiff the sum of $300, less $100 for possible service charges; * * * that defendant agreed with plaintiff that * * * he would and did put said Flint touring car in a marketable condition and resell the same, and if, upon a resale of said Flint touring car, there should be or remain any profit to the defendant, that he (defendant) would pay said amount to plaintiff, less the sum of $100 to be retained by the defendant for service charges; that there was no profit to defendant by reason of said transaction, and there was nothing, nor is there now anything, due plaintiff from defendant by reason of such transaction."

Judgment was entered in favor of defendant for costs of suit, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom.

The finding that "defendant did not further agree that in no event would he sell the said Flint touring car for less than $1,100" is contrary to the express terms of the written agreement. The agreement is perfectly clear in that respect, although it is ambiguous in other particulars. The finding is also contrary to the testimony of the defendant, who testified:

"I told him (plaintiff) I did not know I could sell the car for cash, and he said he wanted to get at least $1,100, and through his suggestion he had me insert that $1,100, to sell for at least that much."

The defendant further testified that it cost him "$54.63 to put the Flint touring car in condition," and a commission of $33.75 for selling it. The testimony is conflicting as to whether the price of $1,100 referred to in the agreement was to be the net price or the gross price from which the cost of repairs and the expense of making the sale were to be deducted. If such cost and expense were to be deducted, the least amount for which the defendant was authorized to sell the touring car is $1,011.62 net. The addition thereto of $411, the amount of defendant's commission on the sale of the roadster, less $100, gives a total of $1,422.62, for which sum, at least, plaintiff was entitled to credit on the purchase price of the roadster, or $122.62 in addition to the credit of $1,300 originally given. Instead of selling the touring car for "at least $1,100" as agreed, the defendant pursued a course outlined in his written statement to the plaintiff as follows:

"Our cost on the Flint roadster was $1,734, which we retailed at $2,245, leaving a profit of $511. Trading in on Flint 55 touring car at $1,300, which cost us $54.63 to put in selling shape, selling at $1,300 with a commission of $33.75, our total loss on the sale of the Flint touring car being $88.38. We took in trade, then, a Durant 4 touring car at $600, and, owing to a wreck the car had through a defective spindle and a paint job, with four new tires, the complete service cost on this car was $271.68. The interest on the flooring of the roadster cost $10.50, and on your note of $945 the interest was figured at 7 per cent. or $33.12. We cashed this note with the Finance Corporation, of Sacramento, and they in turn charge 1½ per month, which leaves a balance of $51.93. We sold this Durant 4 touring car for $600, paying a commission of $25, making the total cost of the Durant $59.11. * * * We took a Ford trade-in of $100 on the Durant sale, which is in our possession at the present time. * * * If we are fortunate enough to obtain the full $100 out of the Ford touring the loss will stand at $447.49; if not it will be even more than that; but as the statement stands at the present time with a profit of $511 and a loss of $447.49, this leaves only a clear profit of $63.51, while the original agreement called for $100 to be retained by us."

This course of trading was not a compliance with the defendant's agreement to sell the Flint touring car "for the highest possible amount. This amount to be at least $1,100." Neither does it appear that the defendant had the right to charge the plaintiff with the cost of discounting the latter's promissory note. It is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, but the evidence is conflicting as to the amount thereof, and further discussion of such conflicting evidence would serve no useful purpose.

The judgment is reversed.

CRAMER et al. v. JENKINS. (Civ. 3017.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 11, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 11, 1927.

1. Animals ⇨100(4)—Evidence held to justify finding that owner permitted sheep to graze on lands of another (St. 1861, p. 523; St. 1919, p. 464, § 1).

In action for damages from pasturing sheep, evidence that defendant's herders a few days before had brought sheep near plaintiff's land and knew that they could get under fence and had done so, and with such knowledge afterward brought sheep near fence, and that sheep entered thereunder and grazed on plaintiff's lands, held to justify finding that defendant permitted sheep to graze on plaintiff's lands within St. 1861, p. 523, and St. 1919, p. 464, § 1.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3)—Failure to allege premises were inclosed by lawful fence, or that defendant unlawfully permitted sheep to be herded on premises, held not cause for reversing judgment for plaintiff (St. 1861, p. 523; St. 1919, p. 464, § 1; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action for damages to land from permitting sheep to graze thereon by herders bringing sheep near fence through which they knew sheep could go, lack of allegation in complaint that premises were inclosed by lawful fence, or that defendant wrongfully or unlawfully permitted sheep to be herded thereon contrary to St. 1861, p. 523, or St. 1919, p. 464, § 1, in absence of demurrer to complaint, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, is not reversible error, in view of showing by record as whole that defendant was not misled or prejudiced thereby.

3. Animals ⇨97—Owner voluntarily permitting animals to be herded on another's lands, whether inclosed or not, without consent, is liable (St. 1861, p. 523; St. 1919, p. 464, § 1).

Under St. 1861, p. 523, and St. 1919, p. 464, § 1, whether premises are inclosed or uninclosed, if owner of live stock voluntarily herds or permits to be herded on premises of another without consent, he is liable therefor.

4. Animals ⇨97—"Permit," in statute making owner liable for permitting sheep to graze on lands of another, means to allow after notice (St. 1861, p. 523).

"Permit," as used in St. 1861, p. 523, prohibiting owner of sheep to permit them to be herded on land or possessory claims of others, means to allow after notice or knowledge; to allow or suffer to be done; to allow to be done by consent, or by not prohibiting; to suffer or allow without prohibition or interference; to allow by silent consent or by not offering opposition or hindrance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Edward G. Cramer and another against Reese T. Jenkins for damages. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barry & Barry, of Susanville, for appellant.

R. M. Hardy, of Susanville, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiffs began this action to recover damages suffered by reason of trespass on lands leased by plaintiffs of certain sheep and cattle belonging to the defendant and recovered damages in the sum of $259.

The complaint is in three counts. No question is raised as to the judgment of the trial court awarding the plaintiff the sum of $34 on account of damages inflicted upon the premises leased to the plaintiffs by cattle belonging to the defendant. The argument of the appellant and all questions raised upon this appeal are directed to the alleged error of the trial court in awarding damages to the plaintiffs in the sum of $225 for pasturage destroyed upon the premises leased to the plaintiffs, by reason of the defendant permitting 600 head of sheep belonging to him to graze thereon.

The third count of the plaintiffs' complaint involved in this appeal, so far as pertinent hereto, is as follows:

"That on or about the 9th day of May, 1924, defendant permitted about 600 ewes, together with lambs following them, to graze upon the S. W. ¼ of said section 9, without having first obtained the consent of said owner or of the tenants in possession, Edward G. Cramer and John C. Cramer."

The premises described are premises previously alleged in the complaint to be under lease to the plaintiffs. The damages recovered under this allegation are the sum of $225. No demurrer was filed by the defendant, and no question as to the sufficiency of this allegation of the complaint appears to have been raised in the trial court. The answer of the defendant, so far as pertinent to the issues involved herein, contains the following:

"As a further, separate, and distinct defense, * * * defendant alleges that on the 9th day of May, 1923, defendant, through his agents and employees, was driving a band of sheep owned by the defendant on lands not owned or controlled by the plaintiffs, bordering lands then owned by the Cramer Live Stock Company, a corporation of the state of California, and leased by the plaintiffs; that said lands of plaintiff were fenced with a wire fence and that the wires of said fence were so high that sheep could easily pass thereunder; that while defendant was so driving his sheep on said lands not belonging to, or leased by, the plaintiffs, about 600 head of ewes and lambs went under said fence and onto a corner of said lands leased by said plaintiffs."

It is further alleged that the defendant attempted to drive his sheep from said premises, but that said sheep were driven by the plaintiffs therefrom and placed in a corral by the plaintiffs.

Upon the basis of this allegation it is argued that as the testimony shows that plaintiffs' lands were not inclosed by a lawful fence, as described by an act of the Legislature of 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 154), no liability rests upon the defendant for any injuries inflicted by his sheep upon crops growing upon the leased premises occupied and cultivated by the plaintiffs. Considerable testimony was introduced as to the character of the fence, constituting the inclosure of the plaintiffs' premises, sufficient to show that the fence so existing failed to comply in many particulars with the act of the Legislature just referred to, but from the views herein expressed, the condition of the fence, or its failure to comply with the specifications set forth in the act of 1855, become immaterial.

[1] The record shows that the plaintiffs and the defendant had leased from the Cramer Live Stock Company adjoining premises; the plaintiffs leased premises suitable for cultivation, or which they were cultivating; the defendant had leased adjoining premises suitable for pasturage purposes, and which were being used by him for such purposes. The record shows that on or about the 7th day of May, 1924, the defendant's herders had herded and driven a band of sheep to and upon the premises adjoining the lands and premises belonging to the plaintiffs, and that while so doing, about 200 sheep passed under the fence in question onto the premises belonging to the plaintiffs, but the trial court held that no damage resulted from this incursion of the defendant's sheep. Following this, the record shows that on or about the 9th day of May, the herders employed by the defendant had in charge a band of sheep numbering some 1,200, brought them to within the vicinity of the plaintiffs' premises, where 200 from said band of sheep had made an incursion upon the lands leased by the plaintiffs two days previously; that the herders were moving said sheep over the premises leased by the defendant for pasturage purposes and in the direction of where the sheep might obtain water; that while so doing, about 600 of said sheep, in the language of the defendant's answer, "got away from the herders, went under said fence and onto the lands and premises leased and occupied by the plaintiffs," causing the damages found by the trial court. From this it is argued that the defendant is not liable on the grounds: First, that the plaintiffs' premises were not inclosed by a lawful fence; and, second, that the court had nothing before it justifying a finding that the defendant permitted his sheep to graze upon the lands and premises leased by the plaintiffs. The recital of the facts, as above set forth gleaned from the record, shows that the defendant was herding his sheep upon adjoining premises; that two days previous to the infliction of the damages ascertained and assessed by the trial court, 200 of said band of sheep passed under the fence in question and onto the leased lands occupied by the plaintiffs; that the herders went upon the lands and premises and drove the sheep from the lands and premises belonging to the plaintiffs, under the wire fence referred to in this action; that notwithstanding this knowledge of the condition of the fence thus acquired on the 7th day of May, 1924, the herders employed by the defendant brought the same band of sheep to the same vicinity, where 600 of them went under the same fence and inflicted the damage complained of.

We feel that these facts show that the defendant's herders had full knowledge of the condition of the fence, of the propensity of sheep to forage upon the lands of the premises, and that when they voluntarily brought a large band of sheep to the same vicinity on the 9th day of May, 1924, the trial court was justified in finding that the defendant permitted said sheep to graze upon the lands and premises leased by the plaintiffs, within the intent of the act of the Legislature herein referred to. Knowing the condition of the fence, knowing what the sheep had previously done, the defendant's herders voluntarily brought the defendant's sheep to the same vicinity. It has been held in this state that when a band of sheep is in charge of herders the sheep are not considered as running at large. Spect v. Arnold, 52 Cal. 455; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 47, § 31.

[2] It is argued upon appeal for the first time that the complaint in this action does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that there is no allegation that the premises leased by the plaintiffs were inclosed by a lawful fence, or that the defendant wrongfully or unlawfully permitted the sheep to be herded upon the premises leased by the plaintiffs or permitted them to be grazed upon the premises leased by the plaintiffs. As stated, no demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and if technically insufficient as against a demurrer, the record, taken as a whole, shows that the defendant has not been misled or suffered any prejudice on account thereof, and therefore, under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, it cannot be held grounds of reversal.

[3] By the act of the Legislature approved May 18, 1861 (Stats. 1861, p. 523), it is provided as follows:

"It shall not be lawful for any person, or persons, owning, or having charge of, any sheep, to herd the same, or permit them to be herded, on the land, or possessory claims, of other than the land, or possessory claims, of the owners of such sheep."

This act contains four other sections, section 2 of which was amended by the act approved March 28, 1868 (Stats. 1867-68, p. 426). The amendment relates only to recovery of damages and does not limit or modify any of the language contained in section 1 of the act of 1861, which we have just quoted. By act approved May 11, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 464), the Legislature, in relation to the herding of sheep, further enacted (section 1):

"It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to herd or graze any live stock upon the lands of another in the counties of Plumas, Lassen and Modoc without having first obtained the consent of the owner or owners of the land so to do; provided, that the person claiming to be the owner of said lands has the legal title thereto, or an application to possess the same, with first payment made thereon."

This act does not purport to repeal any of the sections of the previous act of 1861, but is supplemental thereto in that, instead of being limited to the grazing or herding of sheep, it includes "any live stock," thus being broadened in its scope and not in conflict. The act of 1861 and the act of 1919 do not limit the application thereof, or of either of them, to lands inclosed by a lawful fence, as specified by the act of 1855, supra. Whether premises are inclosed or uninclosed, if there is anything in the case showing that the owner of sheep, or of any live stock, has voluntarily done or permitted to be done any acts from which the trial court may conclude that the live stock has, within the intent and meaning of either statute, been herded or permitted to be herded upon the lands and premises of another, without such person's consent, then and in that case, the owner of the animals so herded, or permitted to be herded, is liable. Our attention is called to the case of Logan v. Gedney, 38 Cal. 579, as conclusive upon the questions involved on this appeal and necessitates a reversal of the judgment of the trial court. In that case the complaint was founded upon the act of the Legislature of 1861, as shown by the opinion of the court, and alleged as follows:

"Defendants wrongfully and willfully permitted said sheep to be herded, and did herd the same upon the lands of which the plaintiff then was, ever since has been, and still is the owner."

It was held by the court that the complaint was sufficient, and that if the defendants had been guilty of the acts charged, a cause of action would have been stated, but that the evidence showed that the defendants' sheep without "their agency, knowledge, or consent, while ranging at large, at night strayed into plaintiff's barley field, which was not protected or inclosed by a lawful fence, or any sufficient fence to obstruct the free ingress or egress of sheep and hogs."

These facts readily distinguish the case of Logan v. Gedney from the case at bar. There the court held that the sheep strayed without the agency, knowledge, or consent of the defendants while running at large. In the case at bar the sheep were not running at large. They were being herded upon pasture lands adjoining the lands and premises leased and occupied by the plaintiffs, were taken to the place from which they made their incursion upon the crops owned by the plaintiffs voluntarily by the defendant's herders, after knowledge acquired two days before of what the sheep would do, and what they might anticipate the sheep would do, which brings into operation the agency, knowledge, and practical consent which the court held wanting in the case of Logan v. Gedney. To hold that the owner of sheep may be permitted to drive his band of sheep and herd his band of sheep to and alongside the premises belonging to another, having knowledge of what said band of sheep had done two days previously, is not, within the intent of the law, herding said band of sheep upon the premises of another, when 600 of said sheep, brought in such close proximity to the premises of another, go upon such premises and proceed to graze, or are grazing without the permission, consent, or agency of the defendant within the true intent and meaning of section 1 of the act of 1861, would be to hold that the act of the Legislature is without force or vitality, and all that a defendant has to do is to drive his sheep up to the line dividing his lands and premises from the premises of another, and then and there quit and abandon his duty as a herder and let the sheep wander at will. Such is not the meaning of either the act of 1861 or the act of 1919. If the agency of the defendant places the sheep in that position alongside of the premises belonging to another, following their natural instincts, of which the owner of the sheep, or herder thereof, must be held to have knowledge, the sheep will proceed to graze the land and forage upon the premises of another. We think that, under such circumstances, the trial court is justified in holding that the sheep are being herded and are being permitted to graze upon the lands of another, in violation of the acts of the Legislature which we have quoted, and that unless previous consent has been obtained so to graze the sheep belonging to him, the defendant, under such circumstances, is liable for the damages inflicted. The question of a lawful fence does not enter into this case.

[4] In answer to the argument of counsel as to the meaning of the word "permit," it is sufficient to refer to 30 Cyc. 1461. Under the definitions there given, we find the following applicable to this case:

"To allow or suffer to be done; to allow to be done by consent or by not prohibiting; to suffer or allow without prohibition or interference; to allow after notice or knowledge; to allow by silent consent or by not offering opposition or hindrance."

Other definitions are given, but one of the above stated, to wit, "to allow after notice or knowledge," is pertinent here, as the defendant's agents had notice and knowledge of what might be expected from driving and herding the sheep to within such close proximity to the lands and premises owned by the plaintiffs.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

WINSLOW v. WINSLOW. (Civ. 4409.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 23, 1927.

1. Divorce —37(8)—In divorce suit for willful neglect, defendant must show utmost good faith in offers to wife requesting return to him.

In suit for divorce on ground of willful neglect, burden was on defendant to show utmost good faith in any offers made to wife requesting her to return to him.

2. Divorce —49(6)—Wife held entitled to divorce for willful neglect, notwithstanding refusal of husband's overtures, made after cause of action for nonsupport matured.

Wife held entitled to divorce on ground of willful neglect, notwithstanding that, after cause of action for nonsupport matured, she refused overtures of husband requesting return to him, since she was within her rights in such refusal.

3. Husband and wife —3(1)—Wife living away from husband with his consent need not rejoin him until he offers suitable abode, but she retains conjugal rights.

Where husband and wife were living apart with husband's consent, it was not incumbent on her to rejoin him till he, in good faith, had offered abode suitable to family station, but while living away from him she retained all her conjugal rights, one of which was right to continuing support.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by Rose F. Winslow against Hoyt A. Winslow. Interlocutory decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Collier & Laberere, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from an interlocutory decree of divorce, granted to plaintiff on the ground of willful neglect.

The parties were married in Chicago, in 1887, and for some years prior to 1916, they had been making their home in Milwaukee, though Mrs. Winslow had been in the habit of spending the winters near Los Angeles, where she had sisters and could be near a daughter attending Pomona College. In September, 1916, with the consent of defendant, who provided the traveling expenses for his wife and daughter, they journeyed to California; and neither Mr. nor Mrs. Winslow regarded their separation at the time as permanent, though a letter written in August, 1916, by defendant to inquire about a house for his wife in Pasadena indicated that defendant expected the wife to be with the daughter in California for the next four years. At the time of Mrs. Winslow's departure in September, 1916, the defendant was employed by an insurance company and earned $200 a month. That employment ceased not long after the wife left Milwaukee, and for about a year defendant found employment only at irregular intervals and his earnings were small. In November, 1918, however, he obtained regular employment as a salesman with the Aladdin Products Company, afterwards merged into the Channel Chemical Company, with which his employment continued to the time of the trial. In 1919 his average earnings were $400 a month, and they increased in 1920, and again in 1921. It was stipulated that from 1918 defendant was in receipt of sufficient income to provide properly for his wife, but that he did not make contributions sufficient for her necessities. Certain checks which he sent were dishonored for lack of sufficient funds in bank, and as neither party kept an accurate account of remittances, they do not agree as to the totals. But even if credit be given defendant for all that he claims to have supplied, the total from 1916 to 1920 did not exceed about $900. Plaintiff testified that in the year 1919 she received from defendant only about $20, and that no money was received by her in 1920 except the sum of $40 in July; and that between that time and the commencement of the action, on December 16, 1921, she received nothing at all. Plaintiff had help from her sister, who provided her with a home in which were a few additional apartments, the rents from which were applied to plaintiff's use.

In defense of the action defendant contended that, though he had requested his wife to return to him on several occasions, and had repeatedly offered to provide her with a home, she had refused without cause. After his employment in Milwaukee ended, he lived in Chicago for a short time, then was in Louisville for two years, afterwards in Baltimore for three months, and from May, 1920, onward he resided at Dallas, Tex. In all these places defendant was domiciled at hotels. Letters introduced in evidence showed that in July, 1920, defendant asked plaintiff to rejoin him at Dallas, and that she positively refused to resume domestic relations, either in Dallas or elsewhere, saying in her letter:

"You do not seem to realize that it is hard for a woman to overlook four years' neglect."

Defendant testified that he had asked his wife to return when he was stationed at Louisville in 1918 and 1919, also when he was at Baltimore, but there was no request to come to him at Dallas until July, 1920. Mrs. Winslow denied specifically any request from Baltimore. She was not questioned in particular as to whether Mr. Winslow asked her to join him in Louisville, but both parties unite in saying that the first time Mrs. Winslow ever refused to resume domestic relations was in the year 1920. That was when, as she admitted, her husband proposed to establish a home at Dallas. In reference to that request, the court has found that for more than one year prior to the commencement of the action, and for more than one year prior to July 19, 1920, the defendant, though able, had failed to provide his wife with the common necessities of life, and that at no time between September, 1916, and the time of suit had defendant ever established a matrimonial domicile anywhere, or chosen a reasonably suitable place for a family abode, or provided plaintiff with the means to defray traveling expenses to defendant's place of residence, and that defendant had not offered, in good faith, to support, or make a home for, plaintiff.

[1-3] Defendant contends that he was justified in his failure to furnish support by his wife's refusal to re-establish matrimonial relations. Yet he admits that the first time she refused was in 1920. The burden was upon defendant to show the utmost good faith in any offers made (Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 664, 92 P. 1037), a burden that, to the mind of the trial judge, was not sustained. The record as a whole shows great indifference on the part of defendant toward his wife, and justifies the findings in her favor. After a cause of action for nonsupport had matured, the wife was within her rights in refusing the overtures made in July, 1920. Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467-472; Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 204, 68 P. 694; Walker v. Walker, 14 Cal. App. 487, 492, 112 P. 479. Until defendant, in good faith, had offered a new abode, suitable to the family station, it was not incumbent on the wife to rejoin her husband, and though living away from him she retained all her conjugal rights, one of which was the right to continuing support.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Principal and agent ⇨99—Principal conferring "ostensible authority" on agent cannot, as against third persons, assert he did not so intend (Civ. Code, § 2317).

Principal conferring ostensible authority on agent by acts cannot assert, as against third persons relying thereon in good faith, that he did not intend to confer such power, "ostensible authority" being such as principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows third person to believe agent to possess, in view of Civ. Code, § 2317.

2. Principal and agent ⇨120(6)—Evidence showing extent of agent's dealings with those having business transactions with principal held admissible to show agent's ostensible authority to cash checks.

In order to establish ostensible authority of plaintiff's agent to cash checks payable to plaintiff, evidence of agent's dealings with those who had business transactions with plaintiff held admissible.

3. Principal and agent ⇨123(9)—Evidence showed banks were justified in believing plaintiff's agent had authority to indorse and cash checks payable to plaintiff.

Evidence held to show that banks were justified in believing plaintiff's agent had authority to indorse and cash checks payable to plaintiff, notwithstanding plaintiff's direct testimony that agent had no such authority.

4. Principal and agent ⇨137(1)—Principal held estopped by conduct to deny authority of agent in charge of business to cash checks (Civ. Code, § 2300).

Where plaintiff put agent in charge of business as apparent manager, banks cashing checks for agent, acting in good faith and without notice of or reason to suspect any limitation of agent's authority, held not liable for amount of checks, in view of Civ. Code, § 2300, since plaintiff is estopped by conduct to deny agent's authority.

5. Principal and agent — 137(1) — Loss through confidence placed by principal in agent should not be borne by those led to deal with agent by principal's acts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Harry C. Lucas, Judge.

Actions by the Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company against the Santa Cruz County National Bank of Santa Cruz, and against the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Santa Cruz. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles B. Younger and W. P. Netherton, both of Santa Cruz, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. The above two cases were tried together before a jury in the superior court of Santa Cruz county. The causes of action in both are identical in form, although different amounts are involved therein. In the action against the Santa Cruz National Bank it is alleged: That one A. S. T. Johnson was employed by plaintiff as a bookkeeper with authority to collect money and checks due and owing to plaintiff from its various customers in the city of Santa Cruz, but that he had no authority whatsoever to indorse or cash checks payable to plaintiff. That Johnson, acting in such capacity for plaintiff, collected from various persons named in the complaint, for the use and benefit of plaintiff certain checks payable to it. That the makers of said checks each had a commercial deposit in said bank, and that all said checks were drawn against such deposits respectively. That Johnson upon collecting the same at various times indorsed each of them as follows: "H. Cowell Lime & Cement Co., per A. S. T. Johnson, Mgr."—and cashed the same at the defendant bank. That Johnson retained the proceeds of these checks, used the same for his own purposes, and never turned the proceeds or any part thereof over to plaintiff. That plaintiff never had any deposit in said bank. That upon cashing such checks defendant bank stamped the same "Paid," with its name and the date thereon, and thereupon charged the amounts thereof to the account of the respective makers thereof. That the indorsing and cashing of the checks by Johnson were without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff and were entirely without authority. That upon discovery that Johnson had so indorsed and cashed the checks plaintiff made demand upon defendant that it repay to it the amount thereof, but that the bank has refused to do so and that Johnson has never paid the same to plaintiff. That the checks so indorsed and paid were ten in number, aggregating the sum of $1,007.44

[1-3] The allegations against the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank were the same as above, excepting that the checks were five in number, aggregating the sum of $965.83, and were drawn by persons having accounts in this particular bank. In both cases the wrongful indorsement and cashing of each check is made the basis of a separate count. There is also a common count for money had and received covering each check. Defendants, answering, admitted that each of the checks referred to in the complaint was drawn, made payable to plaintiff, collected, indorsed, and cashed by Johnson as alleged; that the respective makers of each of said checks had a commercial deposit in the defendant bank upon which said check was drawn; that each of said checks was cashed by such bank respectively and charged against the maker's deposit and in due course of business returned by such bank to the respective makers thereof; that plaintiff made written demand upon defendants for the repayment of the amounts of these checks, and that defendants refused the same. The main issue raised and relied on by defendants in each case was that Johnson had ostensible authority to indorse and cash the checks. The verdict of the jury was for defendant in each case, and judgment was entered accordingly. Motion for a new trial was made and denied by reason of the court's failure to act upon the same within the time prescribed by law. It is here claimed that there is no evidence in the record to support the verdict or the judgment in either of the cases. This contention is based upon the premise that the facts, as presented, show no ostensible authority in Johnson to indorse and cash checks for plaintiff. Preliminarily, it may be stated that ostensible authority is defined to be such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Civ. Code, § 2317. Ordinarily, as an abstract principle of law, an agent authorized to receive checks in payment for his principal may not have authority to indorse and collect the same. On the other hand, however, the course of dealing may be such as to give to the agent apparent authority to do these very acts, in which case a bank cashing the same would not be compelled to pay again. The authority is implied, if at all, from the facts of the particular case. If, then, a principal by his acts has led others to believe that he has conferred this authority upon his agent, he cannot be heard to assert, as against third persons who have relied thereon, in good faith, that he did not intend to confer such power. The determination of this character of authority is not a matter that lends itself to any hard and fast rule. It is almost wholly a question of fact. The issue was presented to the jury whether Johnson was permitted by appellant to conduct its business under such methods and for such a length of time as was sufficient to warrant the conclusion that he was authorized to indorse checks, and we are of the opinion that the evidence upon the subject supports the conclusion that Johnson had the authority. In other words, the conduct of the agent with reference to plaintiff's business was sufficient to establish, by implication, that such authority was given, notwithstanding the direct testimony of the principal that the agent had no such authority. In order to establish this fact, defendants called many witnesses to prove the nature and extent of Johnson's dealings with those who had business transactions with his company. This evidence was competent to prove such fact. Aigeltinger v. Burke, 176 Cal. 626, 169 P. 373. It appears therefrom that Johnson was employed for a long period of years by plaintiff corporation and that his duties were not confined, as alleged in the complaint, to those of a mere bookkeeper, but rather as a manager of plaintiff's extensive business, and that his acts as such manager were of a character sufficient to warrant those dealing with him in believing that he possessed authority to do the very acts in question.

[4, 5] We do not deem an extended recital of this evidence would answer any useful purpose. In substance it shows that while Mr. Harry Cowell testified that he was president and manager of the company, it appeared that he was seldom in Santa Cruz, and Johnson during his employment had almost exclusive management of plaintiff's business. He sold materials dealt in by the company and fixed the prices for the same and accepted checks in payment thereof. In these transactions, customers were referred by employees of the company to Johnson to transact the business. He placed advertisements in the local newspapers and paid for the same. He appeared in the city directory and upon the register of voters as manager of plaintiff. He took up all matters of county assessments in which his company was interested with the assessor. He appeared before the Chamber of Commerce as manager of the company in matters affecting the welfare of the county. While the company did not keep a banking account in Santa Cruz, Johnson attended to all banking transactions. He cashed checks and purchased drafts in favor of plaintiff, which he paid for by checks and money. The only fair inference to be drawn from these and other facts is that the officers of the bank knew and relied on the ostensible authority of Johnson to perform the acts in question, and they abundantly prove want of ordinary care on the part of plaintiff in the conduct of its business which was sufficient to lead defendants to believe that Johnson was clothed with full and ample power and authority in the premises. Where a principal makes it possible, through his acts, for his own agent to inflict injury, the result of such injury should not be passed on to innocent persons who have dealt with the agent in good faith under his apparent authority. The law forbids the principal to deny authority in the agent which his own conduct has invited those with whom he was dealing to assume he possessed. In such a case a principal is bound by his acts and estopped by his own conduct from denying the authority of the agent to act. Robinson v. American Fish & Oyster Co., 17 Cal. App. 213, 119 P. 388. So where, as here, an agent is by his principal put in charge of a business as the apparent manager thereof, he is clothed with apparent authority to do all things that are essential to the ordinary conduct of such business at that place, and third persons, acting in good faith and without notice of or reason to suspect any limitations on his authority, are entitled to rely on such appearance. Leavens v. Pinkham, 164 Cal. 242, 128 P. 399; Civ. Code, § 2300. Where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the loss should be borne by him whose act made the loss possible. A loss through the trust and confidence placed by a principal in his agent should not be borne by those who were led to deal with the agent through the acts of the principal. Upon this subject, therefore, we conclude that the evidence fully supports the conclusion reached. Respondents demurred to the complaints on the ground that they did not state a cause of action. At the trial they objected to the receipt in evidence of the checks in question, claiming that there was no privity of contract between Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company and the defendants; that the obligation of the banks was to their respective clients; and that the bank's obligation was to their customers only. We are cited to Elvria Savings & Banking Co. v. Walker, 92 Ohio St. 406, 111 N. E. 147, L. R. A. 1916D, 433, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1055; State Bank of Chicago v. Mid-City Trust Co., 295 Ill. 599, 129 N. E. 498, 12 A. L. R. 989, and other cases in support of this contention. See, also, Brannan's Neg. Ins. Law (4th Ed.) § 137. There is a conflict in the authorities upon this subject. Chamberlain Metal, etc., Co. v. Bank of Pleasanton, 98 Kan. 611, 160 P. 1138. Considering the conclusion we have reached, a discussion or decision upon this subject becomes unnecessary.

The judgments are affirmed.

HANOVIA CHEMICAL & MFG. CO. v. KELLER. (Civ. 3210.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 22, 1927.

1. Venue ⚡58—Demand and affidavit do not constitute motion for change of venue.

Demand and affidavit of merits held not to constitute motion for change of place of trial nor invoke action of the court in passing thereon.

2. Venue ⚡58—Motion for change of venue must be made in accordance with provisions of statute specifying contents and time of service (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 397, 1003, 1010).

Motion for change of place of trial authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 397, must be made in accordance with requirements of sections 1003 and 1010 specifying contents and time of service thereof.

3. Venue ⚡37—Motion for change of venue must be made without delay (Code Civ. Proc. § 396).

Motion for change of place of trial must be made without delay, notwithstanding that Code Civ. Proc. § 396, requires only demand and affidavit to be served and filed with demurrer or answer.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1043(8)—Defendant making demand and affidavit for change of venue, but filing no motion, held not injured by order denying motion and not entitled to appeal.

Where defendant, after filing demand and affidavit for change of venue, failed to give notice of motion or make any motion invoking action of court in relation to removal, subsequent order, at time of overruling demurrer, purporting to deny motion which had never been made, held not to have injured defendant so as to authorize appeal therefrom.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by the Hanovia Chemical & Manufacturing Company against Charles Keller. From an order purporting to deny defendant's motion for a change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Talbott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. Coburn Cook, of Turlock, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. On February 20, 1926, the plaintiff began this action to recover from the defendant the sum of $322.88, balance alleged to be due on certain promissory notes. On the 30th day of March, 1926, the defendant filed a demurrer, a demand for a change of place of trial, and an affidavit of merits. The demand, omitting the title, is in the following words:

"I, the undersigned, defendant, in the above-entitled action, hereby demand that the place of trial of this cause be changed to the proper county, to wit, the county of San Mateo, state of California." (Signed by defendant.)

The affidavit of merits, omitting the title, reads as follows:

"Charles Keller, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is the defendant in the above-entitled action:

"1. That said action was commenced on or about the 20th day of February, 1926.

"That I have fully and fairly stated the case in this cause to E. J. Talbott, attorney at law, whose office is at No. 704 Market street, San Francisco, my counsel, and after such statement I am by him advised and verily believe that I have a good and substantial defense on the merits to the action.

"That I now reside and did reside at the commencement of this action in the county of San Mateo, state of California."

No notice of motion for the removal of said cause was ever given or filed by the defendant, nor was any motion ever made by the defendant invoking the action of the court in relation to the removal of said cause. The case remained in statu quo until the 17th day of May, 1926, when the demurrer interposed by the defendant was overruled by the trial court and an order made purporting to deny the motion for a change of venue, the record showing that neither the defendant nor his counsel were in court. Under the rules of the court, the demurrer was placed upon the calendar for hearing on Monday, April 5th, but no action was taken thereon until, as above stated, on the 17th day of May. The appeal is from the order purporting to deny the defendant's motion for a change of venue.

[1, 2] It is apparent from the record that the order of the court purporting to deny the defendant's motion for a change of venue was inadvertently entered, for the simple reason that there was no motion before the court to be denied. The demand and affidavit, as hereinafter stated, did not constitute a motion, nor invoke the action of the court in passing thereon. Section 397, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for the making of the motion, and this motion must be made in accordance with the requirements of section 1003 and section 1010, Code of Civil Procedure, specifying the contents and the time of service thereof. In support of his appeal, the defendant cites section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, and the cases of Powell v. Suto, 80 Cal. 559, 22 P. 308; Wong Fung Hing v. San Francisco Relief, etc., 15 Cal. App. 538, 115 P. 331; Bonestell Richardson & Co. v. Curry, 153 Cal. 420, 95 P. 887; Carter v. Broder, 50 Cal. App. 69, 194 P. 527. These cases have to do with the contents of the affidavit of merits, and without reviewing the cases, it may be here stated that the affidavit of merits appears to be sufficient, but the real defect in the defendant's efforts to secure a change of venue lies in his neglect to take the proper proceedings to authorize the court to order a transfer of the cause.

[3] While it is held that the notice of motion and the motion need not accompany the filing of a demurrer, affidavit, and demand, such motion must be made without delay. As stated in Lundy v. Lettunich, 50 Cal. App. 451, 195 P. 451:

"Section 396 [Code of Civil Procedure] requires only the demand and affidavit to be served and filed with the demurrer or answer. * * * The proceeding, it is true, must be prosecuted with diligence. (Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 79; * * * Pearkes v. Freear, 9 Cal. 642; Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 246.) If it is made afterward the applicant must explain any seeming lack of diligence on his part. (Smith v. Pelton Water Wheel Co., 151 Cal. 401, 90 P. 932, 1135.)"

In Hart v. Forgeus, 184 Cal. 327, 193 P. 764; the Supreme Court, in relation to appeals from orders denying changes of venue, said:

"In accord with the well-settled rule, we must assume in support of the order that the superior court concluded that defendant did not act with due diligence in making his motion and that the motion should be denied for that reason."

In that case, on March 26, 1919, defendant's attorney served a demurrer, demand in writing, affidavits of merits, together with the notice of motion to be made on April 4th for a change of place of trial. It appears that this motion was not presented to the court for action thereon until June 20th, when it was denied. The court cited the cases relied upon in the case of Lundy v. Lettunich, supra, and held that the trial court was justified in denying the motion on the ground that it was not prosecuted with diligence. The further defect in appellant's procedure is the fact that no motion for change of venue was ever made.

In Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 129 P. 981, this defect in procedure on the part of a defendant desiring to secure an order changing the place of trial is conclusively held to be fatal. In speaking of section 396, Code of Civil Procedure, the court there said:

"The filing of the demand and affidavit do not operate ipso facto to change the place of trial. They have no such force. The change can only be effected through an order of the court after its judicial action has been invoked, by bringing the matter on for hearing, where the right of the defendant to the transfer can be contested by the plaintiff. The court must be applied to for an order of transfer. Such application is a motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 1003), and under section 397, a motion for the change must be made in addition to the demand and affidavit, as one of the necessary steps in the procedure to obtain the order of transfer."

So far as this question is concerned it may be considered as now definitely settled.

[4] If no notice of motion is given and no motion is made by the defendant seeking a change of venue, there is nothing before the trial court, and no action of the trial court is called for by the filing of a demand and affidavit. While the order of the trial court appealed from was wholly unnecessary on the part of the court as it purported to deny a motion that had never been made, we have set forth the facts as they may be gleaned from the record, in order to show that the appellant has not been injured by the action of the trial court, as he has not shown himself entitled to any other order.

We may also add that the Supreme Court of Montana, in the case of State v. District Court, 72 Mont. 56, 231 P. 395, considering the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of that state similar to sections 395, 396, 397, of the Code of Civil Procedure, holds that a demand and affidavit of merits are insufficient to invoke the order of the court, and that a notice of motion must be given and a motion made in order to invoke the action of the court and secure an order directing a change of venue.

Upon the record it is somewhat questionable as to whether we should dismiss the defendant's appeal or enter an order affirming the action of the trial court, but as the effect upon the appellant will be the same in either case, we content ourselves with the latter course.

The order of the trial court is affirmed.

SOULE v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. (Civ. 5735.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 28, 1927.

1. Attachment $\S$ 351—Only attorney's fees paid for dissolution are recoverable on attachment bond.

Measure of damages for recovery on attachment bond is the actual expense and loss resulting from the levy, and so as to attorney's fees includes only those paid for procuring dissolution of the attachment, and not those paid in defense of the principal suit.

2. Attachment $\S$ 351—Expenditure for transcribing testimony in attachment suit held not recoverable in action on attachment bond.

Money paid for transcribing testimony in attachment suit has no direct relation to the attachment, is not an expense or loss resulting from the levy, and so is not recoverable in action on the attachment bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by G. R. Soule against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

William Sea, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment in an action to recover damages against appellant as surety upon an undertaking on attachment.

The undertaking was filed and an attachment issued and levied on property owned by respondent in an action for money had and received, brought against him by one Collins, the trial of which resulted in a judgment for respondent. No proceedings were had to dissolve or vacate the attachment, which was discharged by virtue of the judgment.

[1] In the instant case there was included in the amount for which judgment was entered a sum paid as a counsel fee in defending the action mentioned and a further expenditure made in that action. It is claimed by appellant that these amounts were improperly allowed, and the first question presented by the appeal is whether the counsel fee was a proper element of damage.

The first California case in which the question was considered is Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 410, wherein it was held that counsel fees paid by the attachment debtor in defense of the suit were not recoverable in an action on the attachment bond.

In Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, 3 Cal. 216, an action on an injunction bond, a judgment for attorneys' fees paid to procure the dissolution of the injunction, was affirmed. The court in that case considered the effect of Heath v. Lent, supra, and held that, in so far as it might be said to decide that attorneys' fees paid to procure the dissolution of an injunction were not recoverable, the decision was erroneous. As was said in Elder v. Kutner, 97 Cal. 490, 494, 32 P. 563, 564:

"The case of Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan [3 Cal. 216, overrules the case of Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 410, to the extent of holding that fees paid to counsel to procure the dissolution of an injunction was a direct loss, consequent upon the wrongful issuing of an injunction, for which a recovery could be had upon the bond."

The rule in Ah Thaie v. Quan Wan, supra, was approved in Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 586; and it was held in Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115, that the amount recoverable on account of attorneys' fees in an action upon an injunction bond is limited to fees paid for procuring the dissolution of the injunction and does not extend to fees paid for defending the entire case. This rule was followed in the case of Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 P. 833, and San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 101 Cal. 216, 35 P. 651, in the first of which the court said:

"The allowance of counsel fees in suits on injunction bonds, and in one or two other actions of a kindred character, is exceptional; and it should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it."

The case of Elder v. Kutner, supra, was an action upon an attachment bond, one of the counts being for the recovery of attorneys' fees, a liability for which was alleged to have been incurred in the defense of the action; no effort having been made to dissolve or vacate the attachment, which was discharged by the final judgment. It was held that the complaint as to this count failed to state a cause of action. In that case the right to recover fees paid for the defense of the action was not discussed, the sole question considered being the sufficiency of a count containing no allegation of payment; and it was decided that counsel fees in a proper case for their allowance could not be recovered until they had been actually paid, and that the fact of payment should be averred.

The foregoing are all the California cases in which the question of the right to recover attorneys' fees in actions on bonds of this character has been considered, but numerous cases from other jurisdictions have been collected in the notes to St. Joseph Stockyards Co. v. Love, 57 Utah, 450, 195 P. 305, 25 A. L. R. pages 569-586. While the decisions on the question are conflicting, the weight of authority, as there shown, is to the effect that the measure of damages to be recovered on an attachment bond is the actual expense and loss resulting from the levy, including counsel fees for professional services rendered in relation to the attachment, but not counsel fees paid in defense of the principal suit.

We are of the opinion that in actions of the character of the instant case, as in analogous cases of suits on injunction bonds, the rule established by the weight of authority limits the recovery of attorneys' fees to those paid for procuring a dissolution of the attachment; and that, as said in Mitchell v. Hawley, supra, the allowance of such fees is exceptional, and the rule should not be extended to include counsel fees paid in defense of the principal suit.

[2] It appears from the findings that there was allowed, as part of the damage claimed, the sum of $21 expended in defending the action brought by Collins, of which the sum of $7 had already been paid. The judgment roll in that action is a part of the record in the instant case, and shows that judgment was entered therein "against said plaintiff for said defendant's costs and disbursements waived in this action amounting to $7." According to the testimony of respondent, the expenditure claimed and allowed was incurred in resisting the attachment suit and paid for transcribing the testimony of Collins. It is clear that this sum, with that paid to counsel, had no direct relation to the attachment, and was not within the rule an expense or a loss resulting from the levy.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified by deducting therefrom the allowance for attorneys' fees in the sum of $150 and the further sum of $14 for transcribing, a total of $164. As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed, and it is further ordered that appellant recover its costs on appeal.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 28, 1927.

1. Bail $\Leftrightarrow$ 43—Accused in capital case is entitled to bail, unless proof is evident or presumption great (Const. art. 1, § 6).

Under Const. art. 1, § 6, accused is entitled to bail, and it may not be refused, even in a capital case, unless the proof is evident or the presumption great.

2. Bail $\Leftrightarrow$ 49—One charged with capital offense should not be discharged on habeas corpus unless conviction could not stand on the evidence.

In habeas corpus, the court should not anticipate action of the jury by discharging one charged with capital offense with or without bail, on evidence which it cannot say is so insufficient that a verdict requiring a capital sentence should not be permitted to stand.

3. Bail $\Leftrightarrow$ 49—To sustain refusal of bail in capital case, it is enough that evidence induces belief that accused may have committed the offense.

To sustain order refusing to admit one charged with capital offense to bail, it is not necessary that the evidence be so convincing as to justify verdict against accused, but it is enough if it points to him and induces belief that he may have committed the offense.

4. Bail $\Leftrightarrow$ 49—Evidence held sufficient to justify refusal of bail in capital case.

Evidence on habeas corpus by one accused of capital offense held sufficient to induce belief that accused may have committed the offense, and therefore to justify the refusal of bail.

Application by Frank E. Page for writ of habeas corpus to the sheriff of Modoc county. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

A. K. Wylie, of Alturas, and Daly B. Robnett and J. R. Cunyningham, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Oscar Gibbons, Dist. Atty., of Alturas, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for a writ of habeas corpus. It is alleged therein that petitioner, Frank E. Page, is unlawfully imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the county of Modoc, Cal.; that he is so restrained pursuant to an order and bench warrant issued out of the superior court of said county, charging him with the murder of one Pearl Connell; that prior to the filing of the information, and as the basis thereof, a complaint was filed before William Thompson, justice of the peace of Alturas township, county of Modoc, sitting as a committing magistrate, in which said complaint petitioner was charged with the crime of murder of the said Pearl Connell, and thereafter, and on the 18th day of March, 1927, a preliminary hearing and examination was held by such committing magistrate and at the close thereof said magistrate made an order holding petitioner to answer on the charge of murder; that at the time of the making of said order the attorney for petitioner moved the magistrate for an order fixing bail, which motion was denied and petitioner was committed to the sheriff of said Modoc county; that thereafter the district attorney of said county filed in the superior court of Modoc county the information referred to, and petitioner was duly arraigned before the superior court and entered a plea of not guilty to the charge contained therein, and at that time counsel for petitioner moved the court for an order fixing bail and allowing petitioner to be discharged upon giving such bail, which motion was denied; that the said imprisonment and detention is illegal, such illegality consisting in this, that the proof is not evident, nor the presumption great against petitioner, for which reason he is entitled to bail.

[1-3] It is petitioner's contention that courts have no right to refuse a defendant bail even in capital cases, unless the proof is evident or the presumption of guilt is great. There can be no question as to the correctness of this rule. Under the Constitution all persons accused of crime are entitled to bail "unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great," Const. art. 1, § 6. In habeas corpus proceedings, however, the court ought not to anticipate the action of the jury by discharging a prisoner, charged with a capital offense, with or without bail, upon evidence which it cannot say is so insufficient that a verdict requiring a capital sentence, should not be permitted to stand. Ex parte Curtis, 92 Cal. 188, 28 P. 223. Accordingly, it has been held that to sustain an order refusing to admit a prisoner charged with a capital offense to bail, it is not necessary that the evidence should be so convincing as to justify a verdict against the accused, but it is sufficient if it points to him and induces the belief that he may have committed the offense charged. 3 Cal. Jur. p. 1030; Ex parte Walpole, 85 Cal. 362, 24 P. 657. Just what probative force evidence must have to bring the case within the rule mentioned in the Constitution and to exclude bail has been the subject of much judicial discussion. 6 Cor. Jur. p. 956.

[4] The character and extent of the proof to make the necessary sufficiency depends of necessity upon the circumstances of the particular case. Here the evidence taken upon the preliminary examination shows, in substance, that petitioner and Pearl Connell had been engaged as partners in conducting the Surprise Hotel in the town of Cedarville, county of Modoc, for a period of some three years. Their relations had become inharmonious, due to a difference of opinion concerning the manner in which the hotel should be conducted, and on one occasion petitioner had forcibly ejected her from the kitchen. In consequence of their differences, petitioner was anxious to acquire her interest in the property. He had made statements to the effect that he had some $7,000 invested in the business, but that, as she had no funds, he would pay her the sum of $1,500 only for her interest instead of $3,000, the amount she was demanding. On the evening of July 6, 1926, petitioner left the hotel some time between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock, and he and one Mae Rhoades went for an automobile ride several miles out of the town of Cedarville. Some time after his departure Pearl Connell made inquiries as to his whereabouts, and she was informed that he was visiting Mae Rhoades. Upon receiving this information, she left the hotel and was never seen thereafter alive. Two days later, on July 8, 1926, her body was found in a cellar of unoccupied premises situated south of Ann street in the town of Cedarville. The condition of the street opposite the cellar indicated that a struggle had taken place and that there were marks of blood on certain objects near by. The autopsy revealed that the cartilage of her windpipe was crushed in and broken, and that death had been caused by strangulation. The evidence further shows that some time about 9 or 9:30 o'clock in the evening of July 6, 1926, Mary Seminario who resided about two blocks from where the body was found, heard screams and saw an automobile driving easterly on Ann street and witnessed the driver thereof turn the machine around and shut off the headlights of the car. Petitioner was interviewed by the sheriff of the county, and he admitted that he had driven down Ann street about 10 o'clock in the evening of July 6th, on his way from what is known as the Mabrier house, where Mae Rhoades resided. Other evidence showed that petitioner had arrived at the hotel about 10 o'clock. The place where Pearl Connell met her death was between the hotel and the Mabrier house. It further appears that subsequent to July 8, 1926, a criminal charge was sworn to and filed before the magistrate hereinabove referred to, charging petitioner with having murdered Pearl Connell, and that thereafter the then district attorney dismissed the charge without a hearing. It also appears that the grand jury investigated the matter, but failed to indict petitioner, and he was discharged from custody August 14, 1926. The pending charge was thereafter instituted with the result as stated. Under all these circumstances, we cannot say that petitioner is imprisoned without sufficient or probable cause, and that the evidence is of such a character that he is entitled to bail as of right. The evidence as a whole is sufficient to induce the belief that petitioner may have committed the offense charged, and, as above indicated, it is therefore sufficient to justify the refusal of bail.

The writ is therefore discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. PEDERSEN
et al. (Civ. 5269, 5456).★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 25, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Eminent domain ⇨131—Market value of property in eminent domain action, must be determined as it is found, considering elements of value inclusive of all possible uses and purposes (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain action, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, market value of property must be determined as property is found, considering all of elements of value, inclusive of all uses and purposes for which land is or may become adapted.

2. Evidence ⇨142(1) — Admitting testimony of sales of other property in eminent domain action to prove value held error (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain action, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, admitting evidence of sales of other property and price at which property was sold to prove value of property, on direct examination, held error.

3. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Error in admitting evidence of specific sales to establish value of property was not cured by court's remark that perhaps they would not throw much light on question (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain action, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, error in admitting evidence of sales of other property to establish value of property on direct examination was not cured by court's remark that perhaps they did not throw very much light on question.

4. Evidence ⇨558(8) — Questions regarding sales of other property may only be asked on cross-examination to test expert.

Only purpose for which questions regarding sales of other property may be asked is on cross-examination to test familiarity of expert, testifying regarding value of property, with surrounding conditions and the investigation he may have made with respect thereto.

5. Appeal and error ⇨765—Owners could not attack finding of value of lessee's improvements in eminent domain action, where lessee was not served with owners' briefs and did not have opportunity to reply.

Owners could not attack finding of trial court in eminent domain action regarding value of lessee's improvements, where lessee was not served with owners' briefs on appeal, and was not given an opportunity to reply.

6. Eminent domain ⇨262(4)—Owners could not attack trial court's finding, in eminent domain action, of value of lessee's improvements, where cost was admitted without objection and court made personal inspection.

Owners could not attack finding of trial court, in eminent domain action, that improvements of lessee were of value of $1,000, where testimony of cost of improvements aggregating

$1,230 was admitted without objection and court made personal inspection of property and improvements.

7. Eminent domain ⇨240—Knowledge gained from view of premises in eminent domain action is independent evidence (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

Knowledge gained from trial court's view of premises in eminent domain action, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, is independent evidence.

8. Eminent domain ⇨107—Owners of business are not entitled, in eminent domain proceedings, to compensation for their business or damages thereto (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain proceedings, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, owners of business are not entitled to compensation for their business or damages thereto.

9. Woods and forests ⇨1 — Until converted into personal property by severance, trees remain part of land.

Until felled and converted into personal property by act of severance, trees remain a part of land.

10. Eminent domain ⇨82—In eminent domain proceedings, lessee nursery company held entitled to compensation for trees and shrubs actually growing in ground (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain proceedings under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, lessees engaged in raising nursery stock planted in ground were entitled to compensation for trees and shrubs actually growing in ground and not severed therefrom.

11. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—In eminent domain proceedings, excluding evidence of value of trees and shrubs of lessee nursery company held error (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

In eminent domain proceedings under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373, ruling excluding evidence of value of trees and shrubs of lessees engaged in raising nursery stock planted in ground held error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Los Angeles against Peder C. Pedersen and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Fred Mansur, of Los Angeles, for appellants Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen.

L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for appellants Ishikata and Inouye.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and E. H. Delorey and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. In this proceeding in eminent domain, under the Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 2665, Act 6373), two appeals are prosecuted from the judgment in which Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen were awarded the sum of $19,816, less the sum of $3,945 awarded to the other defendants and appellants, and less the sum of $3,000, together with interest and attorneys' fees to the mortgagee, who, of course, has not appealed. The appellants Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen, sometimes referred to in this opinion as owners, for the sake of convenience, were the owners of lot 36 of Sunnyside tract, subject to a leasehold owned by the Hoover Nursery Company, composed of the other appellants, who may from time to time be called the lessees.

The owners complain of the judgment on three grounds, as follows: (1) That the court adopted an erroneous principle in arriving at the amount of compensation to be made; (2) the erroneous admission in evidence on direct examination of the selling price of various other pieces of property in the neighborhood; and (3) that the finding that the value of the improvements belonging to the lessees in the sum of $1,000 is not supported by the evidence. We shall consider these objections before discussing the other appeal.

It appears from the testimony that the property consisting of some two or three acres had not been subdivided into city lots, but had a value by reason of the possibility of such a use. The owners are of the opinion that the court considered the property only as acreage—eliminating consideration of the possible subdivision purposes. We cannot, from a reading of the testimony, agree with counsel in this regard. The record discloses quite the contrary situation. After one of the witnesses had placed a value on the property, the trial judge asked this question:

"Was that (the potential value as a subdivision) taken into consideration in the estimate? A. The subdivision theory was taken into consideration, and the eventual best use of the property, but the value we set on it as it was, with the subdivision feature as a possibility, but like any other acreage, not an actuality."

And again the court went further in what was an apparent effort to consider the value from the standpoint of its highest available use. While appellants' counsel was examining a witness on redirect examination, he queried:

"Then, in speaking of the Hoover street land, you are speaking, not of its price to the subdivider, but the price it will bring on the market, subdivided, is that correct? A. Yes; it would be worth that if Mr. Pedersen wanted to build on it.

"Plaintiff's Counsel: I move that that be stricken out, the testimony of Mr. Davis, because he says he considers it as resale value, and your honor has already ruled that it is to be considered only as acreage.

"Appellants' Counsel: I did not understand that the court ruled at all that this must be considered as acreage.

"The Court: I think that is all right; I will let it stand."

[1] We cannot agree with appellants that the concluding words of the trial judge indicated that he was considering the property without regard to its availability for subdivision purposes. As we view the remark, it was to overrule the objection, letting the testimony adduced by appellants stand. If there be error in this ruling, and we do not say there was, it was that the court went so far as to consider the price of the property as though it had been subdivided. The true rule is to determine the market value of the property as it is found, considering all of the elements of value, inclusive of all of the uses and purposes for which the land is or may become adapted. Sacramento Southern Railway Co. v. Heilbron, 156 Cal. 408, 104 P. 979; Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission, 171 Cal. 706, 154 P. 864, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 114.

[2-4] The next objection presents a different situation. Evidence of sales of other property in the community and the price paid therefor was adduced, not on cross-examination, but as follows: Counsel for plaintiff on direct examination asked the question:

"Now have you a list of any sales there, that your figures are based on?"

"Defendant's Counsel: We again object to this evidence as to any specific sales tending to prove the value of this property, on the ground it is incompetent evidence.

"The Court: Well all these experts and sharps have been asked similar questions; I am not going to discriminate against Mr. Smith; he can tell what he knows about sales out there. I do not know that they throw very much light, perhaps, on it."

The answer follows, giving a list of sales and the prices at which the property was sold. Recognizing the rule that such testimony is not admissible as tending to prove value on direct examination for the reason that so many factors may enter into the selling price of property, such as financial embarrassment or other circumstances which may in fact force the sale (see Reclamation District v. Inglin, 31 Cal. App. 495, 160 P. 1098; Estate of Ross, 171 Cal. 64, 151 P. 1138), respondent attempts to avert the consequences of its consideration by saying that the court elicited the testimony as though on cross-examination. Just prior to the question quoted, counsel had asked the witness upon what he based his opinion of the market value, and was told that he based it upon the general conditions inclusive of the best use that the property might be put to and the sales of property in the neighborhood. There was no occasion for the question propounded by counsel as to whether or not the witness had a list upon which his figures were based, and the objection was pointed squarely at evidence of other sales, and the court so understood it, as is made apparent by his remark. A motion to strike would have been fruitless, for the reason that the court had already determined to admit testimony of other sales. The conclusion cannot be escaped that it was error. Nor was it saved by the remark of the court that "perhaps" "they do" not "throw very much light" on it. We have no measure by which to determine how much light the trial judge considered they did throw on the question other than the admission in evidence of the testimony. They should have thrown no light and in law they could throw none. The only purpose for which such questions may be asked is on cross-examination to test the familiarity of the expert with surrounding conditions and the investigation he may have made with respect thereto. Reclamation District v. Inglin, supra; Estate of Ross, supra.

The values placed upon the property by the expert witnesses were as follows: $13,958, $15,518, $29,325, $30,000, $31,000. The value placed by the court was, as we have stated, $19,816, from which it will be observed that the amount awarded more nearly agreed with the price fixed by the witness who gave this testimony and valued the property at $15,518 than with any other witness. Under these circumstances we cannot say that the error complained of did not prejudice the rights of the defendants.

[5-7] The attack upon the finding of the trial court that the improvements of the Hoover Nursery were of the value of $1,000 must fail for two reasons, either of which is sufficient. In the first place, the Hoover Nursery was not served with appellants' briefs, and therefore was not given an opportunity to reply, and in the second place we find that the testimony of the cost of the improvements was admitted without objection, aggregating $1,230, and, further, the court made a personal inspection of the property and the improvements. Considering the fact that knowledge gained from a view of the premises is independent evidence (City of Oakland v. Adams, 37 Cal. App. 614, 174 P. 947), the finding is fully supported.

[8-10] The appeal of the lessees, the owners of the Hoover Nursery, which we shall now consider, also presents a very interesting question; i. e., whether the lessees, engaged in raising nursery stock planted in the ground, are entitled to compensation for the value of the nursery stock, or, in the event of severance, to the cost of its removal to other land. The court found that the nursery stock was personal property, and that the lessees were not entitled to compensation, although admittedly the young trees and shrubs were growing in the earth and attached thereto by roots. Undoubtedly, as between the lessors and lessees, the stock thus grown was capable of, and the lessees had the right of, severance and sale thereof as personalty. This, however, does not conclude the question. It has been held that, although as between lessor and lessee the latter may have the right of removing fixtures or improvements, which, except for the agreement, would constitute a part of the realty, nevertheless as between the lessee or lessor and a third party it retains its natural character and may be subjected to the claim of a creditor as part of the realty. McNally v. Connolly, 70 Cal. 3, 11 P. 320; San Francisco Breweries v. Schurtz, 104 Cal. 420, 38 P. 92. Also it has been held that, as between the seller of personal property, on a conditional sales contract of property which is subsequently attached to the land, and a bona fide mortgagee of the realty, the property so purchased and annexed is subject to the lien of the incumbrance, although as between the original parties "the contract may be such that the property would be deemed personalty, and * * * treated as such in law." Oakland Bank of Savings v. California Pressed Brick Co., 183 Cal. 295, 191 P. 524. No one can doubt that, had the trees and shrubs been growing upon the property for the purpose of beautifying the land and the property were sought to be condemned, they would properly be considered as improvements pertaining to the realty. The question then resolves itself to this: Whether the business in which lessees were engaged can alter the natural character of the property in question. It is undoubtedly the rule in California that the owners of a business are not entitled, in proceedings in eminent domain, to compensation for their business or damages thereto. Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 392, 153 P. 705; Morris v. San Francisco, 59 Cal. App. 364, 210 P. 824. On the other hand, suppose the owners of such property were engaged in the lumber business, would it or could it be argued that the potential personalty standing upon the real property in the shape of trees was not a part of the realty? Until felled and converted into personal property by the act of severance, they remain a part of the land. Even growing crops are considered as part of the realty to such an extent as to pass with a grant thereof, and testimony of an oral understanding to the contrary will not be received if not mentioned in the written agreement. Wilson v. White, 161 Cal. 462, 119 P. 895. It seems from the discussion so far that the subject of intention has very often been given undue consideration, except as determinative of the question between the parties or their privies. Where, as here, the question of agreement cannot be taken into account, it would seem that the only line of demarcation that can logically be drawn is that of actual and not possible severance. To further illustrate—suppose that shortly before the service of summons these lessees had determined to sell no further nursery stock then growing, but to change it into a Japanese garden (stranger things have happened) and to beautify it to such an extent as would permit them to charge admission. Would the trees and shrubs be a part of the realty or would they be considered personalty incident to a business? As between strangers, we think the true test must be held to be the nature of the attachment to the soil and whether severed or unsevered. Lessees were entitled to compensation for the trees and shrubs actually growing in the ground and not severed therefrom.

[11] In the instant case objections were made to the introduction by defendants of evidence of the value of the trees and shrubs; ruling was reserved, and the finding of the court that the stock was personal property was in effect a ruling excluding the evidence. Citizens' Bank of Los Angeles v. Jones, 121 Cal. 30, 53 P. 354. This ruling was erroneous.

The judgment, in so far as it concerns the award to appellants Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen and T. Ishikata and S. Inouye, doing business under the firm name and style of Hoover Nursery, is reversed.

GOUCHER v. GOUCHER. (Civ. 5515.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 21, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 20, 1927.

1. Divorce $\S$ 133(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that wife's refusal to have matrimonial intercourse constituted "persistent desertion," within statute (Civ. Code, $\S$ 96).

Evidence in husband's cross-complaint for divorce held, in view of corroboration by circumstances, to sustain finding that wife's refusal to have matrimonial intercourse constituted persistent desertion, within Civ. Code, $\S$ 96.

2. Divorce $\S$ 37(8)—Where wife's separation from husband was result of settled determination, husband, to prove desertion, need not prove he urged her to return.

Where action of wife in separating herself from the marital bed was result of settled determination, husband, to prove her desertion, was not obliged to seek her out and endeavor to have her return, where, under evidence, his effort would have been unavailing.

3. Husband and wife $\S$ 264—Evidence held to sustain finding that land in wife's name was community property purchased with community funds.

In wife's action for divorce where husband filed cross-complaint, evidence held to sustain finding that part of real estate, title to which was in wife's name, was community property purchased with community funds.

4. Husband and wife $\S$ 249—Character of ownership of property, whether community or otherwise, is determined by mode of acquisition, rather than by declarations of parties.

Character of ownership of property, whether community or otherwise, is determined by proof of mode of acquisition, rather than by declarations of parties that it was or was not community property.

5. Husband and wife $\S$ 262(1)—Presumption, under statute, of wife's separate ownership of property, where she is sole grantee, is disputable (Civ. Code, $\S$ 164).

Presumption, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 164, of separate ownership of property by wife, where she is named as sole grantee in deed, is disputable.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Trial court's conclusion whether presumption of wife's separate ownership of property is rebutted, if supported by evidence, is conclusive on appeal (Civ. Code, $\S$ 164).

Whether presumption, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 164, of wife's separate ownership of property, where she is named as sole grantee in conveyances, is rebutted is question of fact, and trial court's conclusion, unless without support in evidence, is conclusive on appeal.

7. Husband and wife $\S$ 264—Evidence held to sustain finding that wife lulled husband into belief that her title to community property was for benefit of community.

Evidence in divorce action held to sustain finding that wife, having taken title to community property in her own name, lulled husband into belief that title was at all times for use and benefit of community.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

Actions by Grace Coe Goucher against Samuel Grant Goucher, in which defendant filed cross-complaint, and action by Samuel Grant Goucher against Grace Coe Goucher. Actions tried together. From decrees for Samuel Grant Goucher in both actions, Grace Coe Goucher filed separate appeals. Appeals heard together. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Earle & McLaughlin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The respondent, Samuel G. Goucher, and the appellant, Grace C. Goucher, are husband and wife. Each brought an action against the other, wherein the former recovered judgments and the latter appealed. The first action was commenced by respondent to obtain a decree adjudicating that certain property, real and personal, the former standing in appellant's name and being claimed by her as her separate estate, was community property. The second action was the instant one, commenced by appellant about two months later to secure a divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, wherein respondent denied the charges of cruelty and filed a cross-complaint asking that he be granted a divorce upon the grounds of extreme cruelty and desertion, and raising the same issue as to the status of the title to the property as was raised in the first action. Appellant, answering said cross-complaint, denied the material allegations thereof relating to the grounds of divorce, and, as in the former action, claimed most of the property described therein as her sole and separate property.

On stipulation, the actions were tried together, but separate findings and judgments were entered in each action. In the first action the court found that all the property involved, except one lot of land hereinafter mentioned, was community property, and judgment was entered accordingly. In the divorce action the court found that neither party had established a case of extreme cruelty, but that respondent had produced sufficient evidence to justify the granting of a divorce upon the ground of desertion, and, regarding the property rights, made findings substantially the same as those made in the first action. The interlocutory decree in the divorce action, besides adjudging that respondent was entitled to a divorce and establishing the status of the title to the real and personal property, directed that appropriate conveyances be made conveying to each of the spouses an undivided one-half interest in the real property, with the exception of the one parcel above mentioned, and that the personal property be equally divided, or, upon failure of the parties to agree upon such division, that it be sold and the proceeds divided. From the decrees thus entered in said actions, Mrs. Goucher prosecutes separate appeals, which are presented in separate printed transcripts, but, under stipulation, are taken on a single bill of exceptions and are argued in one set of briefs.

[1] The charge of desertion pleaded by respondent as a second cause of action in his cross-complaint, and upon which the interlocutory decree of divorce was granted, consisted of allegations of appellant's persistent refusal to have matrimonial intercourse, when neither her health nor any other just cause made such refusal necessary (Civ. Code, § 96); and appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the trial court's decision on that issue, claiming that the evidence proves respondent to have acquiesced in such refusal; that there was no proof showing the refusal on her part was persistent; and that the testimony of the parties to the action on the elements constituting the grounds of divorce was not sufficiently corroborated.

The bill of exceptions contains a large amount of the testimony, but most of it was given in support of the charges of cruelty, and apparently has only an indirect bearing upon the cause of action upon which the decree was granted. The essential facts pertinent to the issue before us, briefly stated, are as follows: The parties were married in 1892 but for a number of years prior to the commencement of these actions had been having serious domestic differences. About 1913 appellant grew suspicious of respondent's conduct toward a young lady employed as saleswoman by a grocery firm handling products sold by the agency represented by respondent, and mainly because of those suspicions, quarrels between the two were almost continuous and grew exceedingly bitter, until May, 1917, when appellant, according to her testimony, "declared" herself to respondent, and thereafter "never occupied his room or his bed." That they did not subsequently occupy the same sleeping apartment or have marital intercourse was testified to by both appellant and respondent, and was corroborated by circumstances established by the testimony of several witnesses who had lived in the house with them during that period of time, with some of whom appellant discussed the matter, and who knew the circumstances under which the parties were living. Furthermore, one of the allegations of appellant's verified complaint was "that since May, 1917, said parties have not lived together as husband and wife"; and appellant concedes in her brief that "the foregoing testimony establishes without dispute that the parties, although occupying the same dwelling, did not have matrimonial intercourse." The only reason given by appellant for such refusal was the alleged intimacy between respondent and the young woman mentioned. But the trial court found with reference thereto, upon convincing evidence, that appellant's suspicions were groundless; that her accusations of undue intimacy were unreasonable and unjust, and that the accused saleswoman was "a young lady of high moral character," with whom respondent "was friendly in a business way, but no more so than he was with other salesladies in the same or similar stores" which were handling the products sold by respondent; and that, therefore, appellant's refusal to continue marital intercourse with respondent on that ground was without just cause.

The evidence further shows that, subsequent to 1917, appellant stated to one of her friends, who afterwards became a witness in the case, that she "never occupied the room with Mr. Goucher since she found him with a girl"; and, to another, that she had not "roomed with him * * * for a good many years, and did not intend to." While testifying in her own behalf, appellant stated that there was nothing in her physical condition to justify her refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse with her husband, and that up to May, 1917, she had not refused to do so. Respondent testified that "a year or two" subsequent to May 1917, appellant told him in effect that she was "tired living this way," and if he would confess to having had improper relations with the young woman mentioned she would "make up" with him, to which he replied that appellant had accused him of doing many things he had not done, and that he did not propose to "condemn an innocent girl" in order to make up with appellant; and that he furthermore said to her:

"You left this room and the door is open; you can come back any time you want to."

In this connection, however, he testified that he had never refused to live with her. The evidence furthermore discloses that, during the period of time between May 1917, and the commencement of this litigation, the parties lived in a continuous state of hostility and hatred toward each other, their associations being marked constantly by violent scenes during which, according to their own testimony, expressions of an exceedingly offensive nature were applied by appellant to respondent, and terms of the most sordid character were hurled by the latter at appellant. The record is replete with testimony of the kind mentioned, but we think it unnecessary to refer to it in greater detail, for no good purpose can be served thereby. It demonstrates beyond doubt, we think, that there were ample grounds for the trial court's conclusions that appellant's refusal to have matrimonial intercourse with respondent was constant and continuous, and therefore persistent, within the meaning of section 96 of the Civil Code; also, that when considered with the other evidence, was legally sufficient in the matter of corroboration to meet the requirements of the law. In Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 68 P. 694, it was said that where a spouse without cause quits the marriage bed, and does not thereafter seek a renewal of matrimonial intercourse for more than a year, it is sufficient to show a persistent refusal; and that it is not required, in order to show such refusal, that the other spouse shall solicit a return to the marriage couch; and in Mayr v. Mayr, 161 Cal. 134, 118 P. 546, it was held that a finding to the effect that the wife persistently refused to have matrimonial intercourse, but that the husband at all times "acquiesced" in such refusal, will be construed as meaning that he submitted thereto, and not that he approved thereof.

[2] The evidence here shows that the action of appellant in separating herself from the marital bed was the result of a settled determination and not a sudden impulse, and therefore respondent, in order to prove desertion, was not obliged to seek her out and endeavor to have her return (Hall v. Hall, 65 N. J. Eq. 709, 55 A. 300), particularly in view of the evidence justifying the fair inference that if he had done so his efforts would have been either unavailing (Hudson v. Hudson, 59 Fla. 529, 51 So. 857, 29 L. R. A. [N. S.] 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 21 Ann. Cas. 278), or would have resulted in strengthening appellant's determination to remain away (Trall v. Trall, 32 N. J. Eq. 231). The facts of the cases cited by appellant in support of her contention that the evidence is insufficient are so essentially different from those of the instant one that we think extended discussion of them is not required. The cases of Hayes v. Hayes, 144 Cal. 625, 78 P. 19, and Ingraham v. Ingraham, 40 Cal. App. 578, 181 P. 234, were unlike the instant one because one of the principal points upon which the decisions therein were grounded was that there was no testimony elicited tending to show that the health or physical condition of the defaulting party did not make her refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse necessary, and it was held that the burden of establishing that fact rested upon the party seeking the divorce on the ground mentioned; and in Lemberger v. Lemberger, 55 Cal. App. 231, 203 P. 786, the circumstances referred to in the opinion clearly proved, as the wife therein claimed, that her condition of health was such as to make her refusal necessary, and that her husband so understood it.

In considering the question of corroboration we have given due application to the rule stated by the Supreme Court in its opinion denying a hearing before that court of the appeal in Lemberger v. Lemberger, supra, which is, in effect, that section 130 of the Civil Code requires "that there must be evidence in support of the cause of action upon which a divorce is granted, in addition to the evidence of either or both of the parties to the action, and that the testimony of one party cannot be taken in corroboration of that of the other for the purpose of proving a cause of divorce." The necessary corroboration of the positive and uncontradicted testimony of both parties to this action, upon the essential propositions involved, has been amply supplied by the numerous circumstances fairly arising from the mass of testimony given by other witnesses in the case in support of the causes urged for a divorce.

After reviewing the entire evidence, we are of the opinion that it is legally sufficient to sustain the decision of the trial court granting the divorce.

[3] With reference to the question of the property rights, the dispute arises only as to the real property, it being conceded that the personal property belongs to the marital community. All of the real property in dispute is situate in Los Angeles county and was acquired subsequent to the marriage, but title thereto was taken in appellant's name, and in some instances as her sole and separate property. It consists of lots 1, 36, and 54 of the West Ninth Street Heights tract; three lots in the Electric Homestead Association tract, and one lot in the Silver Strand tract, Ocean Park. The court found that the whole thereof was community property, except lot 54 of the West Ninth Street Heights tract, which was declared to be appellant's separate property, respondent having conveyed his interest therein to her by a quitclaim deed. It further found that, notwithstanding that all of said property was purchased by appellant and title thereto taken in her name, "the funds used in said purchases were common and community funds belonging to the marital community of the spouses, * * * the same arising out of the joint earnings of the spouses after their marriage"; that no part of said funds "was derived by plaintiff or by defendant, either by gift, devise, bequest, or descent from any source whatever and no gift of any or either of said lots to plaintiff (appellant) was even intended by defendant."

The evidence adduced upon the issues above mentioned, although conflicting, supports the trial court's conclusions thereon.

[4] The character of the ownership of property, whether separate or community, is to be determined by proof showing the mode of acquisition, rather than by any declarations of one of the parties that the property was or was not community property. Potter v. Smith, 48 Cal. App. 162, 191 P. 1023; Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 145 P. 516; Hammond v. McCollough, 159 Cal. 639, 115 P. 216. The proof in the instant cases shows that the nucleus in the acquisition of the real property in dispute was lot No. 101 of the Clark and Bryan Westmoreland tract, which appellant purchased on October 1, 1903, in her own name, making a down payment thereon of $600, and afterwards selling said lot at a profit, which profit, the trial court found, was "invested and reinvested in the purchase of other lots which were sold; she at the same time using in said purchases community money of the spouses" received from the rental of rooms and the keeping of boarders in the home place, also, from the sale of animals and other personal property belonging to the marital community. In this connection the court further found, and the evidence proves:

"That at the date of the marriage of plaintiff and defendant they had but little money, all of which was consumed in household and living expenses, before any property * * * was acquired; * * * that plaintiff and defendant, since their marriage, have been economical, saving, hard, thrifty and industrious workers; that all moneys made by both or either went into the common or community fund of the spouses and the same was and did at all times remain community property."

In further support of these findings the evidence shows by fair inference therefrom, that appellant was the financial manager and banker. Respondent turned over his earnings to her regularly, with the understanding, however, as he claims, that the same were to be conserved and invested for the benefit of the marital community. In due time following their marriage, when they became free from debt, she opened and afterwards maintained bank accounts in various places and under different names, one of which was a savings account in her name. Upon the sale of said lot No. 101 she continued to speculate in real estate with the profits from sales thereof, which were mingled with joint earnings, until she acquired the parcels of property now in controversy.

The determinative question as to the character of the ownership of said lot No. 101, and, consequently, the controlling question as to the nature of the title to the after-acquired property depends upon the source whence appellant obtained the $600 with which she made the initial payment on said lot 101, and upon that point the evidence is in sharp conflict. The court found, upon substantial evidence, that the same "was purchased by and from money that the plaintiff had saved up from the household expenses and other expenses that belonged to the marital community, together with other money furnished to plaintiff by defendant to buy a cloak or coat which * * * she did not buy." In opposition to these facts, appellant testified that except for the small sum diverted from the purchase of said cloak the entire amount of said initial payment was cash received by her as a gift from her cousin and her mother. But on cross-examination on this and other points, as the trial court pointed out in its oral opinion, a number of inconsistencies and improbabilities were developed in her testimony, which doubtless affected her credibility as a witness, for the trial court declined to accept as true her testimony regarding the source of said purchase money and made an express finding to that effect. In that state of the record the decision of the trial court upon the issue mentioned is conclusive on appeal, and therefore must be accepted as final as to the adjudication of the property rights.

[5, 6] Appellant contends that, since she was named as sole grantee in the conveyances to the disputed property, the presumption of separate property, created by section 164 of the Civil Code, must determine the character of ownership thereof. We find no merit in the point for the reason that such presumption is a disputable one, in the form of evidence, and may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect (Stafford v. Martinoni, 192 Cal. 724, 221 P. 919); and whether or not it is so controverted is a question of fact for the trial court, its conclusions, unless manifestly without sufficient support in the evidence, being conclusive on appeal (Stafford v. Martinoni, supra; Potter v. Smith, supra; Fanning v. Green, 156

Cal. 279, 104 P. 308; Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 P. 1066). Conceding that the burden of controverting said presumption was upon the respondent (Lenninger v. Lenninger, 167 Cal. 297, 139 P. 679; Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 P. 657), and that he was required to do so by clear, convincing and satisfactory proof (Estate of Nickson, 187 Cal. 603, 203 P. 106), we think the trial court was warranted in concluding from all the circumstances that the same was so controverted.

[7] Appellant furthermore contends that, even assuming that said lot 101 was acquired with community funds, the evidence showing the mode of its acquisition was sufficient to establish a gift from respondent to her of such community property. This contention is based mainly upon the claim that respondent was cognizant of the manner in which title was being taken, and upon the admitted fact that the sale of said lot 101 by appellant was negotiated by respondent with appellant's consent, while she was absent from the state, and that he deposited the proceeds of the sale in the savings account maintained in her name. We are unable to sustain the contention. The character of the property must be determined as of the date of its acquisition (Vandervort v. Godfrey, 58 Cal. App. 578, 208 P. 1017), and under the doctrine appellant seeks to invoke, the establishment of a gift depends upon proof showing that the donor knew that title to the property was to be taken in donee's name, or that the former consented thereto or participated in the transaction (Miller v. Brode, 186 Cal. 409, 199 P. 531). The evidence here was to the effect that respondent did not know that the title to said lot No. 101 nor to the after-acquired property was to be taken exclusively in appellant's name, nor did he become aware that it had been so taken until some time after it had happened; that upon learning of the fact he demanded an explanation and was told by appellant that she had adopted this course in order to prevent a loss of the property in case a business disaster should befall respondent; and, moreover, that she repeatedly assured him, according to his testimony, that notwithstanding she had so taken title, the property was community property and in the event of her death he would succeed to the same to the exclusion of her relatives; and in pursuance of this understanding respondent exercised many acts of ownership over the property and continued to turn over his earnings to appellant, part of which was utilized in the payment of taxes and assessments levied against the property. In view of the foregoing evidence, we believe the court was warranted in finding, as it did that:

"Plaintiff at all times lulled the defendant into the firm belief that the title to the above-mentioned lots and each of them, taken in her own name, was at all times for the use and benefit of the marital community. * * *

We find no error in denying appellant's motions for new trials. The legal questions presented thereby were substantially the same as those disposed of on the merits; and with reference to the matter of the newly discovered evidence, the counter affidavits filed by respondent show that the testimony of the witnesses appellant sought to produce would only have added to the conflict of evidence upon those issues already determined at the trial.

For the reasons above set forth, the decree appealed from herein is affirmed.

Samuel Grant GOUCHER, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Grace Coe GOUCHER, Defendant and Appellant. (Civ. 5516.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 21, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 20, 1927.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earle & McLaughlin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is a suit in equity, brought by plaintiff, Samuel G. Goucher, against his wife Grace Coe Goucher, to determine the status of the title to certain property acquired after marriage, most of which stood in defendant's name and which plaintiff claimed was community property. About two months after this suit was begun defendant commenced an action for divorce wherein plaintiff herein filed a cross-complaint raising the same issue as to the status of the property that was raised in the instant suit. Under stipulation the two causes were tried together, and a decree in each action was entered in favor of the plaintiff in the present suit, Samuel G. Goucher, from which decrees his wife took separate appeals. The appeal in the divorce action, which is numbered 5515 and entitled Grace Coe Goucher, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant, and Appellant, v. Samuel G. Goucher, Defendant, Cross-Complainant, and Respondent (Cal. App.) 255 P. 892, has this day been determined, the decree appealed from therein being affirmed. Inasmuch as all questions relating to the property rights involved in the instant appeal were considered and decided in the opinion rendered in that appeal, it becomes unnecessary to discuss them here. For the reasons stated in that opinion, the decree appealed from herein is also affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KEYS. (Cr. 1462.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 28, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 27, 1927.

1. Criminal law — 88—Jurisdiction of high-grade misdemeanor in county, but outside city of Los Angeles, is in superior, not municipal, court.

As to high-grade misdemeanors committed outside the territorial limits of the city, but within the county, of Los Angeles, jurisdiction is not in the municipal court of the city, but now, as before the establishment of such municipal court, is in the superior court.

2. Witnesses — 266—Mere long and unnecessary cross-examination of defendant's witness by court held not prejudicial.

For court to cross-examine defendant's witness at unusual length and without apparent necessity, the people being represented by counsel, held not alone to prejudice rights of defendant, disbelief of witness' testimony or bias against defendant not being displayed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Stanley Keys was convicted of violation of the Wright Act, and, from judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Visel and Martin S. Ryan, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. Appellant was charged by information in the superior court of Los Angeles county with a violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), a high-grade misdemeanor, and was tried and found guilty. This appeal is taken from an order of the superior court denying his motion for a new trial, and from the judgment of conviction.

[1] Two grounds are urged, upon which it is claimed that the judgment should be reversed: First, it is said that the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles has exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors committed in the county of Los Angeles and not within any incorporated city other than Los Angeles. This question was decided adversely to appellant's contention in People v. Denault (Cal. App.) 253 P. 151. It was there held that, as to high-grade misdemeanors committed in the county, and outside the territorial limits of the city in which the municipal court has been established, the jurisdiction now, as before the establishment of the municipal court, is in the superior court.

[2] The other point urged by appellant is that "severe and improper cross-examination" by the court of a defense witness tended to show that the court was biased and prejudiced against the defendant, and that the court disbelieved the witness; that this bias and prejudice on the part of the court tended to prejudice the jury—all of which, it is said, constituted prejudicial error.

This examination of the witness by the court occupied about 18 pages of appellant's brief. No attempt is made to point out what questions asked were objectionable, or in what manner any portion of this examination shows prejudice upon the part of the court or is at all prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. It was said in People v. Boggess, 194 Cal. 212, 228 P. 448, that ordinarily the proper course is to allow counsel to first examine a witness, and for the court to intervene, if at all, only after they shall have finished, and that, should the court then examine further, it should do so with care, lest the jury indulge in inferences adverse to the defendant. It appears in the instant case that the court examined the witness at an unusual length, and that without any apparent necessity, as the people were represented by counsel. However, we are not prepared to say that this fact alone prejudiced the rights of the defendant. We have found no part of the examination in which the court displayed disbelief of the witness' testimony, or bias against the defendant; and, as we have said, counsel have made no attempt to call our attention to such an instance. We find no substantial error in the record.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CALIFORNIA DELTA FARMS, Inc., v. CHINESE AMERICAN FARMS, Inc.
(Sac. 3987.)

Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1927.

- [1. Appeal and error § 113(2)—Order denying motion to vacate and to enter different judgment is appealable, though appeal from judgment itself may present same questions; "special order made after final judgment" (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 963).

Order denying a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, to vacate and to enter a different judgment, is appealable, since it is a special order made after final judgment within meaning of section 963 providing for appeal, notwithstanding that on appeal from the judgment itself the same matters may be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Order.]

2. Appeal and error § 113(2)—Statutes permitting court to set aside its judgment and render substituted judgment and making order appealable provide cumulative remedy by appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a).

Code Civ. Proc. § 663, providing that a judgment rendered on findings by the court may be vacated by the same court for erroneous conclusions of law or because the findings do not support the judgment, and section 663a, providing that order granting the motion is appealable, were intended to provide a remedy in addition to the remedy by appeal existing before their enactment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action for the cancellation of a contract by the California Delta Farms, Inc., against the Chinese American Farms, Inc., in which the defendant filed a cross-complaint. After judgment for plaintiff and against defendant, defendant filed a motion for an order vacating the judgment, which was denied, and defendant appealed. Plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

A. B. Bianchi, Manson & Allan, and Albert H. Elliot, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Judgment, based upon findings, was entered in the court below, in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, in an action brought for the cancellation of a contract, possession of real property, and for equitable relief. The defendant did not appeal from the judgment, but made a motion, pursuant to the provisions of section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the judgment vacated and set aside and another and different judgment entered, on the ground that the conclusions of law were incorrect and erroneous and not consistent with or supported by the findings of fact. The motion was denied, and the defendant appealed from the order denying the motion. The respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the order appealed from is not an appealable order.

[1] Section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judgment, when based on findings of fact made by the court, may, upon motion of the party aggrieved, be set aside and vacated by the same court, and another and different judgment entered when the conclusions of law are incorrect or erroneous, not consistent with, or not supported by, the findings. Section 663a provides that an order of the court granting a motion for a substituted judgment may be reviewed on appeal in the same manner as a special order made after final judgment. No provision is therein made for an appeal from an order denying the motion, but the decisions are to the effect that such an order is also appealable. Rahmel v. Lehndorff, 142 Cal. 681, 76 P. 659, 65 L. R. A. 88, 100 Am. St. Rep. 154; Condon v. Donohue, 160 Cal. 749, 118 P. 113; Westervelt v. McCullough, 64 Cal. App. 362, 221 P. 661; Andreoli v. Hodge, 71 Cal. App. 762, 766, 236 P. 333.

There should be no uncertainty on the question. The decisions hold that an order denying a motion to vacate and to enter a different judgment is appealable as a special order made after final judgment. The exact question here presented was raised in Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 113 P. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50, and the court said (page 273 [113 P. 367]):

"By section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an appeal may be taken from any special order made after final judgment. This order [denying a motion to vacate, and to enter a different judgment] is one of that kind. It is an order authorized by section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that an order 'granting such motion may be reviewed on appeal in the same manner as orders made on motions for a new trial.' This was intended either to authorize a review of such an order on appeal from the judgment afterward made in pursuance of it, or to authorize a direct appeal from the order itself. In either case it should not be construed so as to affect the right given by section 963 to appeal from an order denying the motion, as from an order made after judgment. Respondent's position in that behalf is untenable."

[2] Therefore, notwithstanding the obvious fact that on an appeal from a judgment which the court below refuses to set aside, the very same matters may be reviewed, and a reversal can be ordered and the court below directed to enter the judgment which the findings justify, it seems definitely settled that our law gives a separate appeal from an order made by the court on the motion referred to in sections 663 and 663a. Spotton v. Superior Court, 177 Cal. 719, 721, 171 P. 801. When conclusions of law are claimed to be erroneous and not consistent with or not supported by the findings, the moving party may proceed under sections 663 and 663a. When this course is not pursued there must be an appeal from the judgment, or the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be considered. Swift v. Occidental Mining, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 161, 165, 74 P. 700. These sections were not designed to affect the remedy by appeal existing before their enactment, but were intended to provide a remedy in addition thereto. Patch v. Miller, 125 Cal. 240, 57 P. 986.

The authorities relied on by the respondent in support of its motion are based on the well-established rule, generally applicable, that an order refusing to vacate a judgment or order does not present any facts for consideration other than those which are presented upon appeal from the judgment itself. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 191 Cal. 435, 216 P. 619; Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 150 P. 989; Bell v. Solomons, 162 Cal. 105, 121 P. 377; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Calif. Dev. Co., 159 Cal. 484, 114 P. 838; Lindgren v. Weaver (Cal. App.) 252 P. 669. They have no application to the special motions authorized by section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

MILLER v. MILLER et al. (Civ. 4411.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1927.

1. Trusts ⚡89(2)—Purchase in name of son, with funds alleged to be owned jointly with mother, did not establish trust relationship for mother (Civ. Code, § 853).

In action to recover interest in land, purchased in name of son with funds alleged to belong jointly to mother and son, evidence was insufficient to establish trust relationship for mother under Civ. Code, § 853, but justified conclusion that property belonged to son alone.

2. Trusts ⚡86—Conveyance taken in name of person other than one paying consideration raises presumption of trust only in transactions between strangers (Civ. Code, § 853).

Under Civ. Code, § 853, presumption of trust in favor of person paying consideration when conveyance is taken in name of another arises only in transactions between strangers to each other and not where conveyance is taken in name of person for whom there is a moral or legal obligation to provide.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Marietta R. Miller, an incompetent person, by Louis E. Miller, her guardian, against Grace S. Miller and others, in which Louis E. Miller as administrator of the estate of plaintiff named was substituted in plaintiff's stead. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Holley and A. E. Garten, both of Long Beach, for appellant.

Daly, Daly & Todd and G. M. Spicer, all of Long Beach, for respondent Grace S. Miller.

THOMPSON, J. This action was commenced by plaintiff to recover from defendant Grace S. Miller an undivided one-half of two parcels of real property in the city of Long Beach, Cal. The complaint alleged the ownership by plaintiff of an undivided one-half interest, her incompetency, and the appointment of a guardian, and then alleged that for some time prior to the death of Willard E. Miller, a son of plaintiff, which occurred January 23, 1920, the record title to the properties was held by him for convenience and for the joint benefit of himself and his mother, the plaintiff. The complaint further alleges that as to one of the pieces of property, Willard E. Miller, while physically and mentally afflicted by reason of a stroke of paralysis, and on December 24, 1919, was unduly influenced and persuaded by his wife to execute to James H. Daly a deed, in order that Daly might, as he did, immediately convey the property to Willard E. Miller and his wife, the defendant here, as joint tenants with right of survivorship, and that as to the other piece of property Willard E. Miller, without plaintiff's knowledge and because of the undue influence of the defendant, took the title in his own and his wife's name with the right of survivorship, although the funds with which it was purchased were the joint funds of the plaintiff and Willard E. Miller. Judgment was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Since the appeal was prosecuted Marietta R. Miller has died, and Louis E. Miller, as administrator of the estate of Marietta R. Miller, has been substituted in her stead.

[1, 2] The appeal is based on the assertion that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment. No particular finding or portion of the findings is pointed out as being insufficiently supported. At the trial it developed that the title to the first parcel of property had been vested in Willard E. Miller since December, 1903; that it had been improved by him with money borrowed for that purpose; that he had also borrowed money from the same source to purchase the other property and pay for the building. There was testimony to show that some time prior to 1903 the plaintiff owned a property known as the "Kennebec property," which was sold November 30, 1903, for $19,500, from which it is fair to assume must be deducted a mortgage of $3,250 placed upon the property by plaintiff in September, 1900. Mrs. Grace S. Miller testified on cross-examination that her husband told her that title to this property was placed in his mother's name for convenience only and that he owned it in fact. Another son of plaintiff, George I. Miller, testified that the proceeds of this sale went into the American avenue property, which is the first parcel involved in this action, but, on cross-examination, he testified that he did not know how the money for the Kennebec property was paid, nor to whom it was paid, thus evidencing an unfamiliarity with the situation which greatly detracts from the weight to be accorded his statement that the money went into the American avenue property. It does not appear that, after the improvement of this last-named property, Mrs. Marietta R. Miller received any of the income, but rather that, from the year 1907 up to the time of Willard Miller's death, he and a brother, Louis E. Miller, regularly contributed to the support of their mother, the plaintiff, and that after Willard's death Louis and two other brothers and Mrs. Grace Miller, the defendant, contributed to her support. Under these circumstances the following question arises: Was the trial court justified in holding that plaintiff had failed to establish a trust relationship? It cannot be seriously argued that the proof relied upon by plaintiff was clear and convincing; in fact, taken at its greatest probative value, it could do little more than raise a suspicion of a trust. On the other hand, aside from the oral testimony given by defendant's witnesses, the deeds themselves, which were introduced in evidence, together with the relationship of mother and son is sufficient to warrant the conclusion of the court. As has been said (Hamilton v. Hubbard, 134 Cal. 605, 65 P. 322, 66 P. 860):

"Ordinarily, indeed, where a conveyance is made to one and the consideration paid by another, a trust is 'presumed' in favor of the latter. Civil Code, § 853. But this presumption arises only in transactions between 'strangers to each other' (1 Perry on Trusts, § 126), and is not indulged where the conveyance is to the 'wife or child, or other person for whom [the person paying the consideration] is under some natural, moral, or legal obligation to provide.' In such cases the presumption is 'that the purchase and conveyance were intended to be an advancement for the nominal purchaser.' 1 Perry on Trusts, § 143; Hill on Trustees, 97, and note."

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Application by Henry B. Lister for the probate of the will of Florence Belmont Butts, deceased, contested by Herman F. J. Butts. From a judgment refusing probate, and from an order denying proponent's motion to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict, proponent appeals. Affirmed.

Henry B. Lister and Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry I. Stafford and W. F. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the proponent and beneficiary under the will of Florence Belmont Butts, deceased, from a judgment and order refusing probate to the will, and also an appeal from an order made after judgment denying the motion of proponent to enter judgment in his favor notwithstanding the verdict.

The original contest pleaded unsoundness of mind, lack of due execution, and undue influence. The defendant answered this original contest by traversing the same and also by setting forth an affirmative defense to the effect that at the date the will was executed the contestant had repudiated his marriage to the decedent and had brought an action to annul it as a cross-complaint to her action against him for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty; that the parties were separated and bitterly antagonistic at the time the will was made; that the decedent and the contestant were joint tenants at the time the will was made of a fractional interest in a parcel of real property known as the Butts ranch, which, in the event of the death of the decedent before the contestant, would vest by operation of law in the contestant; that the entire estate the decedent had at the time of making the will consisted of some jewelry of the value of $200 and a judgment for alimony against the contestant amounting to $450.

It appears that the original contest was filed on August 1, 1925, and the answer was filed on August 11, 1925. On the latter date, which was the date of trial, an amended contest was filed which contained the allegation that the contestant had duly married the decedent in 1920, and that he remained her husband until the time of her death. The said amended contest then restated the counts of unsoundness of mind, lack of due execution, and undue influence at the time of making the will, substantially as they appeared in the original contest, and then added a new cause of contest, to wit, that the will was revoked by its destruction on the 29th day of June, 1925, by decedent, with intent and purpose on her part then and there to revoke, cancel, and destroy said alleged will. Defendant objected to the filing of this amended contest, which was, nevertheless, allowed by the court. Appellant contends that because no answer was filed to this amended contest, the cause was never at issue, and that the court erred in permitting the amended contest to be filed. Appellant does not contend that he was surprised or placed at any disadvantage by the filing of the amendment. On the contrary, it appears that he had taken and filed seven depositions relating to the hearing of the will by decedent. He asked for no continuance for the purpose of securing evidence upon this issue, nor to file an answer to the amended contest, but proceeded to trial. The evidence was directed to two issues, namely, undue influence and the revocation of the will by the decedent on June 29, 1925. The contestant introduced evidence of said revocation and that at said time said decedent was of sound mind. The proponent introduced seven depositions, all to the effect that decedent was not of sound mind on said date, and in addition to that introduced the order of commitment of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, committing said decedent to the asylum. The contestant offered evidence of the revocation of the will on June 29, 1925, and no objection was made to the introduction of the same.

In the case of Kern Valley Bank v. Koehn, 19 Cal. App. 247, 125 P. 358, a cross-complaint was filed by the defendant and a demurrer thereto was filed, but no answer was ever filed, and the trial proceeded to judgment. Both parties appeared to have deemed the allegations of the cross-complaint in issue, and evidence was offered touching the truth of the allegations thereof, without objection, as though there had been a formal denial of the same. The court said:

"The rule is well established that where both parties treat an affirmative defense as denied, the want of a formal answer thereto will be deemed waived."

[1] We think, under the circumstances of this case, the court and the parties having treated the allegations of the amended contest as denied and proceeded to trial thereon, the objection that a formal answer was not filed has been waived.

[2] The record presents a case wherein an attorney is the sole beneficiary under a will of his client, drawn by himself. It presents a case where there is a conflict between the presumption that the law raises, growing out of such relationship, and the testimony of witnesses offered by the proponent. The question as to whether or not the disputable presumption was overcome by the evidence introduced by the proponent was one to be determined by the jury. As was said in Schurman v. Look, 63 Cal. App. 359, 218 P. 629:

"The solution of that question was within the peculiar and final province of the trial court, for the presumption on the one hand and the testimony opposed to it on the other, presented but a conflict of evidence. The finding of the trial court on the subject is final."

[3] It was said in Witt's Estate, 198 Cal. 407, 245 P. 197:

"The burden of proof to establish all of the elements of fraud or undue influence was not, in the instant case, upon the contestant, as is the usual situation upon the contest of a will.

The burden was upon the defendant, by reason of his relationship of attorney to Mrs. Witt, to overcome the presumption of fraud and unfair dealing which is automatically raised by the law as a protection to a client against the strong influence to which the confidential relation naturally gives rise. All dealings between an attorney and his client for the benefit of the former are not only closely scrutinized, but are presumptively invalid on the ground of constructive fraud, and such presumption can be overcome only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence * * * that the transaction between himself and his client was fair and equitable and no advantage was taken by him, but he must also offer proof that the client was fully informed of all matters relative to the transaction and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length."

See Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 91 Am. Dec. 644; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 519, 105 P. 981; Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918.

[4] The jury saw and heard the witnesses, and, from an examination of the entire record, we cannot say they were not warranted in the conclusion they reached in the verdict rendered. While from the evidence we think they might have concluded otherwise, we are not triers of fact, and we think this case is one where there is a conflict in the evidence upon both grounds of contest. We have read the record with great care, but we feel that no useful purpose would be served in setting forth the evidence, as we are satisfied that the jury, if it chose to disbelieve the testimony of any of the witnesses produced, might conscientiously find that the presumption was not overcome. If the verdict had been the other way we would not be inclined to disturb it under the facts presented by the record.

Exception is taken to certain instructions given and refused by the trial court, but, when we consider the instructions as a whole, they fairly state the law to the jury. As to the alleged errors in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, we think they were without prejudice to appellant.

The judgment is affirmed. As the appeal herein appears to have been prosecuted in good faith, it is ordered that the costs of the appellant be paid out of the assets of said estate.

STOCKTON SAVINGS & LOAN BANK v. MELLO et ux. (Sac. 3804.)

Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1927.

1. Homestead ⚡200—Burden of proof is on creditor, petitioning for appraisal of debtor's homestead, to show value exceeds exemption (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259).

On hearing of creditor's petition for appraisal of homestead, under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259, the burden of proof is on petitioner to establish by weight of evidence that the value of the homestead property exceeds the exemption.

2. Homestead ⚡200—Statutes relating to execution against homestead contemplate hearing on petition for appraisal, at which homestead claimant may be heard (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259).

Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259, relating to proceedings on execution against homestead, contemplate hearing on the petition for the appointment of appraisers at the time and place designated by the statutory notice, at which the homestead claimant is entitled to be heard.

3. Homestead ⚡200—Homestead claimant need not file pleadings to creditor's petition for appraisal (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259).

In proceedings under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259, relating to execution against homestead, no pleadings to the petition for appointment of appraisers are necessary on the part of the homestead claimant.

4. Appeal and error ⚡77(1)—Order denying creditor's petition for homestead appraisal is final determination and appealable (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259).

Order of the court denying a creditor's petition for appraisal of a homestead in proceedings under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259, relating to execution, is a final determination from which appeal lies.

5. Appeal and error ⚡101(1)—Trial court's denial, on conflicting evidence of homestead's value, of petition for appraisal, would not be disturbed on appeal (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259).

Trial court's denial of creditor's petition for homestead appraisal would not be disturbed on appeal in proceedings under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259, relating to execution, where evidence of homestead's value relative to exemption was conflicting, and due service and the truth of the other allegations of petition were stipulated.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Proceedings by the Stockton Savings & Loan Bank, as judgment creditor, against John V. Mello and wife for appraisal of a homestead under Civ. Code §§ 1245-1259. From an order denying the petition, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, and Charles E. Watkinson, of Hanford, for appellant.

Clark Clement, of Lemoore, for respondents.

SIENK, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the petition of a judgment creditor for the appraisal of a homestead in a proceeding taken pursuant to sections 1245-1259, inclusive, of the Civil Code.

In the superior court in and for the county of San Joaquin, the petitioner on November 20, 1924, obtained a judgment against the defendant John V. Mello for the sum of $4,818. On December 10, 1924, an execution was issued on said judgment and levied on certain real property in Kings county on which the defendant John V. Mello, as head of a family had, on February 15, 1924, duly declared a homestead. The said defendant thereupon demanded that the sheriff desist from selling the homestead property, and in an action commenced by him in the superior court in and for the county of Kings, obtained an injunction prohibiting such sale. On February 14, 1925, the petitioner filed its verified petition alleging the matters required to be shown by section 1246 of the Civil Code, including the allegation, on information and belief, that the said property at the time of the homestead declaration was and is of the reasonable value of $15,000, and praying that the court appoint three disinterested persons to appraise the value of said homestead.

The petition came on regularly for hearing on March 2, 1925. It was stipulated that due service had been made on the defendants of the petition and of the notice of the time and place of hearing as required by section 1248 of the Civil Code. It was also stipulated that all of the allegations of the petition were true with the exception of the allegation that the homestead claimed by the defendants was and is of a reasonable value in excess of $5,000, to wit, of the value of $15,000. In support of the allegation of the petition that the said property was worth in excess of the homestead exemption of $5,000, the petitioner produced two witnesses, each of whom testified that said property was of the market value of $8,000. Petitioner then rested, whereupon the defendant produced six witnesses, each of whom testified that the market value of said property was $4,500, and the matter was submitted for decision. On March 9, 1925, the court made and entered its order denying said petition, from which order, being a final determination of the matter so far as the superior court was concerned, this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] It is conceded by the petitioner that if on such a hearing the court may pass on the weight of conflicting evidence, there is no error in the record. It is the contention of the petitioner, however, that if on such a hearing the petitioner produces evidence showing, prima facie, that the value of said homesteaded property is in excess of the statutory exemption, the court has no recourse but to appoint the appraisers notwithstanding the fact that it might be shown on behalf of the defendant by a preponderance of the evidence that the value of said property is less than the exemption. The argument is based on the language of section 1251 of the Civil Code relating to the duties of the appraisers wherein it is provided that, "They must view the premises and appraise the value thereof, and if the appraised value exceeds the homestead exemption they must determine whether the land claimed can be divided without material injury;" and also on the language of section 1254 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"If, from the report, it appears to the judge that the land claimed exceeds in value the amount of the homestead exemption, and that it cannot be divided, he must make an order directing its sale under the execution."

We find nothing in the sections referred to which would preclude the court, after the filing and service of the petition and notice on the exemption claimant of the time and place of hearing pursuant to section 1249 of the Civil Code, from determining on the evidence produced on such hearing and in accordance with the rules of evidence that the petitioner had not made out a case entitling it to the appointment of appraisers. Said section 1249 provides that:

"At the hearing the judge may, upon proof of the service of a copy of the petition and notice, and of the facts stated in the petition, appoint three disinterested residents of the county to appraise the value of the homestead."

[2, 3] The determination of the court on the proof "of the facts stated in the petition" would seem to contemplate a determination on all the proof on the issue tendered by the petition and not merely the proof offered by the petitioner. The homestead claimant is entitled to be heard on the hearing of the petition, and no pleadings on the part of said claimant are necessary. Stone v. McCann, 79 Cal. 460, 462, 21 P. 863. If the court be limited to the proof on behalf of the petitioner, it would seem to be idle to provide in the statute, as it is provided by section 1248, for service of the petition and notice of the time and place of hearing on the homestead claimant. Such a limited proceeding would be ex parte in its effect. If, on the other hand, the claimant has a right to be heard at the time and place noticed, and the Code plainly provides for such hearing, it would be unreasonable to conclude that his evidence could have no weight in the determination of whether a showing had been made sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the appointment of appraisers. The provision of said section 1249 that at the hearing the judge may appoint the appraisers would seem to indicate some discretion on the part of the court, at least on conflicting evidence, to grant or deny the petition as the proof should warrant. To accord to the homestead claimant the right to a hearing on the petition and at the same time to deny the court the right to consider the evidence then produced on behalf of the claimant would result in a manifestly anomalous proceeding contrary to the clear intention of the statute.

The petitioner relies on certain language in Stone v. McCann, supra, to the effect that when the report of the appraisers is filed a time should be fixed for the hearing thereon and due notice thereof be given to the claimant; that the questions whether the homestead exceeds in value the sum of $5,000 and whether it can be divided without material injury should then be determined upon the evidence produced by the parties. The petitioner also relies upon Brown v. Starr, 75 Cal. 163, 16 P. 760, wherein it was held that it must be assumed that the intention of the statute was that the action of the appraisers as evidenced by their report was to be subject to the control of the court in proceedings on notice to confirm or reject the report. The defendants, on the other hand, rely on Lean v. Givens, 146 Cal. 739, 81 P. 128, 106 Am. St. Rep. 79, wherein it was stated, with reference to that part of the report of the appraisers that a division of the property could be made, at page 744 (81 P. 130):

"It may be that where the report is, that a division can be made and the excess set off for sale there should be further proceedings, hearings, and notices for the purpose of securing the right to a just division, as was held in Brown v. Starr, 75 Cal. 164 [16 P. 760]. * * * In any case, however, we perceive no good reason for holding that further notices must be given where the appraisers report that the property cannot be divided. Neither the court nor the judge is given power to revise or set aside the decision of the appraisers as to the possibility of making a fair division. The remarks in Stone v. McCann, 79 Cal. 462 [21 P. 863], with respect to further notice upon the hearing of the report of the appraisers, is merely a part of the argument upon another question, and the subject-matter of the notices was not before the court."

[4, 5] We find it unnecessary to resolve any alleged inconsistencies in these former decisions. The question now presented was not directly involved in any of them. It is sufficient to say that the statute contemplates a hearing on the petition for the appointment of appraisers at the time and place designated by the notice required by the statute. If the court on sufficient evidence denies the petition, its order to that effect would constitute a final determination of the matter, and an appeal would lie from such order. This course was followed in the present case. On such hearing the burden of proof was on the petitioner. Demartin v. Demartin, 85 Cal. 71, 74, 24 P. 594. As the court found on conflicting evidence against the petitioner's claim, its finding may not be disturbed on appeal.

The order is affirmed.

In re MAGERL'S ESTATE.

MARTIN v. WARD.

(L. A. 9358.)

Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1927.

1. Wills $\S$ 384—Whether court erred in refusing jury trial in will contest must be determined from record touching that particular phase of case, not by evidence presented to court after refusal.

Question, as to whether trial court erred in making order refusing contestant in will case a jury trial, must be determined by state of record touching that particular phase of case, rather than by nature and extent of evidence presented on hearing before court after making and entry of its order refusing to submit contest to jury.

2. Jury $\S$ 25(1)—Contestant in will case could only procure trial by jury by compliance with statute regulating hearings on contested wills (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1312).

Contestant, in proceeding to admit will to probate, triable in probate, wherein contestant was not entitled as of right to trial by jury, could only procure that right by compliance with terms of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1312, regulating hearings on contested wills.

3. Jury $\S$ 25(9)—Where jury was had in first trial of will contest, contestant, not filing written request, was not entitled to jury in new trial (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1312).

Where, in first trial of proceeding to admit will to probate, jury trial was had on one of asserted grounds of contest, contestant was not entitled to trial by jury in new trial, where he failed to file request in writing for jury trial in accordance with requirements of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1312, since order granting motion for new trial set matter at large as fully as though no previous trial had been held.

4. Wills $\S$ 360—Alleged error in refusing jury trial in will contest held not reviewable, where no exception was taken (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 646).

Contestant's contention that trial court erred in refusing jury trial in contested will case held not subject to review on appeal, where no exception was taken or noted by contestant to ruling, and order of trial court in accordance with requirements of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 646, order complained of was not being within list of orders mentioned in section 647, to which no express exception is required to be taken.

5. Wills $\S$ 360—Prejudice of trial court held not reviewable, where motion for new trial on that ground was not supported by affidavits (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 658).

Appellant in contested will case could not have alleged prejudice on part of trial court reviewed on appeal, where his motion for new trial on that ground was not supported by affidavits, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 658, relating to application for new trial on ground of irregularity in proceedings of court.

6. Wills $\S$ 337—New trial for newly discovered evidence in will contest held properly refused, where evidence was merely cumulative.

New trial, in contested will case, on ground of newly discovered evidence, held properly refused, where affidavits disclosed that evidence proffered was merely cumulative, and of same character as other evidence already produced at trial.

7. Wills $\S$ 337—New trial in will contest held properly refused, where there was no showing that newly discovered evidence could not have been produced at trial.

New trial on ground of newly discovered evidence in will contest held properly refused, where there was no showing, or attempted showing, that with reasonable diligence evidence could not have been produced on trial of cause.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Application by Berrilla Ward for the probate of the will of Grace Magerl, deceased. From a judgment admitting the will to probate, Herman L. Martin, contestant, appeals. Affirmed.

Martin E. Geibel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank L. Muhleman and Hewitt & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county admitting to probate the will of Grace Magerl, deceased, after a trial before the court, sitting without a jury, of a contest of said will by the appellant herein, who was a son of the decedent. The record upon this appeal is a very voluminous one, but the essential facts required for a determination of the appeal may be briefly stated as follows: The last will and testament of the decedent was executed by her on August 24, 1921, in Salt Lake City, of which city she was then a resident. By the terms of her will she devised and bequeathed to her son, Herman L. Martin, the appellant herein, a dwelling house in Salt Lake City, and a one-half interest in certain personal property. To her husband; Joseph E. Magerl, she bequeathed all of her real estate situate in San Diego, Cal. All of the rest and residue of her estate she bequeathed to her sister, Berrilla

Ward, and the husband of the latter, E. E. Ward, equally, share and share alike. She appointed Berrilla Ward executrix of her will and estate. Mrs. Magerl shortly thereafter left Salt Lake City for California, where she resided up to the time of her death, which occurred on April 21, 1924. On May 20, 1924, Berrilla Ward offered the will for probate, whereupon Herman L. Martin, the decedent's son by a former marriage, filed his contest and opposition to the probate of said will, wherein and also in his amended opposition thereto later filed he set forth two grounds of contest, namely, undue influence alleged to have been exercised upon his mother by Berrilla Ward and others, and unsoundness of mind. A trial was had upon such contest before the court sitting with a jury, at the conclusion of which a motion for an instructed verdict was granted by the judge as to the ground of undue influence, but was denied as to the ground of unsoundness of mind. The matter being then submitted to the jury upon the latter ground, it rendered its verdict in favor of the contestant upon the issue of the unsoundness of mind and in favor of the proponent upon the issue as to undue influence. The proponent moved for a new trial, which motion was granted by the court, whereupon the contestant sought and obtained leave to file a second amended ground of contest and opposition to the probate of the will, in which was included a new ground, namely, that the will was procured through the fraud of Berrilla Ward, her sister, Lydia Ward, and one S. P. Armstrong, the Salt Lake City attorney who drew the will. The proponent, Berrilla Ward, answered, denying all the allegations of the second amended contest, and the cause, being at issue, was transferred to another department of said superior court for trial. Thereupon counsel for the contestant served and filed a notice of motion to set the cause for trial, and in accordance therewith, after several transfers to different departments of said court, the cause came on for trial before the department thereof presided over by Hon. Charles S. Burnell on June 16, 1925. When the case was called for trial on that day, the proponent objected to a jury trial, and demanded a trial by the court upon the ground and for the reason that no written demand for a jury trial had been made by the contestant as provided by section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial court thereupon made an order sustaining said objection and excusing the jury, and thereupon proceeded to a trial of the cause without a jury, and, after a prolonged trial, made its findings of fact and conclusions of law adverse to the contestant upon all grounds of contest, and thereupon denied the contest and admitted the will to probate. A judgment to that effect was rendered and entered on August 1, 1925. The contestant in due course made a motion for a new trial upon all the statutory grounds, which motion having been heard and denied, the contestant prosecutes this appeal.

[1-4] While the record on appeal is voluminous, embracing six bulky volumes of type-written transcript, the appellant makes no contention that the evidence adduced at the second trial was insufficient to justify the decision of the trial court. According to both the opening and closing briefs of his counsel, the only purpose for which such evidence is adduced to and extensively set forth in the appendix is in order to illustrate to this court the merits of his contention that he should have been accorded a trial of his contest before a jury. The question, however, as to whether the trial court was in error in making its order refusing the contestant a jury trial must be determined by the state of the record touching that particular phase of the case rather than by the nature and extent of the evidence presented upon the hearing before the court after the making and entry of its order refusing to submit the contest to a jury. This cause being one triable in probate, wherein the contestant was not entitled as of right to a trial by jury, he could only procure that right by a compliance with the terms of the statute regulating hearings upon the contest of wills. Section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the statutory method for the presentation and trial of will contests, and, after providing for the filing and service by the contestant of written grounds of opposition to the probate of a will and for the answer or answers thereto, proceeds to provide that "any issues of fact thus raised, * * * must, on request of either party in writing (filed at least ten days prior to the day set for the hearing), be tried by a jury. If no jury is demanded, the court must try and determine the issues joined." The record shows that upon the first trial of the contest no written demand for a jury trial was filed by the contestant, but that the cause nevertheless proceeded to a hearing before a jury upon one of the asserted grounds of contest; that the jury decided in favor of the contestant thereon; and that thereafter the trial court granted the proponent's motion for a new trial. The order granting said motion set the matter at large as fully as though no previous trial had been held. The contestant thereupon presented his second amended grounds of opposition to the probate of the will, wherein he included a new and further ground of contest. This action on his part further set the matter at large, since as to such new and added ground of contest no trial had theretofore been had. It was therefore incumbent upon the contestant, if he desired a trial by jury upon the issues tendered by his second amended grounds of contest, to have filed his request in writing for such jury trial in accordance with the requirements of section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The only document which he in fact filed relating to the second trial was his notice of motion to set the same for trial, which under no reasonable interpretation of its terms could be held to amount to a request for a trial by jury. There is no merit in the appellant's contention that, because of the fact that the first trial of his original grounds of contest had been had before a jury, he was therefore entitled to have his second trial, upon issues involving new and other grounds of contest, had before a jury, in the absence of a request in writing therefor made and filed in conformity with the section of the Code above referred to. The trial court was not, therefore, in error in making its order sustaining the proponent's objection to the second trial of the contest before a jury, and in thereupon proceeding to hear and determine the issues joined upon said contest without a jury. But, even if the trial court had been in error in its ruling and order in that regard, the point would not be available to the contestant upon this appeal for another and sufficient reason as disclosed by the record. No exception was taken or noted by the contestant to the ruling and order of the trial court in that regard, in accordance with the requirements of section 646 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section reads as follows:

"Exception Defined. When taken. * * * An exception is an objection upon a matter of law to a decision made, either before or after judgment, by a court, tribunal, judge, or other judicial officer, in an action or proceeding. The exception must be taken at the time the decision is made, except as provided in section six hundred and forty-seven."

Section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains a recital of the orders and proceedings of the trial court, to which no express exception is required to be taken, for the reason that, as provided in the last-named section, the matters enumerated therein "are deemed to have been excepted to." The order of the trial court complained of herein is not, however, within the list of those orders and proceedings of a trial court which are thus deemed to have been excepted to, and, this being so, it was essential to the contestant's right to have said ruling and order reviewed upon the motion for new trial or upon appeal that the same should have been expressly excepted to at the time such order was made, in conformity with section 646 of the Code of Civil Procedure above quoted. The following cases fully sustain this view: Hendy Machine Works v. Pacific C. C. Co., 99 Cal. 421, 423, 33 P. 1084; Craig v. Hesperia Land & Water Co., 107 Cal. 675, 40 P. 1057; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 110 Cal. 457, 462, 42 P. 974; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 367, 51 P. 549, 955; Story v. Nidiffer, 146 Cal. 549, 552, 80 P. 692.

It necessarily follows that the contention of the appellant that the trial court was in error in refusing a jury trial is not subject to review upon this appeal.

The appellant makes the further contention that the trial court erred in denying his motion for a new trial upon several of the grounds enumerated in said motion. His first insistence in this regard is that he is entitled to have reviewed the action of the trial court in refusing a trial by jury as an irregularity in the proceeding of the court by which he was prevented from having a fair trial. It is clear, however, that, if our reasoning heretofore indulged in is correct, the action of the trial court in that regard was not such an irregularity as was so reviewable, and for the like reason such action upon the part of the trial court was not "an error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making the application." This disposes of those two grounds of the contestant's said motion.

[5] The contestant makes the further contention that under the specifications of "irregularity in the proceedings of the court" he is entitled to have reviewed the alleged misconduct of the judge of the court evinced during the trial and indicating that he was prejudiced against the contestant, and that the findings of the court were so influenced by such prejudice that the contestant's substantial rights were materially affected thereby. The difficulty with the appellant's asserted right to have such alleged prejudice on the part of the trial court reviewed upon this appeal consists in the fact that his motion for a new trial upon that ground was not supported by any affidavits, such as are required by section 658 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Said section provides that, when the application for a new trial is made upon the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, it must be made upon affidavits. The appellant presented no affidavits upon that subject upon his motion for a new trial, but relied wholly upon excerpts from the record of the trial to sustain his argument that the trial court was prejudiced against his cause. It is clear that the appellant's said ground of motion for a new trial was not sufficiently supported, and that his motion upon that ground was properly denied.

[6, 7] The contestant makes the further and final contention that the trial court was in error in denying his motion for a new trial made upon the ground of newly discovered evidence and supported by certain affidavits presented by him upon said motion. An examination of the affidavits discloses, however, that the evidence thus proffered was merely cumulative and of the same character as other evidence already produced by the contestant upon the trial. The record further discloses that there was no showing, or attempted showing on the part of the contestant that he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced such evidence upon the trial of the cause. This latter showing is essential to the claim of the rights of the contestant to have such alleged newly discovered evidence considered by the trial court upon motion for new trial. 20 Cal. Jur. pp. 84 et seq., and cases cited. It follows that the trial court was not in error in denying the contestant's motion for a new trial.

The foregoing being the only points made by the contestant upon this appeal, the judgment and order are affirmed.

3. Damages ⚡121—Grading contractor not completing work held entitled to contract price, less cost of completion and amount paid.

Grading contractor, who had not removed all earth required to be removed under contract, held entitled to difference between contract price and amount required to complete the work plus part payment received.

Where defense of estoppel was not pleaded in action to enjoin grading contractor from selling security because of incomplete performance, the defense could not be availed of on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Suit by the Producers' Holding Company and another against James A. Hill and others. From a decree for plaintiffs, perpetually enjoining the sale of certain real property, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Geo. F. McCulloch and E. T. Lucey, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert and M. M. Gordon, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The defendants appeal from a decree of perpetual injunction, granted on final hearing in the court below to the plaintiffs, enjoining the defendants from selling certain real property in the city of Los Angeles hypothecated under a deed of trust given as security for the payment of a promissory note for the balance due for work and labor performed in excavating the lands described in the trust deed and adjoining property. The work and labor was performed by the appellant James A. Hill, pursuant to an agreement, in writing, with the respondent Catherine I. Powell, under the terms of which Hill agreed to remove 21,000 cubic yards of dirt from the property of the respondent, for the sum of $11,500. It was provided in the agreement that the compensation for the grading should be due and payable 35 days after the completion of the work, and, if not so paid, the appellant was to receive security for the payment.

Appellant James A. Hill entered into the performance of the contract, and, having, as he contended, completed the work of excavation, made several unsuccessful attempts to collect the money claimed to be due. He finally filed a mechanic's lien against the property. While the work was in progress, the respondent Powell sold the property to the respondent Producers' Holding Company. Some time after the excavation was finished, the Producers' Holding Company leased a portion (one-third) of the premises to Arthur E. Mortimer, who desired to erect a hotel thereon. On having the title examined, Mortimer discovered that the appellant Hill held a mechanic's lien on the property. Through negotiations brought about by Mortimer, a settlement was reached by which Hill released his lien on the premises, accepted $3,800—approximately one-third of the amount of his claim—in cash, which was advanced by Mortimer, and took a 6 months' note of the Producers' Holding Company for the balance of the payment for the work. The note, executed to Robert J. Hill for the appellant James A. Hill, was secured by a deed of trust on the remaining two-thirds of the property not leased to Mortimer. The note not being paid when due, the trustee, the respondent Title Guarantee & Trust Company, declared its intention to sell the property according to the terms of the deed of trust, and advertised it for sale. Thereupon, the Producers' Holding Company and Mrs. Powell, alleging that Hill had failed and refused to complete his contract and that the defendants were insolvent and incapable of responding in damages, instituted this action, which resulted in a decree permanently restraining the defendants from selling or attempting to sell the property, with no alternative. After motion for new trial made and denied, the defendants appealed.

Respondents object to the consideration of the appeal on the ground that there is no record or transcript before the court. The contentions urged in support of the objection appear to be the same as those advanced on motion to dismiss the appeal, which was denied April 6, 1925, and will not be reconsidered.

[1] The appellants urge upon our consideration a number of reasons why the decree should be reversed. We deem it unnecessary to consider any but the major contention that the decree must be set aside, and a new trial ordered, because the court below failed to require the respondents to do equity. The sole contention of the respondents, in support of the action of the trial court in granting the permanent injunction, with no alternative to the appellants, is that the appellant James A. Hill guaranteed full and complete performance of the grading contract, but did not fully complete the work, and therefore cannot recover any part of the agreed consideration. The appellants, in their answer, denied that Hill made any such guarantee, and alleged that at the time of making the contract it was understood and agreed that the contractor would not be required to remove all of the earth from the lots, except and until the owner had erected a retaining wall for the purpose of preventing the "cave-down" of the bank of the adjoining property, and in that connection alleged a willingness to remove all the surplus earth from the lands in accordance with the contract whenever plaintiffs furnished the necessary and proper protection against caving of the adjoining lands. They offered substantial evidence in support of these allegations, and the respondents introduced evidence to the contrary. The trial court did not find directly on the issue thus tendered, but found, generally, that although the appellant James A. Hill, prior to the execution of the trust deed, represented to the owners of the property that the work of excavation had been finished, the work had not been completed in accordance with the terms of the contract; and there remained a large amount of work yet to be done. On this finding the trial court rested its decree perpetually enjoining the defendants from selling the property under the terms of the deed of trust.

[2] The decree must be reversed. The action is one of the equitable cognizance. In their complaint, the plaintiffs alleged they "stand ready and willing * * * to pay to the defendants such sums of money as may be found to be due under said contract, if any are unpaid." In his opening statement to the trial court, counsel for the respondents, after referring to the appellants' alleged breach of contract, declared the action to be "an equity case," and stated a willingness on the part of the respondents "to do equity." Appellants, as before indicated, stood in the same position. The facts presented called for an adjustment of the equities between the parties. It appears from the record that the grading, if completed in accordance with the terms of the contract, would necessitate the removal of approximately 21,000 yards of material, for which the appellant James A. Hill was to receive $11,500. Witnesses on behalf of the respondents testified that the property had not been graded as agreed upon, and that approximately 2,000 yards of material would have to be removed in order that the lot be excavated as agreed upon, and fixed the cost of removal of the remaining earth at $1 a yard, or $2,000 for the whole amount. Appellants, in their testimony, admitted that there remained from 400 to 700 yards of earth to be removed. Accepting the figures of the respondents as correct, it thus appears that the appellants had substantially complied with their contract. There is nothing in the agreement, nor in the findings, from which it may be argued that the contractor was to receive no part of the consideration until he had fully completed the work according to the terms of contract. The rule is well established that, in cases of this character, performance of a contract need not, in all cases, be literal and exact in order to entitle a contractor to compensation therefor; and substantial performance is all that is required. Hill v. Clark, 7 Cal. App. 609, 611, 95 P. 382 (a grading contract); Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 508, 511, 25 P. 686; 6 Cal. Jur. 420.

[3] The correct rule to apply to the situation, therefore, is that the contractor may not be denied all relief, but is entitled to receive from the respondents the difference between the contract price and the amount required to complete the work plus the part payment already received. Although the court did not find on the issue raised by the answer and the conflicting testimony on the point, appellants' failure to fully complete the work of excavation does not appear to have been willful, but grew out of a belief that further excavation would result in injury to the adjoining property and the improvements thereon.

In view of the fact that there existed a controversy as to the amount of the balance due the contractor, the trial court, at the most, should have granted a temporary injunction restraining the contemplated sale under the deed of trust, which was given to secure such balance, pending a determination of the amount actually required to complete the work of excavation according to the terms of the agreement. The sale should have been enjoined only until the equities between the parties which affected the amount due under the deed of trust were settled, and provision made for their complete and satisfactory adjustment. More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 188, 24 P. 729; Meetz v. Mohr, 141 Cal. 667, 673, 75 P. 298. All the parties were in the court below seeking equity and professing a willingness to do equity. The trial court did not accord them an opportunity to do so, and its action must be reversed.

[4] The appellants alleged in their answer, and supported the allegation by evidence, that when the respondents were notified by appellant James A. Hill that the work of excavation was completed, and demand was made by him for payment for the grading, they pleaded that they did not have money with which to pay for the work, and continued to make dilatory promises from time to time until the contractor filed his claim of lien upon the property, and that neither during said period nor during the negotiations which led to the release by Hill of his lien on the property, and the giving and acceptance of the note and trust deed, did the respondents offer any objection, or claim that any work remained to be done under the terms of the contract. While no estoppel is pleaded in direct terms, the appellants contend that the respondents accepted the work as completed, and actually paid for the same with the $3,800 in cash, advanced to their use for that purpose by Mortimer, and by giving the note and trust deed, and cannot now dispute the amount claimed to be due.

Appellants did not plead an estoppel, and that defense may not be availed of on appeal. 3 Story's Equity Jurisprudence, page 582, § 2022; Blood v. La Serena L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 221, 229, 41 P. 1017, 45 P. 252. We are of the view that the equities of the parties to this litigation can best be adjusted by the application of the doctrine of substantial performance, under which the appellant James A. Hill may be compensated for the work actually completed by him, and the respondents will not be compelled to pay for work which was not performed.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

ANSTEAD v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Sac. 3894.)★

Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1927.

Rehearing Granted and Opinion Modified
May 25, 1927.

I. New trial ⚡607(1)—Motion for new trial is denied by operation of law, where it was not made within statutory period after notice of intention (Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

Where defendant, after adverse judgment, served and filed notice of intention to move for new trial, but such motion was never made, it was denied by operation of law at expiration of 60-day period in which it must be heard and determined, under Code Civ. Proc. § 660.

2. Appeal and error ⚡607(1)—Appellant held not in default as to time for giving notice and request for transcript, where respondent gave no notice of termination of proceedings for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 953a).

One taking appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, was not in default as to time within which notice and request for transcript should be given, where respondent gave no notice of termination of proceedings for new trial by operation of law through expiration of period prescribed by section 660 after notice of intention to move for new trial.

3. Appeal and error ⚡607(1)—Trial court may relieve appellant from default as to time for giving notice and request for transcript (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 953a).

Trial court has jurisdiction to entertain appellant's motion to be relieved from default as to time within which notice and request for transcript should be given in appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, and to grant relief thereunder, in view of section 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by William Anstead, by and through R. J. Anstead, as guardian of his person and estate, against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a. From an order of the superior court, relieving defendant of default arising from failure to give notice and request for transcript, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. W. H. Shanahan, of San Francisco, and Carter & Smith, of Redding, for appellant. Thos. J. Straub, of San Francisco, and Carr & Kennedy, Chenoweth & Leininger, all of Redding, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] This appeal is one taken by the plaintiff from an order of the superior court of Shasta county, made on October 30, 1925, relieving the respondent upon this appeal from its alleged default arising out of its failure to give the notice and request for a transcript upon an appeal taken by it in the same action and pursuant to the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts with reference to these two appeals are as follows: On April 30, 1925, the jury in the above-entitled cause returned its verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant therein for the sum of $15,000. Judgment was entered on said verdict on May 1, 1925. On May 8, 1925, the defendant duly served and filed its notice of intention to move for a new trial. Said motion was, however, not made, and the 60-day period in which the same must be heard and determined by the trial court pursuant to section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure expired on June 30, 1925, and said motion was therefore upon that date denied by operation of law. On July 28, 1925, the defendant duly served and filed its notice of appeal from the judgment and upon the same date gave and filed its notice and request to the clerk to prepare a transcript pursuant to the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. On August 19, 1925, owing to the fact that the plaintiff and respondent upon said first appeal was threatening or preparing to move to dismiss the same upon the ground that the said notice and request to the clerk to prepare the transcript therein had been served and filed too late, the defendant gave notice of an application to be relieved from whatever default there might be in the service and filing of said notice and request, and on October 13, 1925, made its motion for such relief before the trial court. In the meantime, and on October 3, 1925, the plaintiff and respondent upon that appeal had served and filed in the Supreme Court his notice of motion to dismiss such appeal upon the ground above stated. On October 30, 1925, the trial court made and entered its order relieving the defendant and appellant on said first appeal from "any default arising out of the failure of defendant to file its notice and request for transcript" in time, and thereupon the transcript, having in the meantime been completed and presented, was settled by the trial court after notice to counsel for both parties and without further objection or exception on the part of counsel for the respondent on that appeal. From the order of the trial court granting such relief this appeal has been taken, and has been submitted for decision upon the briefs on file.

[2, 3] There is no merit in this appeal for two sufficient reasons: (1) That under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, when a proceeding upon motion for a new trial is pending, the time of the appellant to give and file his notice and request for a transcript does not expire until "ten days after notice of decision denying said motion or of other termination thereof." In the case of Brown v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 141, 165 P. 429, this court held that in the absence of a showing of actual notice of the determination of a motion for a new trial the time within which an appellant might give the notice and request for a transcript did not begin to run until the service upon said appellant of a written notice of the termination of the motion for a new trial. In Stoner v. Security Trust Co., 47 Cal. App. 216, 221, 190 P. 500, it was held that the time for giving such notice and request did not begin to run until a notice had been given of the termination of the proceedings for a new trial. The case of Bernschein v. Whitaker, 175 Cal. 130, 165 P. 523, in so far as it is in conflict with the foregoing views, is overruled. No such notice having been given by the respondent upon said former appeal, the appellant therein was not in default as to its time within which the notice and request for a transcript should have been given. (2) Said appellant, however, apparently out of an abundance of caution, made timely application to the trial court to be relieved from whatever default might have arisen in that regard, basing its application upon the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the hearing of said motion the trial court, upon what appears to be a sufficient showing, granted such relief, and thereupon, and without further objection or exception on the part of the respondent upon said former appeal, approved and settled the transcript on appeal therein. That the court had jurisdiction to entertain such motion and grant such relief has recently been decided by this court in the case of Stenzel v. Kronick (Cal. Sup.) 255 P. 199, and said decision is determinative of the question presented upon this appeal.

It follows that this appeal is without merit, and the order therein appealed from is affirmed.

Where a corporation permits judgment against it by default, a creditor cannot inject itself into the action to move to set aside the judgment and an attachment against the corporation.

4. Judgment ⇨452—Strangers necessarily affected by fraudulent judgment may attack it in appropriate proceedings.

Persons who are necessarily affected by entry of fraudulent judgment may, even though

5. Corporations ⚡370(1)—Corporation acting in good faith represents and binds stockholders within corporate powers.

Corporation represents and binds its stockholders in all matters within its corporate powers when acting in good faith and without fraud on their rights.

6. Corporations ⚡202—Stockholders cannot interfere with corporation's litigation over corporate rights, unless directors fraudulently refuse to assert them.

Stockholders cannot interfere with right of corporation to sue and be sued concerning corporate rights and liabilities, except when directors or trustees refuse to act or are guilty of fraud in the maintenance or defense of the action.

7. Corporations ⚡206(2)—Stockholder cannot have redress for injury to corporation before exhausting means to induce directors to act.

Stockholder cannot have redress for wrong or injury to the corporation until he has exhausted all available means to obtain redress from the managing body of the corporation and the corporation has failed to take necessary steps in the premises.

Where a corporation defendant refuses to institute or press in good faith a defense to a suit against it, a stockholder may upon proper application and showing be allowed to become a party and defend on the corporation's behalf.

9. Corporations ⚡202—Stockholder seeking on corporation's behalf to vacate default judgment must show directors fraudulently permitted judgment.

Where stockholder seeks on the corporation's behalf to vacate a default judgment and an attachment against it in the action in which rendered and issued, he must show that the directors or trustees fraudulently permitted recovery of the judgment.

10. Corporations ⚡206(1)—Charge against president for fraud but not refusal of directors to act is insufficient to permit stockholder to move to vacate default judgment against corporation.

Mere charge of president's fraud in permitting default judgment against corporation in a suit by the assignee of the president's personal claim, without charging fraudulent refusal of the board of directors to act or the futility of requesting them to do so, is insufficient to permit stockholder to move to vacate the judgment.

11. Corporations ⚡202—Stockholder moving to vacate default judgment on corporation's behalf has no greater rights than corporation (Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and § 585, subd. 1).

Stockholder properly appearing in the corporation's behalf in a suit against it by reason of the failure of the corporation to act has no other or greater rights than the corporation to vacate default judgment, entered by clerk under Code Civ. Proc. § 585, subd. 1, and attachment theretofore rendered and issued against the corporation, but is limited to the remedies available to it under section 473.

12. Appeal and error ⚡854(2)—Trial court's justification of order on grounds other than those found adequate by Supreme Court is immaterial.

It is immaterial that the trial court, on striking from the files a former order entered upon application of a stranger, vacating a default judgment, attempted to justify its action on grounds other than those which on appeal the Supreme Court finds adequate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by Leonard J. Difani against the Riverside County Oil Company, in which plaintiff obtained judgment by default. The Twin Cities Gas Company, creditor, and Carrie Cahill, a stockholder, filed affidavits and procured an order directing the plaintiff and C. A. Sweeters, sheriff of Riverside county, to show cause why the judgment and attachment issued and levied thereon should not be vacated, and proceedings to enforce the judgment and attachment were enjoined. Upon motion the order to show cause was stricken from the files and the injunction dissolved. From the order striking the order to show cause, the complaining creditor and stockholder appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas C. Whitlock, of Banning, for appellants Twin Cities Gas Co. and Carrie Cahill.

O. K. Morton, Dist. Atty., Albert H. Ford, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Riverside, for Sweeters.

Loyal O. Kelley, of Riverside, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order, as amended, striking from the files of the superior court of the county of Riverside an order to show cause theretofore issued in the above entitled action.

The action was instituted by the plaintiff, as assignee of the president of the defendant oil company, to recover on a claim against said company for salary and commission alleged to be due and owing to the plaintiff's assignor. Service was had upon the defendant company by leaving a copy of the complaint and summons with its vice president. An attachment, duly and regularly issued out of the lower court upon the institution of the action, was on February 6, 1925, levied upon some 1320 feet of well casing in the possession of the defendant company. Upon the expiration of the statutory period and pursuant to the authority conferred by subdivision 1 of section 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the clerk, on March 2, 1925, entered a default judgment against the defendant company in the sum of $6,884.05, the amount prayed for in the complaint, with interest, together with plaintiff's costs of suit. Thereafter and upon the filing therein of affidavits on behalf of the Twin Cities Gas Company, a creditor, and Carrie Cahill, a stockholder of the defendant corporation, an order was made by the trial court directing the plaintiff and the respondent sheriff to show cause before it on March 7, 1925, why the judgment entered and attachment issued and levied should not be vacated, set aside, and canceled. Further proceedings to enforce said judgment and attachment were enjoined pending determination of the motion to vacate. The affidavits upon which said order to show cause was issued charged, among other things, that the action was "baseless and fraudulent" and one intended "to cheat, defraud, and deprive the stockholders of the defendant company and the creditors thereof of the only valuable asset of the defendant company and their rights thereto." Upon motion the order to show cause was thereafter stricken from the files of the court below on the ground that "no person but a stranger is before the court, * * * and this proceeding is a collateral attack upon the judgment." The temporary injunction theretofore granted was, at the same time, dissolved. It is from this order striking the order to show cause from the files that the complaining creditor and stockholder have prosecuted this appeal.

The appeal was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondents to show cause why said order should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of the cause upon said calendar, and the entry of the order to show cause herein, it appeared that the appellants' brief had been filed herein, but that no brief had been filed on behalf of the respondents although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion, for the reasons hereinafter mentioned, that the order to the respondents to show cause in the court below why the judgment and attachment complained of should not be vacated and set aside was properly stricken from the files thereof. An order to show cause is a notice of motion and a citation to the party to appear at a stated time and place to show cause why a motion should not be granted. McAuliffe v. Coughlin, 105 Cal. 268, 38 P. 730. It is settled that one who is not a party to a proceeding may not make a motion therein. Estate of Aveline, 53 Cal. 259; Bennett v. Wilson, 122 Cal. 509, 514, 55 P. 390, 68 Am. St.

Rep. 61; U. S. Bank v. Kendall (C. C.) 179 F. 914. As stated in the opinion in the latter case:

"It is a recognized rule of legal procedure that no one not a party to the action, without any disclosed interest in the result thereof, can be permitted to thrust himself into the controversy by filing any character of pleading therein. Indeed, it would seem to confound the reason of the law, in a mere action at law, requiring pleadings to make up issues to be tried between the parties named in the action, that one not interpleaded as a party, neither for nor against whom the court could render any relief or judgment, could, sua sponte, come into the litigation for any purpose."

[3, 4] The appealing creditor of the defendant corporation is a stranger to the record and not a party to the action. In view of the authorities it could not therefore make any motion in the court below or come into the litigation for any purpose. It follows that said creditor could not properly inject itself into this action for the purpose of moving to set aside the judgment and attachment against the defendant corporation. The order of the court below striking from its files the order to show cause why said judgment and attachment should not be vacated did not, therefore, prejudicially injure the Twin Cities Gas Company, the appealing creditor. Nothing said herein, however, is to be considered as an expression of opinion precluding said creditor from directly attacking the asserted fraudulent judgment and attachment in an appropriate proceeding, for it has been held that persons who are necessarily affected by the entry of a fraudulent judgment may, even though strangers to the record of the action wherein the judgment was rendered, attack the same in an appropriate proceeding instituted for that purpose. Bennett v. Wilson, supra; 1 Freeman on Judgments, §§ 317-319; 1 Black on Judgments, §§ 291, 293, 295. As to the merits or availability of such a proceeding to the appealing creditor herein we undertake to express no opinion.

[5, 6] There remains to be considered what injury, if any, the appealing stockholder has suffered by virtue of the order of the lower court striking from its files the order to show cause why the asserted fraudulent judgment and attachment should not be vacated and set aside. A corporation represents and binds its stockholders in all matters within the limits of its corporate powers when acting in good faith and without fraud upon their rights. So long as the corporation is willing to perform its duty toward stockholders by instituting and conducting in good faith the necessary legal proceedings the stockholders have no cause for complaint; with the right of the corporation to sue and be sued concerning corporate rights or liabilities the stockholders cannot interfere.

except when the governing directors or trustees refuse to act or are guilty of fraud in the maintenance or defense of an action. Waymire v. S. F. Ry. Co., 112 Cal. 646, 44 P. 1086; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 P. 674, 30 P. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158; Cogswell v. Bull, 39 Cal. 320.

[7-9] Moreover, a member or stockholder cannot have redress for any wrong or injury to the corporation until he has exhausted all the means within his reach to obtain redress from the managing body of the corporation and the corporation itself has failed, after proper application to it, to take the necessary and proper steps in the premises. Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 58 P. 376; Ashton v. Dashaway Association, 84 Cal. 61, 22 P. 660, 23 P. 1091, 7 L. R. A. 809; James v. Steifer Min. Co., 35 Cal. App. 778, 171 P. 117. It is the general rule that where a corporation defendant refuses to defend an action, or, having begun a defense, it is made to appear that the corporation will not press it in good faith, a stockholder may, upon a proper application showing the facts, be allowed to become a party and defend on behalf of the corporation, but he must show that he cannot induce those in control to do that which is fair and right. Favorite v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 261, 184 P. 15, 8 A. L. R. 290; Waymire v. S. F. Ry. Co., supra.

[10] In the instant case the appealing stockholder made no charge in her affidavit filed in the court below, and no showing has been attempted on this appeal, that the governing board of directors or trustees of the defendant corporation had fraudulently permitted the recovery of the judgment complained of. Such a showing is, under the foregoing authorities, essential to any application by a stockholder on behalf of the corporate entity. The only charge of fraud in the procurement of the judgment herein is directed at the president of the defendant corporation, which charge would, in view of the authorities, appear to be insufficient. Nor is there any statement in the affidavits filed herein tending to show that said stockholder had, as required, made application to and demand upon the directors or trustees of the defendant corporation looking to their taking the necessary steps to have the asserted fraudulent judgment and attachment vacated and set aside. No attempt is made in the affidavits to point out the futility of such a demand.

[11] In our opinion either of the foregoing reasons would seem sufficient to warrant a holding that the appealing stockholder has not been prejudicially injured by the striking from the files of the lower court of the order to show cause. There is, however, in our opinion still another ground equally capable of sustaining the action of the court below, for even if it be assumed that the appealing stockholder had made the necessary showing and was properly before that court, she would be clothed with no other or greater rights than those of the corporation defendant. In other words, she would merely stand in the shoes of the corporation, the latter remaining the real party in interest. Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 P. 272; Wills v. Porter, 132 Cal. 516, 64 P. 896; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 110 Cal. 332, 42 P. 893. This being so, she could avail herself only of those remedies open to the corporate entity. Turner v. Markham, supra; Wills v. Porter, supra. The only remedies that were available herein to the defendant corporation to avoid the asserted fraudulent judgment were an appeal therefrom, a motion for new trial, and a motion to vacate and set aside said judgment under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Fraud is recognized as a ground for relief under said Code section. In re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 251 P. 205. An inspection of the record in the instant case fails to disclose that the appealing stockholder seasonably pursued, on behalf of the defendant corporation, any one of the enumerated remedies. We refrain from expressing any opinion, however, as to the right of said stockholder on behalf of the corporation to directly attack the judgment in an action on the equity side of the superior court in the event the directors or trustees of the corporation defendant, after demand made, refuse in bad faith to invoke the necessary proceedings.

[12] There is nothing in the authorities cited by the appellants inconsistent with the views herein expressed. Nor do we deem of importance the fact that the court below attempted to justify its order on grounds other than those considered in this opinion. Troy v. Troy, 72 Cal. App. 757, 238 P. 143; 2 Cal. Jur. 809.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

COVINGTON et al. v. GRANT. (Civ. 4274.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 5, 1927.

1. Trover and conversion ⚡16—Plaintiff must have had actual possession, or right to possession, prior to conversion to recover.

In action for conversion, plaintiff must at least have had actual possession, or right to possession, prior to conversion in order to recover.

2. Bailment ⚡16—Automobile seller retaining title under lease contract may maintain conversion action against one repairing carburetor refusing to allow seller to redeem from his lien (Civ. Code, § 2903).

Seller of automobile, retaining title under lease contract, had interest in car which gave him right to redeem it from lien of one repairing carburetor, and therefore had right to immediate possession authorizing action for conversion on latter's refusal to accept tender and deliver property, in view of Civ. Code, § 2903.

3. Bailment § 18(4)—One repairing automobile relinquished right to lien by surrendering possession (Civ. Code, § 3051).

One who repaired carburetor on automobile held to have relinquished all right to lien under Civ. Code, § 3051, for work done and materials furnished by reason of having surrendered possession of car.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by H. L. Covington and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Triangle Motor Company, against J. O. Grant. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Earl D. Finch, of Redlands, for appellants.

George L. Wing and Thomas C. Whitlock, both of Banning, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll, the sole ground being that the judgment is not supported by the findings. The action is for conversion.

It appears that the plaintiffs sold an automobile to one C. L. Jones on a "lease contract," by the terms of which title was retained in the vendor. The court found that on the 23d day of July, 1922, Jones, while in legal possession of the car, brought it into the garage of the defendant, who, at Jones' request, performed services and supplied materials in repairing the carburetor of the car and of the fair and reasonable value of $16.65; that thereafter the defendant Grant parted with possession of the car; that later, and on September 14, 1922, Jones, while in legal possession of the automobile, brought it in to the defendant's garage, whereupon the latter furnished further services and materials in again repairing the carburetor of the car and of the fair and reasonable value of $1.25; that on the 14th day of September, 1922, the plaintiffs duly tendered to the defendant the sum of $1.25, the value of the services and materials furnished on the last-named date, and demanded possession of the automobile, which tender the defendant refused to accept, and retained possession of the machine; that the plaintiffs did not tender to the defendant the sum of $16.65 for the services rendered and materials furnished on the 23d of July.

[1, 2] The respondent claims that in an action for conversion the plaintiff must at least have had actual possession, or a right of possession, prior to the conversion, in order to recover. This is the general rule. Middlesworth v. Sedgwick, 10 Cal. 392; National Lumber Co. v. Tejuanga Valley Rock Co., 22 Cal. App. 726, 136 P. 508; Carvell v. Weaver, 54 Cal. App. 734, 202 P. 897. However, in this instance the plaintiff had an interest in the property which gave him the right to redeem from the lien of the defendant, and therefore the right to immediate possession of the car. Civ. Code, § 2903; Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 14 P. 369, 15 P. 773, 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

[3] Appellants insist that the respondent relinquished all right to his lien under section 3051 of the Civil Code for work done and materials furnished on July 23d by reason of having surrendered possession of the car. This is held to be the case in Davis v. Young (Cal. App.) 242 P. 743, and Goodman v. Anglo-California Trust Co., 62 Cal. App. 702, 217 P. 1078.

It follows that, appellants having tendered to respondent the entire amount of the only lien which the latter then had upon the car, and the respondent having refused to accept the tender or to deliver the property, he was guilty of conversion. Bumiller v. Bumiller, 179 Cal. 119, 175 P. 897.

The judgment is reversed.

FRANKLIN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.*
(Civ. 3106.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 27, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 27, 1927. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Courts § 97(5)—Passenger's suit against railroad, for baggage lost in state, on interstate trip begun in state, presents federal question.

Suit against railroad by passenger beginning interstate trip in California, on ticket to destination, for loss of hand baggage in California, presents federal question as it involves interstate commerce.

2. Courts § 97(5)—Federal statutes and decisions control over inconsistent state decisions, in passenger's suit against railroad involving interstate commerce.

In passenger's suit against railroad involving interstate commerce, pertinent federal statutes and decisions of federal courts determining their applicability control over inconsistent decisions of state courts.

3. Carriers § 405(2)—Railroad's limitation of liability for loss of hand baggage through porter's negligence, declared in published tariff schedules held reasonable and prevents greater recovery (Interstate Commerce Act, § 6, as amended by Act Cong. June 29, 1906, § 2 [U. S. Comp. St. § 8569]).

Railroad's declaration of limitation to $25 of liability for loss of interstate passenger's hand baggage through negligence of red cap porters employed by railroad to assist at trains, set forth in tariff schedules published as required by Interstate Commerce Act, § 6, as amended by Act Cong. June 29, 1906, § 2 (U. S. Comp. St. § 8569), is reasonable, lawful, and precludes passenger from greater recovery.

4. Carriers ⚡405(4)—Passenger desiring greater protection must check baggage and stipulate value, where carrier has published notice limiting liability.

Passenger desiring greater protection against loss of baggage through carrier's negligence must check it and declare and stipulate for a higher value than he would otherwise be entitled to, where carrier has published, conformably to requirements of law and the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, notice limiting its liability.

5. Carriers ⚡405(2)—Court's general finding that tariff was in legal force showed that passenger, suing for baggage lost, was given notice thereof.

Court's general finding that tariff was filed and in due and legal force in accordance with laws of the United States and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be applied concretely to the case to show that passenger, suing railroad for loss of hand baggage, was given the notice, which would be presumed from duly filed and published tariff.

6. Carriers ⚡405(4)—Carrier is liable, subject to limitations, for negligence of its red cap porters handling baggage, though service is without extra charge.

Carrier is liable for passengers' loss through negligence of its red cap porters in handling baggage in course of employment, subject to existing limitations on the amount of liability, notwithstanding the porters' services are furnished without extra charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by Nelita Franklin against the Southern Pacific Company to recover the value of personal property lost in transit. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, for appellant.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $800, alleged to be the value of certain personal property, which, it is further alleged, was carelessly and negligently lost by an employee or agent of the defendant while, as such, he was acting within the scope of his duties. The case was tried by the court without the aid of a jury, and judgment passed for the plaintiff for the sum demanded by the complaint. This appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

The findings present the facts as they are stated pro and con in the pleadings, and, consequently, present the issues tendered and tried in the court below. It will therefore be sufficient to tell herein the story of the controversy in the language of the findings, as follows:

"That at all times mentioned in the complaint defendant's system of trains extended from the town of Lodi, Cal., to the city of San Francisco, and from thence southward. That at the time hereinafter referred to the defendant was furnishing to all its passengers at the city and county of San Francisco the services of certain red cap porters who were in the employ of defendant, and whose duty as such employees was to take the hand baggage of passengers of defendant into the cars of defendant, in aid of such passengers who were embarking on the trains of defendant at said city and county of San Francisco. That this service was at said time and place rendered only to passengers of defendant and without extra charge to such passengers in addition to the purchase price of their tickets.

"That on January 26, 1925, plaintiff was the holder and had regularly purchased from defendant a ticket entitling plaintiff to transportation from the city of Lodi, Cal., to the city of Fairhope, Ala., over the lines of defendant extending from Lodi to San Francisco and from San Francisco southward and entitling plaintiff to carry certain hand baggage, more specifically hereinafter mentioned. That the train system of defendant made it necessary for plaintiff to change cars at San Francisco on the course of her said journey, and that on the 26th day of January, 1925, and in pursuance of said ticket owned by plaintiff, plaintiff rode on the trains of defendant as a passenger of defendant from the city of Lodi to San Francisco and carried with her certain hand baggage, consisting of a suitcase and a small hand bag with a contents of property belonging to plaintiff of the kind, quantity, and value proper for her personal use and convenience, according to the habits and wants of the particular class to which she at said time belonged, with reference to the important necessities and ultimate purposes of said journey.

"That when plaintiff was about to embark in the train of defendant in the city and county of San Francisco in the course of her said journey toward Alabama, one of said red cap porters of defendant, acting in the course of his duty as aforesaid, took from plaintiff the said suitcase and said hand bag with their contents, to return the same to plaintiff on said train after plaintiff had embarked therein as such passenger. That while said employee of defendant had said suitcase and said hand bag in his custody, he so negligently and carelessly kept, cared for, and carried said property of plaintiff that the same was lost, and neither the defendant nor any employee of defendant nor any one at all have ever returned said property to plaintiff, either on the train of defendant after plaintiff had entered same or at any other time or place, and plaintiff has never recovered possession of said property or any part thereof.

"That at the time of said loss said suitcase and hand bag with their contents were of the reasonable value of $800. That defendant has paid plaintiff no part of said $800.

"That on the 26th day of January 1925, there was on file, and had been on file ever since the first day of September, 1922, with the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, and the Railroad Commission of the state of California, that certain tariff known and described as Western Baggage Tariff No. 7, I. C. C. No. 12, which said tariff was filed, issued, and became effective, and was in due and legal force and effect ever since said 1st day of September, 1922, in accordance with the laws of the United States, and with the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, in such case made and provided.

"That said tariff, among other things, therein provided in rule 10 thereof the following provision and limitation: 'Rule 10. Where red cap porter service is provided, hand baggage will be handled without charge by red cap porters to and from trains of Southern Pacific Company. Liability upon hand baggage handled by red cap porters will be limited to $25.'"

[1, 2] The problem submitted here for solution presents a federal question, inasmuch as it involves interstate commerce and the law and the rules governing interstate common carriers of passengers and freight. In such cases, the federal statutes having pertinency to the question and the decisions of the federal courts determining the applicability or nonapplicability of such statutes to the question in hand obviously carry controlling force over any decisions of the state courts upon the same subject, should there be found inconsistent conclusions between the courts of the two jurisdictions. The rule in this respect is stated as follows in 15 C. J. 930:

"Where a question is federal in its nature, the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are absolutely binding upon the state courts and must be followed, regardless of the views of the latter courts, and even though such decisions are inconsistent with prior decisions of the state courts."

See, also, Boston & Maine Railroad Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 34 S. Ct. 526, 58 L. Ed. 868, L. R. A. 1915B, 450, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593.

[3] The question presented by this appeal is whether or not a common carrier in interstate commerce is liable for the full actual value of hand baggage belonging to an interstate passenger riding on its trains, where such baggage, having been handled for the convenience of the passengers by a red cap porter of the carrier, has been lost through the carelessness or negligence of such porter, notwithstanding that the tariff provision or the valuation limitation as to the loss of such baggage which was in legal force and effect at the time of such loss, "limited the liability in case of such loss to the sum of $25," in which sum, it may here be added, the defendant admitted in its answer its liability to plaintiff for the loss which she alleged that she sustained. The defendant contends, as its answer asserts in the language of a pleading, that the limitation of its liability, as published in its schedule of rates of freight and fares filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the loss of her hand baggage while riding on defendant's train as an interstate passenger through the fault or negligence of one of the carrier's so-called red cap porters, then acting within the scope of his duties as such porter, is and was, at the time of the loss complained of here, of legal and binding force, and that the plaintiff therefore is entitled to recover for her loss no greater sum than $25.

On the other hand, it is plaintiff's position (and such is obviously the theory of the decision below) that the rule or regulation contained in the defendant's filed schedule of rates, limiting the latter's liability for the negligent loss of baggage by red cap porters while handling the same in the discharge of their duties, involves an attempt on the part of the defendant to limit its common-law liability for the loss by its negligence of property or baggage of a shipper or passenger in interstate commerce, and that said rule or regulation is void as being in contravention of public policy; that a common carrier of freight or passengers cannot legally limit its common-law liability for full loss so sustained, save and except in those instances in which the shipper or passenger has been given by the carrier the benefit of the lower as between two alternative rates, in which case the law, invoking the doctrine of estoppel, will not permit the shipper or passenger to claim or assert and obtain a higher valuation, though representing the real value of the lost property, than that agreed upon in consideration for the reduced rate; that in this case the plaintiff was not given the benefit of a lower rate of transportation than the uniform rate or the rate common to the entire traveling public, and which prevails in all cases where there is no special agreement or consideration for a rate lower than such rate.

Section 7890 of the Interstate Commerce Act (Barnes' Federal Code, section 6), known as the "Hepburn Act," as amended by what is called and known as the "Carmack Amendment to the Hepburn Act" (U. S. Cumulative Supplement, 1919-1924, Barnes' Federal Code, pp. 777, 778 [U. S. Comp. St. § 8569]), provides:

"Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission created by this act and print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing all the rates, fares, and charges for transportation between different points on its own route and between points on its own route and points on the route of any other carrier by railroad, by pipe line, or by water when a through route and joint rate have been established. If no joint rate over the through route has been established, the several carriers in such through route shall file, print and keep open to public inspection as aforesaid, the separately established rates, fares and charges applied to the through transportation. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force and shall also state separately all terminal charges, storage charges, icing charges, and all other charges which the commission may require, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares, and charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, and copies for the use of the public shall be kept posted in two public and conspicuous places in every depot, station, or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation, in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected. The provisions of this section shall apply to all traffic, transportation, and facilities defined in this act."

The plaintiff cites the following federal cases as illustrative of the principle or rule, which, she contends, must control in the determination of this appeal favorably to the judgment appealed from: Hart v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 112 U. S. 331, 5 S. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717; Boston & Maine Railroad Co. v. Piper, 246 U. S. 439, 38 S. Ct. 354, 62 L. Ed. 820, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 469; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Burke, 255 U. S. 317, 41 S. Ct. 283, 65 L. Ed. 656.

In the case first named (Hart v. Pennsylvania Railroad) the court states the general rule regarding stipulations in agreements between shippers and carriers for the carriage of freight, limiting the liability of the latter for the loss of such freight to an agreed valuation thereof as follows:

"It is the law of this court, that a common carrier may, by special contract, limit his common-law liability; but that he cannot stipulate for exemption from the consequences of his own negligence or that of his servants."

The agreement between the shipper and the railroad in the Hart Case was for the shipment of horses and other property, and contained a stipulation specifically fixing a valuation on each horse at a sum far below that which the owner claimed the property was really worth upon the consideration that he (the owner) should receive the benefit of the lower of two rates of such shipments specified in the schedule of freight rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The court held that the agreement was perfectly valid, or not, as was the claim of the plaintiff, in contravention of the common-law rule governing the liability of common carriers for loss of goods or commodities or other property while in transit and resulting from the negligence of such carriers or that of their agents or servants.

The other cases cited by respondent, and above named, expound and apply the same rule, the agreements, however, being held void, inasmuch as the conditions upon which the limitation of liability may be sustained did not exist therein. In other words, the agreements in those cases provided for rates less than the regular rates specified in the company's published or filed schedule of rates, in which there was no choice of rates scheduled and legally available to the shipper. The court held that the agreements were void because they involved an illegal attempt of the carrier to limit its common-law liability for the loss of the shipper's goods while in its possession, under its contract as a common carrier, by reason of its negligence. In the Burke Case the court stated the rule as follows:

"A carrier may not, by a valuation agreement with a shipper, limit its liability in case of the loss by negligence of an interstate shipment to less than the real value thereof, unless the shipper is given a choice of rates, based on valuation."

The decision in the Piper Case, and also that in the case of Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mugg & Dryden, 202 U. S. 242, 26 S. Ct. 628, 50 L. Ed. 1011, are grounded upon the same considerations as those controlling the conclusion arrived at in the other cases above named.

Thus briefly have we examined the cases relied upon by the plaintiff herein to exhibit the general principles underlying or animating the federal law regarding the respective and reciprocal duties and obligations of common carriers and shippers in interstate commerce. It is obvious, however, that the circumstances characterizing the transactions in those cases are entirely different from those of the instant case. An essentially different rule of decision in the matter of agreements for the shipment of freight and that of the transportation of the baggage of a passenger by common carriers prevails, the distinction arising from the fact that, while in bills of lading or other agreements for the shipment of freight the articles, goods, commodities, or other property to be shipped are either by bulk or specifically enumerated or described and their value stated, thus acquainting the carrier with the precise liability he is to assume in carrying them, the mere checking of the baggage of a passenger on the ticket entitling him to ride on and over the railway lines of the carrier can, generally speaking, afford the latter no information as to the character and the value of the baggage or the contents thereof. It is for this reason that common carriers in interstate traffic, to protect themselves from the enforcement of unwarrantably excessive claims of passengers for the loss of their baggage through the negligence of the carriers, insert in their schedules of rates of freight and fares as filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a rule expressly limiting their liability for the negligent loss of baggage checked for transportation over their roads to a stated amount, unless such passengers, when checking their baggage, declare to the carriers or their agents that such baggage is of value in excess of that to which the rule mentioned limits their liability, thereby enabling the carrier to make such excess charges for the transportation of the baggage as will be in just correspondence with the enhanced liability. Such a regulation is held by the cases cited here by defendant as being reasonable, and, as those cases suggest, is necessary because the knowledge of the passenger checking the baggage of the character and value thereof "is peculiarly his own." Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker, 233 U. S. 97, 34 S. Ct. 526, 58 L. Ed. 868, L. R. A. 1915B, 450, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593; Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio R. Co. v. Woodbury, 254 U. S. 357, 41 S. Ct. 114, 65 L. Ed. 301. The schedules of rates filed by the defendants (railroad companies) in those cases with the Interstate Commerce Commission contained a regulation providing, among other things, that:

"Baggage liability is limited to personal baggage not to exceed $100 in value for a passenger presenting a full ticket * * * unless a greater value is declared and stipulated by the owner and excess charges thereon paid at time of checking the baggage."

In the Hooker Case, it was found by the trial court that plaintiff's baggage consisted of three pieces, of the value of $1,904.50. The charge on this valuation for transportation from Boston to Sunapee Lake (New Hampshire), according to the schedules, would have been 25 cents for each excess $100 or fraction thereof, or $4.75 in all. Plaintiff did not declare and stipulate at the time the baggage was checked that it exceeded $100 in value, and did not pay any charge for valuation in excess of that amount. The plaintiff, at the time the baggage was checked, "had no notice of the regulations * * * limiting the liability of the defendant (further than such notice is to be presumed from the schedules filed and posted" as required by the Commerce Act). The defendant or its agents did not request a declaration by the plaintiff as to the value of the baggage, and made no inquiry respecting its value on receiving it from plaintiff. The court, in that case, said, among other things:

"The precise position of the defendant is that, as the limitation of liability for baggage was filed and posted as a part of its schedules for passenger tariff, the limitation thereby became and was an essential part of its rate, from which, under the Interstate Commerce Law, it could not deviate, and by which the plaintiff was bound, regardless of her knowledge of or assent to it. If the premise is sound, then the conclusion follows, for the public are held inexorably to the rate published, regardless of knowledge, assent, or even misrepresentation. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 15 S. Ct. 802, 39 L. Ed. 910; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 26 S. Ct. 628, 50 L. Ed. 1011; Melody v. Great Northern R. Co., 25 S. D. 606, 127 N. W. 543, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 727.

"It follows, therefore, from the previous decisions in this court, that if it be found that the limitation of liability for baggage is required to be filed in the carrier's tariffs, the plaintiff was bound by such limitation. Having the notice which follows from the filed and published regulations, as required by the statute and the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, she might have declared the value of her luggage, paid the excess tariff rate, and thus secured the liability of the carrier to the full amount of the value of her baggage, or she might, for the purpose of transportation, have valued it at $100, and received free transportation and liability to that extent only, or, as she did, she might have made no valuation of her baggage, in which event the rate and the corresponding liability would have automatically attached."

The Woodbury Case is, in the facts, substantially the same as those of the Hooker Case. The clause in the schedule of rates and fares filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the railroad company (defendant in that case) limiting the liability of the latter for the negligent loss by it of the baggage of a passenger was substantially in the same language as that of the like clause in the schedule of rates and fares filed with the commission by the carrier in the Hooker Case. The trial court in the Woodbury Case held and found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $100 only, said amount being the sum to which the railway company had in its schedule of rates and fares limited its liability, "unless the passenger declared a higher value and paid excess charges," which the trial court found the plaintiff had not done. The Court of Civil Appeals of Texas reversed the judgment and ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $500, the sum she sued for. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the Civil Court of Appeals of the state, holding, as was held in the Hooker Case, that, since plaintiff, when checking her baggage, did not declare to the carrier that it was of value in excess of $100 and pay the excess charges for such higher value, she was bound by the limited liability for the loss of the baggage as set forth in the latter's duly filed and published schedules of rates and fares. But it is manifest that even the Hooker and Woodbury Cases are not strictly applicable to the present case. The case at bar, unlike the cases just named, is not one in which the plaintiff's baggage was checked. Indeed, the situation presented here is more favorable to the defendant's defense in this case than would be that presented in the Hooker and Woodbury Cases, since it may well be assumed to be generally, if, indeed, not uniformly, the fact that the carrier or its agents have no information of the carrying of unchecked baggage by and in the personal possession of the passenger himself while on his journey. The carrier can have no knowledge of or concern with baggage thus carried, unless it be true that the doctrine of the Hooker and Woodbury Cases, supra, apply to a case where baggage is carried in person by the passenger himself. And applying the principles announced in those cases to this case, the plaintiff cannot recover beyond the amount limited by the defendant for the loss of baggage by its negligence. But the company could not and would not reasonably be expected or compelled to make an agreement to stand good for any value of baggage thus carried at which the passenger might appraise it, for the obvious reason that in such case it would not have that greater security in protecting itself against the loss thereof, which is necessarily incident to its own possession of the baggage until the destination of the passenger and the baggage is reached, and which it has the right to claim and have.

Where a transportation company has employed porters at its stations to assist passengers taking its trains, or who are required by their itinerary to transfer from one train to another, in carrying or removing their baggage, carried in hand by such passengers, to the car or from one train to another, it becomes responsible for the acts of such porters while thus they are pursuing their duties, and to provide for such a situation so that it may properly protect its own interests or fortify itself against the enforcement against it of unwarrantably extravagant appraisements by passengers of the value of baggage so carried, in case of its loss by the negligence of a red cap porter, the carrier could hardly do more than to insert a rule or regulation in its schedule of rates of freight and fares filed by it with the Interstate Commerce Commission limiting its liability for unchecked baggage or baggage carried and kept by the passenger in his own manual possession, while traveling, to an amount based upon the probable average or usual value of baggage which experience shows is commonly carried.

[4] Such a rule conforms to the requirements in that regard of the Interstate Commerce Law and the regulations and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and involves a reasonable regulation, and published and posted as the Commerce Act provides, stands as a notice to the public that, if persons traveling on the trains of the carrier would be protected against the loss of their baggage through any negligence of the carrier to the extent of the real value thereof, they must commit it to the possession of the latter by checking it and at the same time declare and stipulate for a higher value thereof than the regulation respecting the checking of baggage would entitle them legitimately to claim in the absence of such declaration and stipulation. If, on the other hand, such passengers desire to and do carry their baggage with their persons, then, as intimated, they take their own chances and become their own insurers as to the loss of the baggage through the negligence of the carrier or that of its agents beyond the amount for which the carrier has duly scheduled and published its liability in such case. As before suggested, the character and the value of the baggage are matters which are peculiarly, and, so far as the carrier is concerned, exclusively within the knowledge of the passenger or the owner thereof. As between him and the carrier or its agents, the passenger alone knows of what the baggage consists or what it contains and of its value. This is peculiarly true as to baggage that is not checked, but is carried by hand by the passenger himself. The passenger may greatly exaggerate the value of the baggage and the carrier could not, save only in exceptional cases, if, indeed, in any, deny that it was of the value so appraised and claimed. Again, the carrier, in such case, if the owner of the baggage thus carried is not to be held bound by the rule or regulation limiting the former's liability as to such baggage in case of its loss by the negligence of the carrier or that of its agents, would be required to assume a risk for which it has not received the excess charges to which, by analogy to the rule laid down in the Hooker and Woodbury Cases, it would be entitled. The unfairness or unreasonableness of the regulation so enforced is plainly manifest. The court, however, will not lend its sanction to a construction of the rule or regulation in question that will impart to it any such effect. The just and reasonable view of the regulation is, as before suggested herein, that where a passenger, having notice of the rule which the law requires, elects to carry his baggage with him rather than to adopt the safer course by checking it, he himself assumes the risk contingent upon the loss thereof by the carrier's negligence as to any amount in excess of that for which the carrier has expressly limited its liability for such loss in its schedule of rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and posted as required by the Commerce Act.

[5] The findings, while not specific upon the subject, nevertheless declare that the notice of the existence of rule 10 of the defendant's tariff schedule, filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, was published and posted as required by the Interstate Commerce Act. Finding 5, it will be perceived, finds that:

"That certain tariff known and described as Western Baggage Tariff No. 7, I. C. C. No. 12, * * * was filed, issued, and became effective, and was in due and legal force and effect ever since said first day of September, 1922, in accordance with the laws of the United States, and with the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, in such case made and provided."

That finding, although in general language, is, of course, to be applied concretely—that is, as to the present case—for it is with the instant case that it is directly concerned. Thus it is shown that the plaintiff was given the notice presumed from the filed, published, and duly posted baggage tariff of the defendant, and therefore she was and is bound thereby. Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hooker [supra] 233 U. S. 97, 34 S. Ct. 526, 58 L. Ed. 868, 874, L. R. A. 1915B, 450, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 593.

[6] The point is made by the defendant that the latter could not, in any event, be held liable for the loss of the plaintiff's baggage through the negligence of one of its red cap porters for the reason, as counsel declare, the furnishing to its patrons of the services of such porters is entirely "gratuitous," and for which a passenger is not made to pay an extra charge, meaning that the company is not required to furnish such service, and that, in doing so, it does not assume nor is there imposed upon it liability for any loss of property passengers may sustain by the negligence of such porters while engaged in performing their duties as such. We have already stated that a carrier employing such porters is responsible for any loss passengers may suffer through the negligence of such porters while the latter are handling the former's baggage in the course of their employment. We think that our conclusion as to that matter is unimpeachable as a legal proposition. But we need not here give the reasons therefor, since our conclusion on the other branch of the discussion is itself decisive of this appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by C. F. Startzman against the Los Banos Cotton Gins, Incorporated. Judgment for plaintiff, and from orders denying motion for new trial, and denying motion to vacate and set aside judgment, defendant appeals. Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed. Appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment affirmed.

R. R. Sischo, of Merced, for appellant.

Andrew R. Schottky, of Merced, for respondent.

HART, J. Defendant appeals from an order denying it a new trial and also from an order denying its motion to set aside and vacate the judgment rendered and entered against it herein.

On the 16th day of January, 1926, the plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant the sum of $625, alleged to be the balance due him from the defendant "for work, labor, and services performed and rendered for defendant by plaintiff from October 1, 1925, to January 15, 1926, * * * for which work * * * defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $300 per month." On the 4th day of March, 1926, the defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint upon both general and special grounds, and, on March 15, 1926, the demurrer was overruled and defendant allowed ten days within which to file an answer. On the 28th day of April, 1926, Messrs. Abbott & Cannon, attorneys for the defendant, filed an answer, specifically denying the allegations of the complaint, except that it admitted that of the sum of $1,050 which the complaint alleged was the original sum earned by plaintiff under the contract of employment, during the period of time stated in the complaint, the defendant paid the plaintiff the sum of $425. On the 10th day of May, 1926, the court set the case for trial for the 15th day of June, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m., and on May 11, 1926, counsel for the defendant were served with a notice notifying them that the trial would be proceeded with at that time. The action was tried on said 15th day of June, the defendant not being represented by its attorneys of record, or any attorney, at the trial and, as above indicated, plaintiff was awarded judgment for the sum sued for.

Upon affidavits filed by the defendant and the "files, papers, proceedings and record in the action" and a counter affidavit filed by the plaintiff, the motion for a new trial and the motion to set aside the judgment were heard, with the result as above stated.

The affidavit of K. W. Cannon, of the law firm of Abbott & Cannon, practicing the profession of law in the city of San Francisco, after reciting in chronological order the various steps taken in the action down to the date of the trial thereof, avers as follows:

"That until Friday, the 11th day of June, 1926, affiant believed he would be able to leave his office in the city and county of San Francisco on the 14th day of June, 1926, proceed to Merced and there try said cause; that on said 10th day of June, 1926, an order to show cause, returnable Friday, June 18, 1926, in department No. 2 of the superior court of the state of California, was served on affiant in an action in which affiant was named as a party defendant; that the nature of said action was such as required the actual presence of affiant in the city and county of San Francisco during the entire week commencing June 14, 1926, and ending June 18, 1926; that affiant on Friday, June 11, 1926, advised Maurice Selig, the president of said defendant corporation, to engage other counsel to try said cause inasmuch as neither he nor Wm. M. Abbott could leave the city and county of San Francisco during said week; that said Maurice Selig, said affiant, said Los Banos Cotton Gins, Inc., and said Maurice Selig, as president of said corporation and each of them, were taken by surprise by this unexpected situation and endeavored to retain other counsel to try said cause, but the time was so short, a Saturday and Sunday intervening, that it was not until Monday, June 15, 1926, that R. Sischo, an attorney in Merced, was retained; that affiant on said 15th day of June, 1926, prepared and forwarded to said R. Sischo a written substitution of attorneys in said causes; that it was impossible for affiant to have left the city and county of San Francisco, during said week, the impossibility arising after said cause had been set for trial, and arising so shortly before said trial as to take said defendant by surprise and excuse its neglect in not appearing and defending said cause on the merits, if any neglect there was; that affiant has been advised of and knows all of the facts of said cause and verily believes that said defendant has and had a good and meritorious defense to the above-entitled cause of action on the merits."

Maurice Selig, president of defendant corporation, deposed, in his affidavit, as follows:

"That K. W. Cannon and Wm. M. Abbott at all of the times herein mentioned prior to the 11th day of June, 1926, were the attorneys for said defendant in said action; that Wm. M. Abbott is the general counsel for Market Street Railway Company, and, as such, is required to remain in the city and county of San Francisco at all times, attending to the affairs of said client; that at all of the times herein mentioned prior to the 11th day of June, 1926, said K. W. Cannon has had entire charge of the legal matters of said defendant; that on the 11th day of June, 1926, K. W. Cannon informed affiant that there was pending in the city and county of San Francisco an action in which he was named as a party defendant and that he was required to be and attend on a hearing on an order to show cause in said matter in department No. 2 of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of Friday the 18th day of June, 1926, and that the nature of the proceeding was such as to require his presence in the city and county of San Francisco during all of the week commencing with the 14th day of June 1926; that the action of Startzman v. Los Banos Cotton Gins, Inc., was set for trial on the 15th day of June, 1926, and the case Erreca v. Los Banos Cotton Gins, Inc., was set for trial on the 17th day of June, 1926, both causes being set for trial during the said week said attorney was so required to remain in the city and county of San Francisco; that on said affiant being so advised that said attorney would not be able to try said causes, or either of them, and being advised by said attorney to employ other counsel, affiant endeavored to obtain other counsel to try said causes and each of them, or to get continuances in said actions, but was not able to employ other counsel until the 14th day of June, 1926, when affiant succeeded in retaining R. Sischo, of Merced, to defend said causes; that on said 14th day of June, 1926, affiant caused said R. Sischo to be substituted as attorney in the above-entitled action and mailed said substitutions to said R. Sischo on said 14th day of June, 1926, but affiant is informed and believes and therefore alleges that said attorney did not receive said substitutions in time to appear on behalf of said defendant and defend said actions. Affiant deposes and says that because of said situation said corporation was deprived of an opportunity to subpoena witnesses and try the above-entitled cause on its merits; that affiant has heretofore stated all of the facts of said cause to said attorney K. W. Cannon, and was informed by said attorney and verily believes that said corporation had and has a good meritorious defense to the above-entitled action on the merits; that by and because of the situation above described said defendant and said affiant were taken by surprise, and their neglect to defend the above-entitled action was and is excusable."

The affidavit of R. R. Sischo, an attorney of the city of Merced, is as follows:

"That on the 14th day of June, 1926, at about the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. of said day, affiant received a telephone communication from one Maurice Selig, president of the above-named defendant corporation, and that said Selig asked affiant to represent the Los Banos Cotton Gins, Inc., at the trial of the above action set for the 15th day of June, 1926, and that said Selig informed affiant that he would have prepared substitution of attorneys, and forward the same by mail on said 14th day of June; that affiant did not receive such substitution until the afternoon of the 15th day of June, or until after the trial of said action, and affiant appeared in the above-entitled court and moved the court for a continuance, on the grounds that the defendant was not prepared for trial and that proper substitution of attorneys had not arrived in order that affiant could take part in said trial; that affiant's motion was overruled; that when said substitution of attorneys was received by affiant on said 15th day of June, the same was signed by Maurice Selig, the president of the above-named defendant corporation, but the consent of the attorneys Abbott & Cannon was not signed thereto; that affiant returned said substitution to K. W. Cannon, one of the attorneys for the defendant corporation above named requesting him to sign the same and return at once; that affiant did not receive the same back until the 27th day of June, 1926; that as a result of such failure to receive said substitution, there was no attorney in court to represent the above-named defendant corporation on said 15th day of June, 1926."

The affidavit of attorney for the plaintiff, Andrew R. Schottky, countered as follows:

"That he is, and at all times herein mentioned, was the attorney for plaintiff in the above-entitled action; that said action was filed on January 16, 1926, and summons was served upon defendant on January 22, 1926; that on the — day of March, 1926, defendant filed a demurrer to said complaint, which said demurrer was overruled by the court on March 15, 1926; that thereafter the attorneys for defendant requested, and were granted by affiant, additional time in which to file defendant's answer, and the answer of defendant was filed herein on April 28, 1926; that thereafter, on May 10, 1926, upon due notice to the attorneys for defendant, the said cause was set for trial on June 15, 1926, at 10 o'clock a. m., and notice of trial was served upon the attorneys for defendant on the 11th day of May, 1926; that after said case was set for trial K. W. Cannon, Esq., as attorney for defendant, made overtures of settlement of said case of plaintiff, but at no time made any request for a continuance of the trial of said cause; that affiant was in the office of K. W. Cannon at San Francisco on the 7th day of June, 1926, and discussed said case with said Cannon, and affiant then stated to said Cannon that the above-entitled case would go to trial on June 15, 1926, unless it was settled before that time; that said K. W. Cannon did not make any request of affiant for a continuance of the date of trial, but said Cannon did state to affiant that he had urged Maurice Selig, president of the said defendant corporation, to settle said claim of plaintiff and not litigate the matter further; that affiant proceeded to the preparation of said case for trial, and plaintiff came from Oakland to Merced to testify at said trial, and other witnesses came from Los Banos and Fresno to testify in support of plaintiff's cause of action; that on the morning of June 15, 1926, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., affiant, together with plaintiff and witnesses, went to the courtroom of the superior court for the trial of said case; that upon said case being called by Hon. E. N. Rector, judge of said superior court, affiant answered 'ready' on behalf of plaintiff, and R. R. Sischo, Esq., then made a motion for a continuance of said trial; that said R. R. Sischo stated to the court that Mr. Selig, president of said defendant corporation, had called him on the telephone the previous day and had asked him to appear for defendant; that said Sischo further stated that Selig had informed him that he had been substituted as attorney for defendant, and that said substitution would be mailed to him, but that he (Sischo) had not yet received it; that said motion for continuance of said trial was argued and submitted and was denied by the court; that thereupon plaintiff introduced evidence in support of his said complaint, and no evidence was introduced by defendant; that said court thereupon rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff; that said R. R. Sischo was present during all of said trial, but did not offer any evidence, or request time to present evidence after plaintiff's testimony had been concluded; that said R. R. Sischo stated to affiant that he could see no reason for offering any evidence, as he was satisfied that defendant had no defense to said action; that because of the fact that said K. W. Cannon, as attorney for defendant, had on numerous occasions requested extensions of time to file defendant's answer, but had never made any request for a continuance of said trial, affiant believes that said attorney for defendant had no intention of contesting said action at the trial, and that the motions herein are not made in good faith, but are merely for the purpose of delaying execution of said judgment; that the action herein is a simple action to recover salary due to plaintiff for services rendered to defendant, and if said defendant had any defense to said action said Selig could easily have retained an attorney either in San Francisco or in Merced in ample time to prepare defendant's defense between June 11, 1926, and June 15, 1926; that W. M. Abbott and K. W. Cannon, who are now and at all times since the commencement of said action have been the attorneys of record for said defendant, and general counsel for the United Railroads of San Francisco, have in their office and under their direction six or more attorneys at law, any one of which could have properly prepared any defense that said defendant might have in said action between June 11, 1926, and June 15, 1926."

[1] The order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial is not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963); hence the appeal from said order must be dismissed.

In presenting the motion to set aside the judgment, as the affidavits filed by the defendant clearly show, the latter proceeded under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Said section, among other things, provides that the court "may * * * relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," etc. The affidavits of Cannon and Selig state that their failure to appear at the trial and defend against the claims of the complaint was due to surprise and excusable neglect, and the statements in their respective affidavits were directly addressed to the support of that conclusion.

[2, 3] It is the settled rule that whether a motion to vacate a judgment on the ground of surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect shall or shall not be granted is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and that the order either granting or denying the motion will not be disturbed upon appeal unless it clearly appears from the record that, in making its order on such motion, the trial court has been guilty of an abuse of discretion. Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 26, 70 P. 930; see, also, Seymour v. Wood, 63 Cal. 81; Buell v. Emerich, 85 Cal. 116, 24 P. 644; Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 P. 63; Winchester v. Black, 134 Cal. 125, 66 P. 197. It is true that some of the cases say that reviewing courts will "listen more readily to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default than where the motion has been granted. Moore v. Thompson, supra. All presumptions," however, proceeded the court in the case just named, "will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the court's action, and the burden in all cases is upon the appellant to make it appear that its discretion was abused in making the order."

[4] We cannot say, upon the record as made upon the motion, that the court below in this action abused its discretion in refusing to grant the continuance. The affidavits filed by the defendant and upon which it rested its motion to vacate the judgment do not, in our opinion, make such a showing as would appeal with such force as to call for favorable response by a trial court in a proceeding such as is presented here. The affidavits are set forth in full hereinabove, and it seems to us that they plainly speak for themselves and thus betray their own weakness as in support of the motion to vacate the judgment. But, if it were necessary to concede that, taken alone, or in the absence of a countershowning, it might, with some degree of reasonableness, be held that said affidavits, when considered in the light of the well-known policy of the courts of appeal to discourage a denial of a trial of an action on its merits, or a trial in which a party to the action, through no fault of his, is without the aid of an attorney in the presentation of his case or defense, presented a situation appealing for favorable action by the trial court in the exercise of its discretion in such instances, still the strong countershowning by the plaintiff compels the conclusion that the decision of the issue presented was one peculiarly within and subject to such discretion. Indeed, accepting as verity certain statements contained in the affidavit of the attorney for the plaintiff, as we are to assume that the trial court did so accept them, it would seem that it would have been an abuse of discretion had the trial court granted the motion presented by the defendant. It is not necessary to recapitulate by way of analysis the allegations of said affidavit. The salient facts therein set forth, which are not here controverted by the defendant or its counsel, tend strongly to support the contention of the plaintiff that the continuance was asked, not because defendant or its counsel believed that the claim sued upon could or should be defeated, but because a postponement of the trial beyond the date on which it had been set was solely desired either for the purpose of affording the defendant further time within which it might the more conveniently pay the debt or like opportunity for securing a composition for the payment of a lower sum as in full satisfaction thereof than that sued for. But an inquiry to ascertain the specific considerations which, upon the record, influenced the court's action in denying the motion is of no material importance in the decision here. It is sufficient to say that the whole showing made on the motions is, at least, such as to force upon us the conclusion that the decision by the trial court on the motions involved the exercise of a judicial discretion with which a Court of Appeal is not legally at liberty to interfere.

The cases cited and relied upon by the defendant are: Grady v. Donahoo, 108 Cal. 212, 41 P. 41; Dusy v. Prudom, 95 Cal. 646, 30 P. 798; Watson v. San Francisco & H. B. R. R. Co., 41 Cal. 17; Bond v. Karma-Ajax Con. Min. Co., 15 Cal. App. 469, 115 P. 254. We will not review those cases herein. A reading of the opinions therein will readily disclose that the conclusions therein reached in no way militate against the conclusion arrived at herein. The general principles which control in the decision of an appeal of the character of the one now before us are in those cases soundly applied upon the facts as they appear in each case. Where relief is sought under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, each case must be judged by and be required to rest upon its own peculiar facts.

The order denying the motion to set aside the judgment entered in the action is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed.

WILLIS et al. v. SAN BERNARDINO LUMBER & BOX CO. et al. (Civ. 4528.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 5, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002 — Verdict under conflicting evidence must stand, if jury might have reached different conclusions therefrom.

Where there is conflict of evidence, court, on appeal, will not disturb verdict where substantial showing has been made, upon which jury might have reached a conclusion different from that for which appellants contend.

2. Master and servant ⇨330(3) — Evidence held to sustain recovery against partners as having control of unlighted motor truck.

In action for damages sustained by collision with unlighted motor truck on highway at night, evidence held to sustain verdict against partners as having control of truck.

3. Master and servant ⇨318(1)—Partnership members were liable for damages from leaving unlighted truck where manager exercised control over truck, though driver was independent contractor (Deering Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 16).

Where truck was used in transporting products of copartnership and was registered in name of manager who exercised control thereof, partners were liable, under St. 1919, p. 194, Deering Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 16, for damages resulting from leaving truck unlighted on highway, though person using truck may have been independent contractor.

4. Master and servant ⇨302(2)—Members of partnership whose manager controlled operation of truck could not avoid liability for injuries because manager was agent for third party.

Members of partnership whose manager controlled truck in partnership business could not avoid liability for damages resulting from leaving it unlighted in highway on ground that manager exercised control as agent of third party.

5. Highways ⇨179—Leaving unlighted truck on highway held not excused by mishap.

In action for damages resulting from collision with unlighted truck, stopped for repairs on highway after nightfall, it was no defense, where vehicle had been permitted to operate without effective lights, that vehicle would have been back to owner's place of business before dark but for mishap on road.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Instruction permitting jury to find partners liable if truck driver negligently failed to carry lights held harmless, where manager of partnership instructed driver to proceed without lights.

In action against partnership for damages caused by leaving unlighted truck in highway, instruction that negligent failure of driver to carry lights rendered partnership liable, if proximate cause of damage, held harmless, where managing partner had expressly ordered driver to proceed without them.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1078(1) — Unargued points will not be considered.

Points presented on appeal, without argument, are not entitled to consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by C. J. Willis and another against M. Y. Kellam, Jr., and Mollie M. Shropshire, copartners doing business under the name of the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company, E. R. Kellam, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs against the defendants named, and they appeal. Affirmed.

William Guthrie and McNabb & Hodge, all of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. This is an action for damages occasioned by the collision of an automobile with a motor truck. The automobile was proceeding along the right side of a highway and was occupied by plaintiffs. The truck was standing at the same side of the thoroughfare, partially on and partially off the traveled portion of the road, and was faced in the direction in which the automobile was proceeding. The events out of which the litigation grows occurred in the evening, when the darkness of night was fully on. The truck was wholly without lights. As plaintiffs went toward the vehicle they did not see it, the circumstance being partially owing to the fact that the headlights of a car approaching from the opposite direction blinded them to every other object. Then occurred the collision out of which the action arises.

At the trial the action was dismissed as to the defendants Parsons J. Shropshire and Doig. The jury rendered a verdict against the defendants M. Y. Kellam, Jr., Mollie M. Shropshire, and E. R. Kellam. The two of these defendants who are first named were copartners doing business under the name of San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company. E. R. Kellam was the manager of the copartnership. An appeal is prosecuted by each of the defendants against whom the verdict was pronounced.

[1, 2] The first point made by appellants is that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. They contend that the defendant Doig was the owner of the truck, and that he was an independent contractor in the performance of certain services for the copartners, in a part of which service the vehicle was engaged at the time when the collision occurred. There was evidence, undoubtedly, which supported this theory, but under the rules of law applying in a court of review when there is a conflict of evidence, we are to determine only whether there is a substantial showing made by the record upon which the jury justly might have reached a conclusion different from that for which appellants contend.

The record discloses testimony from which the jury properly might have found that the following were the facts: The copartnership was in constant need of trucks for the transport of the products of its operations, the general nature of which products sufficiently appears from the name under which the copartnership did business. Without dispute, it also appears that the truck with which the car of plaintiffs collided was purchased by E. R. Kellam, the manager of the copartnership, that, as owner, he caused it to be registered in his name with the state authorities, and that it remained so registered at the time of the collision. The truck was bought on the installment plan and all payments upon it, including an initial payment of several hundred dollars, were made from the funds of the copartnership. There was undisputed testimony, however, that all these payments were charged to Doig on the books of the copartnership as an offset against amounts due to him from time to time for hauling. When the truck was first purchased it was operated by a son of defendant Doig, and pending this state of affairs that defendant left San Bernardino, in and about which city the copartnership conducted its operations, expecting to be absent therefrom for a period of two months. The collision between the car of respondents and the truck occurred before his return. Some time after his departure, and some time before the accident, defendant Doig's son ceased to operate the truck, whereupon E. R. Kellam wrote Doig suggesting that a new driver be obtained. He said in the letter:

"I am sure I can manage the truck without bothering you to come home."

Doig answered, in substance, that it was all right to put a man on the truck and put it to work. Soon after this the defendant Blodgett saw an advertisement in a newspaper, inserted by an employment agency, to the effect that a truck driver was wanted. He applied to the agency for the position and was sent to the office of the copartnership. He there first saw Mrs. Shropshire, one of the appellants, who was actively concerned in the business of the copartnership, and stated to her that he was an applicant for the position as truck driver. She turned him over to E. R. Kellam. The latter made inquiry as to Blodgett's qualifications and engaged him. He told Blodgett he would pay him a certain amount per day for his services. Blodgett was told that he was to drive the truck which is in question here, and the next morning after he was employed, apparently, he "fixed up" the body of the vehicle, which was in need of repairs. He was "set to work" by E. R. Kellam in the performance of this task. The truck, from the date of its purchase up to the time of the mishap between it and the car of respondents, and during the time when both Doig's son and Blodgett were its drivers, was never used for any purpose except to do hauling for the copartnership. All the hauling done by Blodgett was at the direction of E. R. Kellam or some one else connected with the copartnership, and there was an understanding with Doig whereby the operations of the truck were to be conducted in that manner. The oil and gasoline Blodgett used on the truck he was told by E. R. Kellam to get. These items were charged to Doig on the books of the copartnership. An arrangement existed between Doig and E. R. Kellam, whereby the latter was to keep the truck in repair and to make charges for repairs against Doig on the copartnership books. At the time of Blodgett's employment the vehicle had neither headlights nor a tail light. At the direction of E. R. Kellam he got the headlights "fixed" so they would burn, but immediately one of them broke and would not light again. This made the remaining one useless as one would not burn unless both were connected up. Just before he took the truck out on the trip during which, on the return, the vehicle was run into by the car of respondents, Blodgett told E. R. Kellam about the condition of the headlights and called his attention to the absence of a tail light, and Kellam said to take the load which was to be hauled on the trip, "and we would get along that day all right without fixing it up." The trip was therefore undertaken with a useless single headlight and without a tail light. Something went wrong with the truck on the return from the trip, and Blodgett stopped by the roadside to make repairs. It was then that the car of respondents collided with the truck. E. R. Kellam was practically in entire control of the business of the copartnership. M. Y. Kellam, Jr., one of the partners, a brother of E. R. Kellam, did not reside in San Bernardino and was at the copartnership place of business at rare intervals. Mrs. Shropshire, the other partner, testified:

"I attend to the office in Mr. [E. R.] Kellam's absence and work directly under him. * * * I do exactly as he says."

[3] With this record we think it unnecessary to decide whether Doig was an independent contractor. Granting that he was, appellants had such control over the truck and over its driver as to render them legally responsible for the damages flowing from the accident from which the litigation arises. The fact that the vehicle was registered with the authorities in the name of E. R. Kellam is a material circumstance. Under the law, the right so to register a motor vehicle is, and was at the time of the events here set down, conferred upon "any person * * * having the lawful use or control, or the right to the use or control, of a vehicle, under a lease or otherwise, for a period of ten or more successive days." Stats. 1919, p. 194; Deering. Gen. Laws, 1923, Act 5128, § 16. Whatever the understanding between Doig and Kellam as to the effect of the registration of the truck in the name of the latter, he certainly held himself out to the world as the one who used or controlled the use of the vehicle. There are also authorities which bear upon the general situation disclosed by the record. Where one exercises such a control over the men employed or the mechanism used by an independent contractor with him as did the appealing defendants here, he is liable for damages arising from such exercise of control, the doctrine of proximate cause, of course, being satisfied. Cotter v. Lindgren, 106 Cal. 602, 39 P. 950, 46 Am. St. Rep. 255; Majors v. Connor, 162 Cal. 131, 121 P. 371; Connell v. Harris, 23 Cal. App. 537, 138 P. 949; Burns v. Jackson, 53 Cal. App. 345, 200 P. 80.

[4] It is contended that the copartners cannot be liable for the reason that E. R. Kellam, in controlling the operation of the truck, was acting as the agent or representative of Doig. This contention is, to our minds, untenable. The record plainly shows that whatever Kellam did he did as the manager of the copartnership and in furtherance of its interests. Particularly, it is to be noted that his acts, or some of them, disregarding for the moment the fact that he was the manager of the business of his codefendant partners, were brought home to the copartnership by the charges which were made in its books against Doig. This is true as to the charges made for payments on the purchase price of the truck, for the expense of repairs made upon it under the direction of E. R. Kellam, and for oil and gasoline supplied to it under his orders. It would appear, however, that the fact that he was manager and sole directing head of the copartnership business is enough. We think the three appealing defendants were joint tortfeasors.

[5] It is insisted on behalf of E. R. Kellam that the absence of lights on the truck could have done no harm in the daytime, and that the evidence shows that the vehicle would have been back to the place of business of the copartnership before nightfall, but for some mishap on the road. This point is untenable. To uphold it would be to afford too ready a means for the escape from liability of any owner of a motor vehicle who held the fond but delusive hope that his car would reach home before night after some journey, when its lack of lights caused damage to one who came into collision with it as a penalty for being out too late himself.

[6] Appellants take exception to an instruction to the jury. It contained language to the effect that:

"If you believe from the evidence * * * that the truck was * * * used and operated by defendants and did not carry [a] lighted red lamp or lantern, * * * and if you believe that the injuries sustained by the plaintiffs were directly and proximately caused by the failure and negligence of the defendants or any of them to so carry * * * such lighted red lamp or lantern, then I instruct you that the failure of the defendants so operating said truck to carry said lighted red lamp or lantern constituted negligence on the part of said defendants and said defendants are liable," etc.

Appellants say that this was "a flat instruction that if defendant Blodgett failed to carry lights on the truck that the appellants must be held liable for damages." If the instruction is so to be construed, it could not have been harmful to appellants, for the failure to carry lights was owing solely, under the uncontradicted evidence, to the order of E. R. Kellam, issued to Blodgett, that the truck proceed on its trip without them. Also, the jury was told in another instruction, after the meaning of the term negligence had been stated to its members, that if it was found that respondents should recover, a judgment might be rendered against "the defendants, or such of said defendants as in your opinion were guilty of negligence, as defined in these instructions."

[7] Appellants make one or two points which they do not argue. Points so presented are not entitled to consideration. Other contentions are made which are answered by what we have already said. Some points are also urged which are not of sufficient merit to require a separate consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

82 Cal. App. 530

Ex parte McKEAN. (Cr. 1375.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 28, 1927.

1. Motions ⇐56(1)—All court orders need not be entered at length in minutes (Code Civ. Proc. § 664).

Neither Constitution nor statutes require that all orders of court be entered at length in minutes to be effective; Code Civ. Proc. § 664, referring only to judgments.

2. Divorce ⇐303(3)—Order modifying order fixing minors' custody held not a judgment required to be filed and entered (Civ. Code, §§ 131, 138; Code Civ. Proc. § 664).

Order as to custody of divorced parents' minor children, and modifying order authorized by Civ. Code, § 138, held not judgments, required to be filed and entered by Code Civ. Proc. § 664, though original order was incorporated in interlocutory divorce judgment, authorized by Civ. Code, § 131; remedy being to ask trial court to set aside service of order and preserve status quo until perfection of appeal.

3. Habeas corpus $\hookrightarrow$ 30(1)—Order awarding minors' custody to strangers cannot be attacked by habeas corpus for absence of finding that parents were unfit.

Order modifying order as to custody of minor children of divorced parents by awarding temporary custody to others cannot be attacked in habeas corpus proceeding for failure to find that parents were not fit and proper persons.

4. Habeas corpus $\hookrightarrow$ 29—Persons obtaining minors' custody by execution of order before mother perfected appeal therefrom had lawful custody when habeas corpus writ was issued (Code Civ. Proc. § 946).

Persons obtaining custody of divorced parents' minor children by execution of order modifying original order as to custody before perfection of appeal from modifying order by mother, who failed to ask court to set aside and withhold execution of such order until perfection of appeal, had lawful custody when writ of habeas corpus was issued at her instance; appeal merely staying all further proceedings in court below, under Code Civ. Proc. § 946.

Application by Catherine J. McKean for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the custody of her minor children. Writ discharged.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, for petitioner.

James F. Brennan, of San Francisco (Jerome Bayer, of San Francisco, and John H. Thomsen, of Monterey, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The petitioner, as the mother of three minor children, has applied for a writ of habeas corpus. In her petition she alleges that formerly she and C. J. McKean were husband and wife; that there were born as the issue of the marriage the three minor children above mentioned; that on the 7th day of May, 1926, the petitioner commenced an action for divorce; that the husband was duly served with summons and complaint, but that he did not appear and that his default was entered; that thereafter the divorce action came on for trial and an interlocutory decree was entered on the 20th day of May, 1926; that the interlocutory decree was in the ordinary form and recited that the divorce was granted on the ground of the defendant's extreme cruelty, and it also contained an order awarding the custody of the minors to the mother and granting her $100 per month for the care, support, maintenance, and education of the children; that thereafter, on the 27th day of July, 1926, C. J. McKean appeared in the divorce action and applied for a modification of the decree, and, among other things, asked that he be awarded the custody of the minors, and that the order contained in the interlocutory decree granting the custody of the minors to the mother and granting her maintenance be stricken out of the decree; that the application so made by C. J. McKean came on for hearing and a hearing was duly had and the application was submitted; that on the 27th day of November, 1926, the petitioner's attorney wrote to the trial judge a letter, stating that if the ruling made on the husband's application should be granted that the wife intended to promptly appeal, and requested a reasonable stay that the appeal might be perfected; that on the 29th day of November, 1926, the petitioner's attorney appeared in open court and repeated his request for a stay of execution for the period of 48 hours, and the trial judge stated that said stay of proceedings would be granted; that in the afternoon of November 29, 1926, the trial judge made an order modifying the order contained in the interlocutory decree, which modifying order revoked the order theretofore made awarding the custody of the minors to the mother and granting her maintenance in the sum of $100, and in lieu of such order a new order was made by the terms of which the custody of said minor children was awarded for the period of 6 months to William E. Reddy and Mary E. Reddy, his wife, and $75 per month was set as the cost of the care and maintenance of said minors; that said modifying order further provided that the petitioner should forthwith deliver the children to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, to be by him delivered to the Reddys; that said modifying order contained no recital to the effect that the parents, or either of them, were unfit or improper persons to have the custody of said minors; that during the morning of November 30, 1926, the said sheriff executed said modifying order by taking the possession of the minor children and delivering them into the custody of the Reddys, and that said children have since said day been in the custody and control of the Reddys; that the first notice the petitioner or her attorney had of the making of the said modifying order was when the sheriff appeared for the purpose of executing said order; and that the said modifying order was neither filed nor entered by the clerk until the morning of December 1, 1926, after it had been so served as above mentioned, and at that time that the wife promptly appealed from said order. Thereupon the petitioner prays that the custody of said minors be restored to her pending her appeal. The petition was presented to one of the Justices of this court on December 7, 1926, and said Justice directed that a writ issue made returnable before the court on January 10, 1927, at 10 a. m., "and in the meantime let the three children named in the petition be returned to the custody of the petitioner." A return has been filed by the terms of which it is recited that, under the order dated November 30, 1926, the Reddys received the custody of the minors and retained such custody until the ——— day of December, 1926, when they were served with the said order so made by one of the Justices of this court, and that thereupon, to wit, the ——— day of December, 1926, they delivered the custody of said minors to the petitioner.

[1, 2] The petitioner claims that the modifying order was ineffectual for any purpose until it had been filed and entered. Code Civ. Proc. § 664. That section does not refer to orders, but refers to judgments. There is no provision either in the Constitution or the statutes which requires all orders of a court to be entered at length in its minutes in order that they may be effective. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 99 Cal. 511, 514, 34 P. 109; 18 Cal. Jur. 663, § 16. When the trial court was disposing of the divorce action, it had the power to enter an interlocutory judgment of divorce. Civ. Code, § 131. It also had power to make an order concerning the custody and maintenance of the minors. Civ. Code, § 138. The fact that it incorporated the order in its interlocutory judgment did not convert the thing which the statute denominates an order into a judgment. Therefore the trial court had authority, and in a proper case it was its duty to modify or vacate the same. Civ. Code, § 138. The action taken by the trial court in modifying the original order, under the same line of reasoning, was an order and not a judgment. No statute requires that such an original order, or that such a modifying order, shall be filed or entered before it becomes effective as an order regarding the custody of minors. It follows that there was no invalidity in the act of executing the modifying order before it had been filed or entered. If the trial court neglected to stay its order, or if for any reason the wife was dissatisfied with the modifying order and desired to appeal therefrom, her clear remedy was to appear in the trial court and make her representation to the trial court and ask that the service of the order should be set aside and that all matters should remain in statu quo until she could perfect her appeal.

[3] The petitioner further claims that the order was defective because it did not contain a finding that the parents were not fit and proper persons to have the custody of the minors. That attack may not properly be made in a habeas corpus proceeding. In re Lundberg, 143 Cal. 402, 411, 77 P. 156.

[4] For the foregoing reasons, we reach the conclusion that the Reddys had the lawful custody of the children at the time this writ was issued. This is true because the Reddys had obtained possession of the children by virtue of the execution of the said modifying order before the appeal from it was perfected. Having learned that the modifying order was thus executed before it was filed, petitioner might have asked the trial court to set aside and withhold the execution of the modifying order until she could have had time to perfect her appeal. In that case, after the appeal had been perfected, no further action of the trial court could have been taken pending the appeal looking to the enforcement of the modifying order. Code Civ. Proc. § 946; Ex parte Queirolo, 119 Cal. 635, 51 P. 956. But instead of doing so, she appealed at once. The appeal did not have the effect of undoing what had already been done under the modifying order before the time the appeal was perfected. Ewing v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 72; Thalheim v. Camp Phosphate Co., 48 Fla. 190, 37 So. 523, 5 Ann. Cas. 784; Grayson v. Harris, 102 Miss. 57, 58 So. 775, 59 So. 1, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1219, 1223. We have been referred to no provisions of law, and know of none, stating that an appeal from an order has any further or additional effect upon the force of the order appealed from than is provided in Code of Civil Procedure, section 946, where it is said, "it stays all further proceedings in the court below."

The argument suggests itself that the modifying order is a continuing one and that for this court to leave the children in the custody of the Reddys now after the appeal from the order has been perfected is substantially and in effect a continuing execution or "further proceeding," within the meaning of that term as used in Code of Civil Procedure, § 946. But upon this point we are unable to distinguish the facts in this case from the ruling referred to by respondent in De Lemos v. Siddall, 143 Cal. 313, 76 P. 1115. There the mother of the child delivered it into the possession of its father in open court immediately upon the pronouncement by the court of a modifying order giving its custody to the father. Shortly afterwards she perfected an appeal from the order. On appeal, it was her contention that the effect of her appeal was to set at naught the order appealed from pending the appeal, but the Supreme Court held that the order had been "executed," and that the effect of the appeal was not to undo what had already been done, but that it merely held matters in the same condition as they existed at the time the appeal was perfected.

There is authority to the effect that petitioner might apply to the court having jurisdiction of the appeal for an appropriate order fixing the custody of the children pending the appeal. 3 C. J. 1323, § 1450; Stricker v. Wakeman, 13 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 85; Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 166, 169; Tilley v. Washburn, 91 Wis. 105, 64 N. W. 312. This is a question, however, that should not be decided by this court, but by the court having jurisdiction of the appeal.

This writ was issued by one of the Justices of this court, and at the time of issuing the same he made an order directing the custody of the children to be in the mother, petitioner, pending the judgment upon this writ. This order was made under the authority of Penal Code, § 1494. The terms of that section permit such an order to be made "until judgment is given on the return."

The judgment of this court upon the return of the writ is that the Reddys are entitled to the custody of the children not by force of the order of this court, but by force of the modifying order made by the trial court. The effect of giving this judgment upon this writ is to terminate the force and effect of the temporary order made at the time the writ was issued, and it is therefore ordered that the children be restored to the possession of the Reddys, and that the writ be discharged.

LAPIQUE v. KELLEY et al. (Civ. 4690.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 28, 1927.

1. Appeal and error §933(1)—Where record did not show disposition of motion for new trial, presumption was that, if made, it was denied three months after notice of judgment March 13, 1923 (Code Civ. Proc. § 660, as amended by St. 1923, p. 233).

Where notice of entry of judgment was given March 13, 1923, and record did not show any direct order of the court either granting or denying motion for new trial, the presumption was that the motion for new trial, if made, was denied on June 13, 1923; change made by St. 1923, p. 233, in Code Civ. Proc. § 660, not becoming effective until 90 days after May 18, 1923.

2. Appeal and error §925(3)—Charges of misconduct of attorneys, not explained nor argued, will be presumed without support in record.

Where appellant neither explains nor argues his charges of misconduct of the attorneys for appellees, appellate court will presume that charges are not sustained by the record.

3. Pleading §194(1)—Failure to properly verify answer cannot be raised by demurrer.

Plaintiff cannot raise objection that answer is not properly verified by means of demurrer.

4. Appeal and error §232(1½)—Plaintiff, who did not raise question of improper verification in motion to strike cross-complaint and answer, could not claim denial of motion was error because of improper verification.

Where plaintiff did not assert that verification of answer and cross-complaint was void because made by attorney and in part on information and belief when he made his motion to strike cross-complaint and answer, he might not assert that denial of the motion was error on the ground that the verification was void because made by attorney and in part on information and belief.

5. Quieting title §30(1)—Church intervening and claiming title held properly permitted to file cross-complaint in action against trustees to quiet title.

In action to quiet title against trustees of church, court properly permitted church claiming title to property to intervene and file a cross-complaint, where it appeared that its claim of title was of such a nature that a complete determination of the controversy could not well be had without the church being a party.

6. Trial §6(1)—Statute requiring five days' notice of trial is mandatory, and court may not shorten it (Code Civ. Proc. § 594).

Code Civ. Proc. § 594, providing that where issue is one of fact, proof must be had that the adverse party had five days' notice of trial, is mandatory, and the court has no authority to shorten the notice.

7. Trial §6(1)—Plaintiff, not having appeared at trial, might insist on five days' notice thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 594).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 594, providing for five days' notice of trial, where plaintiff did not appear at the trial, he might insist that he was entitled to five days' notice thereof.

8. Time §9(4)—Where notice of trial was mailed to plaintiff February 10 and case brought to trial February 16, requisite five days' notice was given (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 594, 1013).

Code Civ. Proc. § 594, providing that where the issue is one of fact adverse party must be given five days' notice of trial, was complied with where notice was mailed, under section 1012, on February 10 and the case was brought to trial on February 16; section 1013 providing that service is complete at the time of the deposit in the mails.

9. Appeal and error §1071(6)—Plaintiff, seeking to quiet title, but introducing no evidence, might not complain of failure to make findings on his claim or of affirmative decree for cross-complainant.

Where plaintiff in action to quiet title offered no evidence, and there was no evidence to show that he had any title or interest, he might not complain that the court made no findings of facts concerning his claim of title nor of the decree quieting title in cross-complainant, since findings on his claim of title must necessarily have been adverse to him.

10. Appeal and error §1071(6)—One having burden of proof on issue and offering no evidence is not prejudiced by failure to find on issue, since findings must be adverse.

Since a party may not complain of failure to make findings which must be adverse to him, party is not prejudiced by failure to make findings on issue as to which he has the burden of proof and on which he offers no evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action to quiet title brought by Clarence E. Gorthy and wife against E. L. Kelley and others, in which the Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, intervened and filed a cross-complaint. John Lapique was substituted as plaintiff. From a judgment quieting title in said church, John Lapique appeals. Affirmed.

John Lapique, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

Clyde Bishop and M. B. Wellington, both of Santa Ana, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This action was commenced by complaint filed on the 9th day of October, 1922, by Clarence E. Gorthy and his wife, Blenda Gorthy, against the defendants Kelley and McGuire and others. The Gorthys alleged that they were at that time the owners in fee simple of a described tract of 15 acres of land in Orange county, and they sought to obtain a decree quieting their title against any and all adverse claims of the defendants. The complaint alleged that the defendants Kelley and McGuire were "trustees of the Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" (hereinafter called the church), and prayed that the court by its decree restrain Kelley and McGuire, as such trustees, from asserting or claiming any interest in the described real property. This complaint was signed by "C. E. Gorthy, in Pro. Persona," and verified by affidavit of C. E. Gorthy.

On the 2d day of January, 1923, pursuant to an order permitting the said church to intervene in the action, the church filed an answer and a cross-complaint. The answer alleged that the church is a religious corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the state of Iowa, which corporation has duly filed certified copies of its articles of incorporation in the required offices in the state of California and in the county of Orange, that defendant Kelley formerly was and defendant McGuire now is the presiding bishop of said corporation, and had heretofore held the title of record of the above-described real property as trustee for said church, and denied that the plaintiffs or either of them, have or had at any time any interest in the said land as owner in fee or otherwise. The church by its cross-complaint set forth facts showing, first, conveyance of the land on June 27, 1899, to Kelley as bishop and trustee; that by deed of date October 24, 1916, duly recorded at that time, Kelley transferred his trusteeship in said property to McGuire; that on June 8, 1920, McGuire transferred all of his interest in the property to the defendant and cross-complainant, the said church, which said deed was duly recorded in the recorder's office of Orange county on December 16, 1922; that the said church is the owner and at all times has been the person for whose benefit the property was owned and held.

On January 12, 1923, the defendants Kelley and McGuire filed their answer denying the alleged ownership of the land by plaintiffs Gorthy, and alleging their former ownership as trustees for the church and their subsequent conveyance of the property, whereby the legal title became vested in the church by virtue of said grant deed of date June 8, 1920.

On January 16, 1923, the cross-defendants Gorthy filed a demurrer "to the cross-complaint and answer," applying partly to the cross-complaint and partly to the answer of the church.

On the 9th day of February, 1923, an answer to cross-complaint was filed by the Gorthys and Lapique, which answer begins as follows: "Come now cross-defendants Clarence E. Gorthy and Blenda Gorthy, his wife, and John Lapique, heretofore substituted as a successor in interest," etc. This answer, after denying ownership in the cross-complainants, alleged that "these cross-defendants admit that they claim an estate, title, and interest in and to said real property and all thereof, and allege that their interest is the ownership in fee of all of said described property by grant and by conveyance, and by adverse possession and prescription."
